Miller To Head New CYNIC Staff

YOUR ENERGETIC NEW EDITOR-IN-CHIEF is Laurence Miller, a junior from Chester Hill, Massachusetts. Larry, a member of Alpha Epsilon Pi, where he is Scholarship Chairman, was Managing Editor of the CYNIC this past year and has previously served as Chief re-writer and a member of the production staff. He is also president of Student Guides and has been active in Band and Freshman Orientation. His major is psychology and he hopes to go on to study medicine.

Larry Miller

Larry brings to this job plenty of enthusiasm and he wants the help of the whole student body. Everyone on campus has opinions that deserve an opportunity for expression and Larry wants to provide this opportunity.

Richard Berk

READY TO LEND AN ABLE HAND as Assistant Editor is Richard Berk. A member of Tau Epsilon Phi, he writes the fraternity newspaper, the Kapa-mount and has also contributed to the CYNIC. Rich is active in Psychi and serves on TEP's executive board. He is a sophomore from New York and is majoring in psychology.

The Kake Walk Disposition Committee will soon be meeting to discuss and decide upon the apportionment of the Kake Walk funds. If you desire any money for your organization, please have your petition in the IFC mailbox in the Director of Student Activities office, by Wednesday, March 31, 1965. These petitions for funds will be discussed by the committee at a later date.

Laura Schildhaus

MOVING UP A STEP from assistant managing editor to Managing Editor is Laura Schildhaus from Washington, D.C. Laura is a member of Alpha Epsilon Phi, which she represents on Panhellenic Council, and is also active in the PEP Club. She is a member of the sophomore class and is majoring in psychology.

TAKING OVER LAURA'S POSITION as Assistant Managing Editor is Thomas Block. Tom has previously been a member of the CYNIC production staff and has written for the paper. A junior from New York, he is a member of Alpha Epsilon Phi. He is in the College of Arts and Sciences, concentrating in business.

READY TO SERVE YOU as Co-News and Feature Editor is Carolyn Seigel, a sophomore from New York. Carolyn is a member of Alpha Epsilon Phi, secretary to Judiciary of WSGA, and a member of Sophomore Aides. She has worked on the CYNIC since her freshman year and, with a major in English, hopes for a career in the field of journalism.

SERVING WITH CAROLYN as Co-News and Feature Editor is David St. John, president of the new Student Law Association. Dave is active in Choir, Lane Series Committee and Madrigal Singers. He has acted as post-graduate advisor to the Spaulding High School Sentenel and here at the University he has contributed to the CYNIC. A sophomore from Barre, Dave has administrative experience from a Naval position. He is presently studying economics and political science and hopes to go on to Law School.

Vt. Conference Speakers

The executive committee of Vermont Conference has released the names of its three headlining speakers who will be on campus March 23, 24, and 25 to deliver lectures on the topic "Genesis Revisited: The Scientific, Social, and Ethical Implications of Man-Made Men." Those who have accepted bids to speak are Professor George Wald, Professor George P. Grant, and Professor Paul Weiss.

Dr. Wald presently teaches Biology at Harvard. He is an expert on Biochemical Evolution and is well-known for his lectures and publications on the origins of life.

Dr. Grant teaches religion and philosophy at McMaster University in Ontario, Canada, and formerly studied at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar.

Dr. Weiss, former president of the Metaphysics Society of America, is a doctor of philosophy at Yale.

Conference itself will follow the pattern of previous years. The three invited speakers will deliver their respective lectures on March 23, 24, and 25, one per evening. Each lecture will be approximately one hour in length and will be followed by open-ended panel discussions over coffee. The lectures will be held in Ira Allen Chapel, and the discussions will take place in the Waterman Dining Hall. The panels will consist of faculty members, members of the community, and other interested and interesting persons in varied fields of endeavor.

This year's Vermont Conference Committee has been hard at work since the beginning of first semester to bring about a Conference which will hopefully more than fulfill its purpose and philosophy. Plans are in the making to stimulate campus-wide interest in this year's topic and to more fully prepare students and faculty alike to take an active part in the potentially exciting discussions.

The topic itself, "Genesis Revisited: The Scientific, Social, and Ethical Implications of Man-Made Men," has some very broad ramifications. It is an open issue involving many questions and problems. It is hoped that this issue will attract interest from all areas, since there is virtually no department on campus that could not potentially be affected. Senior Dan Newcomb, chairman of this year's Conference, says concerning the goals of this particular Conference, "In this year's Conference, we've attempted to more nearly reach the goal of university-wide interest and participation by selecting a topic which transcends the boundaries of any one particular discipline."

One of the innovations of Conference this year is the scheduling of a "pre-Conference conference" in which faculty members who will take part in the actual Conference discussions will speak on the topic and then open the topic to discussion from the floor.

Students may familiarize themselves with the issue by reading some of the many books available on the topic. A special Conference display will be set up in Bailey Library soon after Kake Walk which will include the latest books on the subject, some of them by the speakers who will participate in the actual Conference. Also planned is a paperback book display in the University Book Store during the week immediately preceding Vermont Conference.

Campus Leaders Elected

WSGA

The installation of the new officers of the Women's Student Government Association was held Thursday night, March 4 in Billings Student Center. Debbie Whitaker was installed as President, and Sybil Smith as Chairman of Judiciary.

The other officers include Claire Berka - Vice President, Barbara Austin - House Chairman, Sue Gibbons - Assistant House Chairman, Kathy Doherty - Secretary, Alice Ostrove - Treasurer, and Theo Russell - Fire Captain.

Also, Karen Jensen - Social Chairman, Cynthia Clark - Scholarship Chairman, and Carolyn Seigel - Secretary to Judiciary.

The following girls were appointed to Judiciary: Ronnie Jaffe, Cynthia Jeffrey, Mary Cornish, and Mary McGoll.

These girls will serve on W.S.G.A. Council until March 1966, guiding the women students of the University to lead a happier and more active life here.

A tea followed the installation ceremony, which was attended by Head Residents, House Fellows, House Presidents, and various other invited guests.

IFC

Ross Fuller, IFC President

By Kris Nie

Recently, the Interfraternity Panhellenic Councils had their election of officers. Heading the I.F.C. is President Ross Fuller, Sigma Alpha Epsilon; three Vice Presidents, Fred Brown, Delta Psi, John Tobin, Sigma Phi; Carl Lisman, Phi Sigma Delta; Treasurer, Amos George Eaton, Phi Delta Theta; and Chairman of Kake Walk Dispositions and Advisor to Sophomore Representative Skip Meacham, Alpha Tau Omega.

The purpose of I.F.C. is to foster a spirit of cooperation and good will among all fraternities at UVM. It is composed of the 16 presidents from each fraternity plus 4 or 5 elected representatives. This year's council is working for more interfraternity activities rather than competitive activities. Also, the council will work towards bringing about closer relations with the administration and faculty in promoting the general interests of the University as an educational institution.

PANHEL

Heading the Panhellenic Council is President Anne Dietrich - Alpha Delta Pi; assisting her are Vice President Tina Henn - Gamma Phi Beta; Secretary Joanne Dare - Kappa Alpha Theta; Treasurer Noreen Tierney - Alpha Chi Omega. The council is composed of two representatives a junior and a senior from each of the Seven sororities on campus. The main purpose of Panhell is to maintain intersorority relationships to cooperate with the administration and faculty in their effort to maintain high social and scholastic standards through the University. This year's council is undertaking an extensive re-evaluation of this past semester's rushing program and is working for better relations between I.F.C. and Panhell. Also, the council is adopting a new philanthropic program with sights on the local scene.

Winners will be notified by phone as soon as possible after the votes have been tabulated.

NEW CYNIC STAFF

Gordon Josephson

YOUR NEW SPORTS EDITOR is Gordon Josephson, a member of Tau Epsilon Phi where he is house manager. Gordi has been a sports writer for the CYNIC and he performed a similar job in high school for two years. A sophomore from New York, he has participated in Intramural sports and is active in the PEP Club. He is a Mathematics major and intends to go on to Medical school.

John Senning

READY TO HANDLE THE BUSINESS end is John Senning, your Business Manager. John, a brother of Phi Sigma Delta, has previously served the CYNIC as Advertising Manager and has worked on the advertising staff. A junior, he is Assistant Publicity Director for Lane Series and he is majoring in political science, hoping to go on into Law or business.

Ira Kotler

YOUR ADVERTISING MANAGER THIS YEAR is Ira Kotler, a sophomore from New York. Ira is a member of Phi Sigma Delta and is active in Gold Key, Intramural sports and has previously served the CYNIC as Sports Editor. He is a zoology major and plans to study dentistry.

Ken Klonsky

Credit: Bergemann

BROTHER OF YOUR RETIRING EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Kenneth Klonsky will serve the CYNIC as Activities Coordinator. Ken, a sophomore from New York, has previously written many news and feature articles for your paper. He is also a member of the John Dewey Club, enjoys writing and is majoring in English.

Geri Scharff

THE CYNIC'S NEW STUDENT ADVISOR is Geri Scharff, a junior from Massachusetts. Geri worked as reporter her freshman year and in news and features last year. She is also active in Lane Series Committee, Student Guides, WSGA, where she serves as Junior representative to Joint Council, and Vermont Conference Committee. Geri is an English major and plans to teach in high school.

CONTINUING AS CIRCULATION MANAGER is Paul Jellinek, a junior who has done such a fine job this past year.

Famed Biologist To Speak At Conference

The scientific implications of man-made men will be the topic of a lecture given at the 1965 Vermont Conference by a distinguished Harvard biology professor, Dr. George Wald.

George Wald was born in New York City on November 18, 1906, and was educated in the New York Public Schools. He received the degree of Bachelor of Science from Washington Square College of New York University in 1927, having majored in zoology; and then took graduate work in zoology at Columbia University, from which he received the Ph.D. in 1932. During this graduate period he was a student and research assistant of Professor Selig Hecht.

On receiving the Ph. D. he was awarded a National Research Council Fellowship in Biology (1932-34). This was begun in the laboratory of Otto Warburg in Berlin-Dahlem and it was there that Dr. Wald first identified vitamin A in the retina. Vitamin A had just been isolated in the laboratory of Professor Paul Katter in Zurich, and Dr. Wald went to Katter's laboratory to complete the identification. That done, he spent a period in the laboratory of Otto Meyerhof, at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute in Heidelberg. The second year of the fellowship was spent in the laboratory of the Department of Physiology at the University of Chicago.

Dr. Wald came to Harvard in the fall of 1934 as a tutor in Biochemical Sciences and has been there ever since; as Instructor and Tutor in Biology (1935-39); Faculty Instructor (1939-44); Associate Professor (1944-48); and Professor of Biology (1948-). He was visiting Professor of Biochemistry at the University of California for the summer term, 1956.

In 1939 Dr. Wald received the Eli Lilly Award for "Fundamental Research in Biochemistry" from the American Chemical Society. In 1952 he toured the Southwest as a National Sigma Xi lecturer. In 1953 he received the Lasker Award of the American Public Health Association "in recognition of his outstanding discoveries in biochemistry with special reference to the changes associated with vision and the function of vitamin A." In 1955 he was awarded the Proctor Medal of the Association for Research in Ophthalmology. In 1959 he was awarded the Rumford Medal by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Wald was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 1950 and to the American Philosophical Society in 1958. He is a Fellow also of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in Boston. He is a Fellow of the Optical Society of America.

In 1957 Dr. Wald received the honorary degree of M.D. from the University of Ferne; in 1958 the honorary degree of D. Sci. from Yale University; and in 1962 the honorary degree of D. Sci. from Wesleyan University.

Dr. Wald is a member of the American Society of Biological Chemists; the Optical Society of America; the Association for Research in Ophthalmology; Sigma Xi; the American Chemical Society, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Wald has recently been delivering a series of lectures closely concerned with the Conference topic, which are entitled, "The Origins of Life," "The Origins of Death," and "The Human Condition."

"Genesis Revisited: The Scientific, Social, and Ethical Implications of Man-Made Men" will be presented to the University of Vermont campus March 23, 24, and 25, and Vermont Conference looks forward with enthusiasm to hearing some exciting new theories and opinions from the distinguished Dr. George Wald.

Providing power for every environment . . .

provides challenge for virtually every technical talent at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft

Being a technically trained man . . . we assume you are looking ahead to a career of exciting growth and accomplishment and that you are looking for a company possessing these same qualities.

If our assumption is correct, we would like you to take a close look at us. For this Company, while solving the problems of the day, thrives on a sort of creative restlessness which anticipates the challenges of tomorrow. And more important to you, it recognizes its engineers and scientists as the master key to its present success and future progress.

From a solid foundation of basic and applied research, our Company has gained a firm foothold in the land, sea, air, and space programs that are helping to shape our nation's future. Our engineers and scientists are exploring ever-broadening avenues of energy conversion for every environment. Should you join them, you'll be assigned early responsibility . . . to apply your engineering talents to such areas as advanced gas turbines . . . rocket engines . . . fuel cells and nuclear power.

Such trail-blazing projects command the best of varied talent. That's why you'll find at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft men with college training as diverse as their responsibilities. You will also find that opportunities for professional growth are further enhanced by our corporation-financed Graduate Education Program. Your degree? It can be a B.S., M.S. or Ph.D. in: MECHANICAL • AERONAUTICAL • ELECTRICAL • CHEMICAL and NUCLEAR ENGINEERING • PHYSICS • CHEMISTRY • METALLURGY • CERAMICS • MATHEMATICS • ENGINEERING SCIENCE or APPLIED MECHANICS.

For further information concerning a career with Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, consult your college placement officer—or write to Mr. William L. Stoner, Engineering Department, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, East Hartford 8, Connecticut.

BEYOND THE SPEED OF SOUND, discusses the behavior of supersonic air flow, explains that problems in designing supersonic aircraft are more straightforward than in transonic planes, and shows how problems of supersonic flight are being overcome through advanced design techniques. Design solutions include swept-back or delta platforms. Vertical take-off is another possibility for the future. Models of tomorrow's aircraft - very different from the subsonic airliners of today - are also shown.

From The Editor's Desk...

By quickly glancing over the front page of this week's issue, we can see that this is the time of the year for campus organization elections.

It is always a little disheartening, however, to see such a paucity of candidates and a general lack of interest or enthusiasm for such events. Perhaps the reason for so few candidates lies in the fact that there are so few members of many of our campus organizations. Why is this the case? Are the organizations useless? Are they too time-consuming? Generally, the answer is no. Why then?

When confronted with this question of lack of participation, most students say that their studies consume too much of their time and that they cannot afford the time. We feel that they cannot afford not to make the time. Granted, our main purpose at this institution is to acquire more knowledge in the direction of our chosen fields, but UVM is more, or, at least, should be more. We all went off to college to "experience" life and its circumstances. Studying, alone, will not bring this about. Everyone here should be interested in at least one campus activity besides whom he or she is dating this weekend. Learn to work and to play with others; it can bring much satisfaction. Studying never relieved anyone's tensions; outside interests can take one's mind off his work and one's head out of his books long enough to witness satisfaction and relaxation.

An activity is what you as an individual make of it. A small amount of time or a great deal of time can be spent in an organization. It is all up to you.

Interest is also up to you. It involves no time and should take very little effort. If, for some reason you cannot be active in some organization or you cannot run for an office, at least be interested in who does. Give of yourself a little.

Those who are running for office have given. We wish to take this opportunity to wish these candidates the best of luck and to congratulate winners and losers alike on their interest and participation. Perhaps with more participants, there will be fewer "front row" critics.

Letters To The Editor Badger Gives Thanks

To the Editor:

I would like to take the occasion of another Student Association election to publicly express my thanks to all the students who made it possible for me to become S.A. president a year ago. But perhaps more important, however, is the personal appreciation which I should extend to the members of the student body, faculty and administration who have given their valuable time in working for and with the Student Association Senate over the past year, for it can be truly said that the second or two involved in casting a ballot loses all meaning if not supported by the hour or two in work or discussion.

Student government, like most aspects of the university, can be likened to an iceberg which has 1/9 of its surface in full view and the rest submerged. I have been fortunate in having the opportunity to view some of the complexities of that submerged portion and to lend my own small effort to understanding its operations. I only regret that more students do not have the same opportunity.

I, perhaps, more than most students, have been sensitive to the cries of "rubber stampism" in student government and apathy on the part of the general student body. I have come to regard these as lacking an understanding of student problems and, in many cases, showing a naivety about the nature of students in general. One must guard against proclaiming simple solutions to problems in the university. Criticism of a situation does not bring with it a solution which only hard work and thought can develop, and it is far easier to wave the banner of apathy in the face of a lack of interest than to realize that leadership and understanding of the problem involved are the requisites for successful programs.

Philosophic discussions aside, it has been an interesting and educational opportunity to serve as president of the Student Association, and I wish to thank again those who made it possible with their votes and work.

Italian Posters Are Stolen

To the Editor:

Some time ago Dr. Anthony Molho, feeling that UVM students might be interested in the Medieval Studies Institutes at Spoleto, put two very handsome and valuable Italian posters up on the bulletin board immediately opposite 242 Waterman. Quite a few students seem to have been interested enough to have a look. Others, unfortunately, were interested enough to steal them, and they disappeared very shortly after they had been put on display. One hopes that it is not necessary for the History Department, or any of its members, to deliver a sermon about such an outrage to the student body of UVM, so I shall not prolong this letter by doing so. Suffice it to say that Dr. Molho, who owns the posters personally, and the entire Department on his behalf would very much like to see them returned at once.

Sincerely,
William Metcalfe

THE SAGA OF BUDDY DE SUIVRE, BOY PLEDGE

When Buddy de Suiivre was very young he was always looked up to by his friends. "See Buddy jump up and click his heels three times," his friends would say.

When Buddy was a teen-ager in high school, he was always swooned over. "See Buddy make out," all the girls would say.

A few years ago Buddy was a freshman at the University of Vermont. He was cool, calm and collected. His thin torso always drew the co-eds' sighs. His Thunderbird was fully equipped with power steering, windows, brakes and flask. Then Buddy achieved the ultimate success in life, he was offered a bid to join Beta Sigma fraternity, the best frat-house on campus.

BETA SIGMA

Within one month of "pledging-up" Buddy was the leader of his pledge class and everyone knew that someday he would be "Grand-Exalted Leader" of his house. Buddy could do anything - he was on the tennis team, he could sing and, "Boy, could he dance (as his loyal followers would proclaim)."

One day Buddy was told (as a pledge project) to spy on the suspicious new Dean of Men (D. NALOR REZTAP) and report to his "task-master" anything that our pledge-hero could discover.

"We don't like the looks of this guy," said the stern task-master, "he looks pro-independent. If we don't watch it, he'll catch us with our 'trou' down. Go to it lad, in your hands lies the future of the fraternity system as we know it," said the assigner acidly.

PHASE ONE

Buddy, always conscientious, always alert, first began his work-detail (as these projects were called) by setting out to "bug" the office of the sly Dean ("Bugging," for those of you who are ignorant of contemporary law-enforcing techniques, is the delicate planting of microphones throughout a room, or rooms, in order to discover what the unsuspecting victim is doing. The practice is now widely used, as can be witnessed in various dormitories or in Billings Center). In the wee small hours of the cool Vermont morning, Buddy delicately pried open the administrator's window, careful not to attack the ever-watching security guards. He climbed into the room and laid the "mikes" in every corner. He placed them everywhere, in the radiator, in the telephone, under the carpet and through the wood. Buddy left no "mike" uncovered - he was complete, thorough.

By early afternoon the pleasing pledge knew all the heavy movements of the demeaning dean. Buddy knew all the decisions of the administration - "Robert Smith could not be permitted to move into an apartment, Harry Jones was put on social probation for smoking marijuana on the fourth floor of Coolidge Dormitory while intoxicated," etc., etc. Buddy, keeping an eager ear open, recorded everything. You can well imagine the pledge's excitement when he ran to his task-master.

"See, see all that I have gotten for you," said Buddy as he showed his overlord the Dean's activities.

"Fool, fool," said the elder, more sophisticated brother, as he perused the text, "there is nothing here on fraternities. You have failed Suiivre," said the fratter as he severely beat the young pledge across the head and body. "We know that Dean is up to something and its up to you to discover what he's doing. What does he do with his nights, Suiivre?"

"I don't know," said the bloody fool.

"Well find out," ordered the task-master.

PHASE TWO

Pledging Buddy carefully planned his next maneuver. He hid himself, with many provisions, in the Dean's home bathroom and listened to the Dean's evening activities. For two nights Buddy discovered nothing pertinent to his mission, when, all of a sudden, he overheard Dean Reztap say to his wife, "Dear, tomorrow I think I'll close down all the fraternity houses on campus." Buddy (as you may well imagine) was shocked. "This evil man must be stopped," thought Buddy loudly. He reached into his bag of provisions, pulled out a time bomb, and quickly and efficiently set it for X minus 15 minutes.

"Now," thought Buddy, "I'd better get out of here or else I shall be destroyed by the evil Dean." Unfortunately for Buddy, his lengthy stay on the Dean's toilet seat left him wedged into that object, quite tightly, and he soon discovered that he could not get out.

"Damn it," said our angered hero as he kicked the time-bomb out of his reach in a fit of rage, "now what shall I do."

Buddy was in quite a pickle. He could call the Dean and save his own life, but that would doom the fraternity system as Buddy knew it. As events soon showed (fifteen minutes later, to be exact) Buddy was quite loyal, as he was blown to bits along with the evil Dean.

PHASE OUT

The legend of Buddy de Suiivre is well known today to the pledges at Beta Sigma.

"He died so that we may be," they are told. "Those who were fortunate enough to know him remember him fondly." His words are quoted widely and each week, at the brothers meeting, a prayer is said in his behalf.

This week marks the anniversary of Buddy's martyrdom. Tonight a secret ritual is being performed; the pledges of Beta Sigma shall file up to the attic of their frat house in total darkness, say prayers and kiss the now-decayed Buddy de Suiivre.

NOTICE

THE ARTS

By Ken Klonsky

The debut of Elizabeth Ingoldsby at UVM's Arena Theatre was nothing short of a rousing success. This fine young actress dominated the stage in Federico Garcia Lorca's shattering drama, Yerma.

Yerma is the story of a barren woman in early Spanish society. In this society there is an overwhelming necessity for a woman to bear children. In fact, there is scarcely a line in the play that does not remind us of Yerma's desperate situation. Therefore, one can understand the anguish and bewilderment of the protagonist.

The supporting cast included David Storti as the husband who must bear the shame for his barren wife. Subjected to intolerable pressure and ridicule from the community, he reacts by scorning Yerma. Mr. Storti turned in his usual well-acted and well-spoken performance.

The remainder of the cast gave immeasurable help to the play. Particular mention must be made of Marilyn Deutsch. As the Pagan Crone, an old woman with a great many offspring, Miss Deutsch made a lasting impression on the standing-room-only audience. Emil Di Donato turned in a touching performance as Victor and Lynn Householder fared well as Maria.

Ernest A. Cabrera did a superb job as director. He kept the action absorbing at all times. The sets by John Dancos and the costumes by Mary Steele were tasteful in their simplicity.

The great work of Lorca, translated by James Graham-Lujan and Richard L. O'Connell was done justice to by the University Players. Although the play must lose a great deal in the translation, the poignance and simplicity of the English dialogue is typically Spanish. The understandable dialogue, the reality of the characters, and the intense performance of Elizabeth Ingoldsby served to make Yerma a unique and engrossing theatre experience.

Wednesday, March 10-17 - Flynn Theatre - 36 Hours - Engrossing drama with James Garner.

March 12-16 - State Theatre - Seduced and Abandoned - Raunchy, award-winning Italian Comedy.

Wed. 10 - Sat. 13 - Strong Theatre - Goodbye Charlie, Tony Curtis and Debbie Reynolds - Occasionally funny but typical of late Hollywood comedies.

Saturday, March 13 - Interstate High School Wind Ensemble (all day clinic and evening performance).

Constructive Criticism Is Good

By David St. John

Criticism is the making of judgments as to merits and faults. Constructive criticism is judging merits and faults for the purpose of improvement. Destructive criticism is based upon prejudice which is forming an opinion without knowledge, thought or reason.

Constructive criticism and effective argumentation are the most powerful methods we have of shaping the world we live in. On the other hand criticism can hurt people if they are narrow-minded or if the criticism falls out of the constructive class. Be assured, there is no need for destructive criticism, but there is a definite need for constructive criticism.

According to our constitution, I am free to criticize that which

I would change and so is everyone else. Let us remember and respect this right but most important let's keep our criticism constructive. The school newspaper respects the rights of people to express themselves in accordance with the freedom of speech. Let us never condemn the newspaper for printing the article of a biased author in accordance with the freedom of the press. Bear in mind that if an article seems opinionated, an author is probably risking appearing biased to stimulate thought and action. Also, his opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the staff. Remember that all printed material is not gospel and that we are in college to form intelligent reading habits.

Dean's List Members Of '66 Get Dinner Invitations

Dean's List members of the Class of 1966 have been invited to a dinner in their honor by the University's committee on special honors.

The dinner, set for Monday (Mar. 15) in the Faculty Dining Room on the third floor of Waterman, is frankly aimed at interesting more well qualified students in joining the special honors program, which was featured in a recent issue of Glamour Magazine.

The University's honors program is believed to be the oldest honors program in the United States.

Members of the committee on special honors, other faculty members and students currently engaged in the program will also attend. Dr. Herbert C. McArthur, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, will be the speaker.

This year's dinner marks a departure from past programs, according to Dr. Brady Gilleland, chairman of the special honors committee. Previously, he said, Dean's List juniors have been invited to a coffee hour, and invitations have gone only to Dean's List students in the Colleges of Arts and Sciences and Education and Nursing. This year, Dean's List students from all the University's academic divisions have been invited, and the informal coffee hour of the past has given way to a dinner.

Under the special honors program, students select and carry out a project in a field of their special interest working in close consultation with an advisor.

Kappa Sigma Gives Thanks...

To the Editor:

We would like to express our sincere thanks to the 1965 Kake Walk directors for our selection as winner of the Lechnyr Trophy. We would also like to express appreciation to the sororities, fraternities and friends who sent telegrams and to the many students who supported Rusty Brink for Kake Walk King. We also thank Ira Kotler for the kind words on the sports page of the CYNIC.

It really meant a great deal after sitting on the sidelines in 1964.

Sincerely,
The Brothers and Pledges of Kappa Sig.

...Defends Itself

To the Editor:

There are certain factors which the CYNIC has blurred in their usual manner.

1) You criticize the judges and judging system of Kake Walk without examining the obvious facts.

After research I found the following facts to be pertinent. The judging this year was the product of extensive work done by a committee of students and faculty to produce a satisfactory system. Two clinics were held to inform the judges of the proper technique of walking. Only three of the eight judges this year were new.

During the walking one house did an excellent job of kicking (as rated by one of our alumni who is an expert in the field.) But it should be noted that this house only totaled forty kick steps. Furthermore, the high kicks were from what is known as a rest step position (not a walking step). In contrast, Kappa Sigma uses 140 kick steps from a walking position. Also during this time the walking is at a double time pace. Were the judges wrong?

2) The Kappa Sigma Fraternity submitted a letter to the CYNIC before the deadline of the week of March first. It was an effort to thank all the wonderful sororities, fraternities, and friends for their support and congratulatory notes. This letter was never printed in our "student" newspaper, the CYNIC.

3) A fraternity manages to move from a low point (dorm x) to the coveted position of recipient of the Lechnyr Trophy, but unlike previous Kake Walks, the CYNIC failed to comment on their efforts. It should be noted that the trite comments of the CYNIC when we were off campus far exceeded the positive credit given to the house which won the King, walking both nights, and the Lechnyr Trophy.

What can one say? Is it a problem of color (jackets that is), religion, or do we need the editor of the CYNIC in our house?

Thank you for this brief moment on the stage.

McCune Praised

To the Editor:

You are to be congratulated on your good fortune in having Dr. Shannon McCune, former provost of the University of Massachusetts, named as president of UVM.

Students will appreciate particularly his friendliness and willingness to converse with them as people, the more so if they can offer matches to relight his ever-present pipe, and/or know something of Korean geography.

Sincerely,
Patricia Watson, UMass '61

Fraternity Row

By Peter Bristol, Lambda Iota

What relationship does the Interfraternity Council have with the fraternities? First, What is the Interfraternity Council? It is a body of men, gathered together to discuss the liabilities and assets of the fraternity system. They discuss, propose, and act for the advancement of fraternities in the college and in the urban society. This body, composed of the sixteen Fraternity Presidents, a presiding officer, three vice-presidents, and a treasurer, creates the atmosphere in which fraternities must exist. Second, what is a fraternity? It is a community of individuals expressing a democratic society. The word community is used here because the individuals are always striving to better themselves by bettering the surroundings in which they are living. As a freshman entering a fraternity, one is acknowledged by citizens of the community, the brothers of the fraternity, for his individuality as a person and the ideas he believes in, as well as his ability to project himself as a person, able to associate with the members of the society. Being a separate entity as a society, the fraternity has a definite form of democratic government; a government run by the existing group of persons. With such a variety of ways of having a society, a vast difference among fraternities occurs. How are each of these entities brought together toward a common benefit? The Interfraternity Council Through several functions organized by the Interfraternity Council, but run by the fraternities themselves - Greek Week, Rushing System, Kake Walk, Community Service Day, aiding in Muscular Dystrophy Drives, Lecture Series, and Interfraternity Athletic Programs - the fraternities unite. The Interfraternity Council aids the fraternities for the advancement of the whole community.

Who Needs Thoreau?

By Lynn Householder

Seriously ask any student what this school need to do to improve itself, and he will suggest, though perhaps not right off the bat, raising faculty salaries and attracting better men -- including even a few well-known scholars. This, of course, is up to the administration, and about all we can do is indicate our feeling of the primary importance of the teachers. However, we may perhaps assist in improving particular professors' teaching methods (or lack thereof). If a painless, non-personal way of suggesting changes and of indicating what already is effective could be used, teachers might have a better idea of where to aim. The planned professor evaluation can be this method. Detailed questionnaires, including background on the student answering, could, for example, show a teacher when he is allowing common cheating and thus causing a lack of respect for the class and its assignments.

One so called improvement is the reflecting pool. I'm all for beauty, but frankly I think well landscaped grounds with lots of trees and flowers (and benches) would be more beautiful. The money could be used for minor improvements: e.g. experimental materials in sciences -- things that will not be part of the new labs that are four years off anyway; or a few additions to Billings Student Center in the line of recreational facilities; or the attraction of a few name speakers.

Further notes on Billings: anybody can study anywhere he wishes as long as he doesn't hinder anyone using facilities as they were intended, just as anyone can do as he wishes in those places intended for study (Bailey) as long as he doesn't disturb those using the facilities for study. Billings has two television sets, which I have seen in use three times: once in the daytime -- World Series; once on a Saturday night, when the building was solely inhabited by a meager number of males; and once on a week-night, very softly and over protest. It could also be a much more inviting after date stop than the Redstone lounges for non-frat men. There is no reason why one lounge couldn't be arranged to engender a more romantic atmosphere.

Billings is the place for the intellectual stimulation of chess and the excitement of poker -- for matches. And more magazines and newspapers conveniently placed might keep students a little more aware of the outside world. Along the same line, why not a lending library? Although the University obviously does not want us to waste money on James Bond or such non-literary books, we might as well waste our time reading them as napping or watching the passing stream. At least we won't forget how it's done.

A final question to throw out: are senior boys distinctly more mature than the rest of us, or is the apartment permission just a concession to allow them to get used to the freedom while still under the University's guiding thumb?

Book Awards Are Presented

The sixteenth annual National Book Awards were presented to the authors of books in five categories chosen by panels of judges as the most distinguished books written by American citizens and published in the United States in 1964.

The books honored were: "The Far Field" by the late Theodore Roethke; "God and Golem, Inc." by the late Norbert Wiener; "Herzog" by Saul Bellow; "The Life of Lenin" by Louis Fischer; and "The Oysters of Locmariaquer" by Eleanor Clark.

At a ceremony in the Grand Ballroom of the New York Hilton Hotel, the $1,000 prizes were presented and brief acceptance speeches made. Stanley J. Kunitz, Pulitzer-prize poet and editor accepted for Mr. Roethke; Jerome Wiesner, a member of the President's Science Advisory Committee, accepted for Mr. Wiener. The award ceremonies were attended by more than one thousand authors, critics, librarians, and book industry people from every part of the United States.

The National Book Awards were established in 1950 and are presented annually for books which five panels of judges consider the most distinguished books of the previous year. The awards are administered by the National Book Committee through an Awards Advisory Committee. The prizes are donated by three book industry associations: The American Book Publishers Council, the American Booksellers Association and the Book Manufacturers Institute.

Donald H. McGannon, president of the Westinghouse Broadcasting Company (Group W) and chairman of the National Book Committee, presided over the ceremony.

Prof Lectures On French Canadian Problem

By Mary L. Fay

In conjunction with the new Canadian Lecture Series on March 6, the Romance language department presented Dr. Jean Darbelnet of Paris, who spoke on the French language in Canada.

Dr. Darbelnet, currently a visiting professor at Montreal, explained that this controversial topic is a political issue in Canada related to the continuation of the Canadian nation itself. The linguistic groups involved are the French and Anglo-Canadians as well as the Neo-Canadians who comprise 26% of the Canadian nation and who, native language, have adopted English for communication.

It was pointed out that there are three major factors contributing to the seriousness of this problem. These have their basis in urbanization and provincialism combined with the attitude prevalent among the English-Canadians.

Quebec, the province which has kept the closest cultural ties with France, is the focus of the concern for keeping Canada French.

In regard to the possibility of Quebec's actual separation from Canada, Dr. Darbelnet indicated that the question of whether Quebec can economically survive without its ties to the rest of the country must be considered. Public opinion here is split, but many intellectuals seem to advocate drastic measures, which would mean separation.

Dr. Darbelnet admitted a certain pessimism regarding the prospect of Frenchifying the country. Although he feels that it is impossible to reintroduce French as the language written and spoken in every aspect of communication, he suggested that certain measures could be taken to assert French as the first language with recourse to English for the sake of convenience only.

In conclusion, Dr. Darbelnet said that with strong determination in the right direction, coupled with active cooperation, the Canadian problem with the French language could be remedied.

With a 6-2 win-loss record, two members of the Lawrence Debate Club received a plaque for fifth place at the Navy Invitational Debate Tournament held February 26-27.

Norman Snow, Burlington, and Carmen Wessner, Manchester, debated three rounds on the negative side of the topic and five rounds on the affirmative. The national intercollegiate debate topic this year is Resolved: that the federal government should establish a national program of public work for the unemployed.

The team won over West Virginia, Emory University (Ga.), St. John University (N.Y.), Duke, King's College, and Wake Forest College. They dropped decisions to Northern Illinois and Georgia.

After the first four rounds, the teams were power-matched. In other words, winners debated winners and losers debated losers.

In two tournaments March 5 and 6, six members of the Lawrence Debate Club won twelve debates and lost six, winning three plaques.

Participating in the four-man novice division of the Boston University Debate Tournament, the affirmative team of Bob Bullard, Barré, and Robin Frost, Haydenville, Massachusetts, won all six rounds of debate. Teams from Boston University, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Eastern Nazarene, Colgate, University of Massachusetts, and Northeastern were defeated by the two debaters.

A plaque for best speaker in the division was presented to Robin Frost and Bullard was awarded second place. Tabulation by the team revealed that Bullard had 138 points out of a possible 180 and Frost had 137 which would reverse their awards. Either way, the affirmative team placed first and second with forty-eight debaters in contention for these positions.

The negative team, George

Shapiro of New York City, and Ruth Frost, West Hempsted, N.Y., had a 3-3 record. They won over Oswego, Eastern Nazarene, and Union (forfeit) and lost to Iona, Temple, and St. Anselm's.

The combined 9-3 record of the two teams plus high point totals resulted in an award for second place four-man unit.

At Notre Dame, Dave Webster, Burlington, and Dave Waite, Springfield, debated three rounds on the affirmative and three on the negative side of the topic. Results of the tournament were three wins and three losses. As affirmative debaters, Webster and Waite won decisions over Dayton and Iowa State and lost to Northern Illinois. Results of their negative debates were losses to Albion and George Washington and a victory over University of Illinois, Urbana.

Fashion Show Given At Fleming

By Judi Weintraub

The Fleming Museum was the site of a fashion show put on by the Home Arts Group of Vermont, on Monday, March 8 at 7:45 P.M. The show was sponsored by the National Cotton Council of America and McCalls Patterns and was narrated by the woman chosen as Mrs. Vermont. The Purpose of the show was to give an idea of the present trends in color, cotton fabrics, and silhouettes; it was a preview of spring fashions.

The designs followed many of the lines of European fashions - notably the Dior look of France and the Chelsea look of England. The clothes, ranging from casual to semi-formal were all handmade and showed a variety of different cottons. All the fashions were extremely well presented and the comments on them were very favorable.

Most of the clothes designed were for the woman of the house, but there were some children's fashions which stole the show. One especially cute outfit was a Raggedy Ann and Andy costume, modeled by two adorable children. A main purpose of the show was to encourage more women to sew at home. Seeing the fashions modeled was enough to give many the incentive.

An intermission break was provided by the Champlain Echoes and a women's barber shop quartette. They deserve praise, especially the latter.

On the whole the show seemed to provide an enjoyable evening to all those who attended.

Blood Drive

The Ethan Allen Rifles, senior military honorary society, will sponsor its annual spring blood drive on March 17 and 18 in the North Lounge at Billings Center. The local chapter of the American Red Cross from the Mansfield Avenue Blood Center is supervising the drawing which has a goal of 300 pints.

All members of the university and people from the Burlington area are urged to donate a pint of blood in this drive. Under the special Vermont - New Hampshire blood program, any person who becomes a donor in this area will receive credit in the blood bank which may be claimed in the future by the donor no matter where he is in the United States or Canada. The donor will receive free blood upon notifying the blood center where he originally gave blood. Thus, giving blood rewards a person in two ways; the knowledge of having possibly saved a life and the security of having blood "on deposit" in time of emergency.

Although walk-in donors will be gladly accepted on the 17th-18th, it is hoped that many people who intend to give blood will fill out the special appointment cards available in Billings Center (S.A. Office) and the Military Science Building. Donors under the age of 21 are reminded that the law requires that they present a yellow permission slip signed by a parent or guardian when they give blood. These slips are also available at the two stations in Billings Center and the Military Science Building along with a list of general instructions. As a special incentive to students enrolled in the Military Science program, 5 merits will be rewarded for each pint of blood donated.

The Ethan Allen Rifles expect that student and faculty support for the drive will easily push the donations above the 300 pint goal as has been the case in past blood drives.

Actors Go To Boston

Professor Edward J. Feldner led a troupe of seven actors and actresses to Boston, KW weekend, in response to an honored invitation from the New England Theatre Conference to perform a new, one-act play. The group included, besides Professor Feldner, his wife, Mary, Ernest Cabrera, Susan Greene, Ivan Karp, Carolyn Jerard and Miles Wortman. The play, "The Waiting Room" by Robert Lehan, was awarded a first prize in the New England Theatre Conference's 1964 One-Act Play Contest, and was performed Saturday, March 5, at the Bostonian Theatre, in front of a near-capacity house. Also performed was another prize-winner, "Golden Days," given by the University of Connecticut. After the reading, a critique was given by Elliot Norton, Drama Critic for the Boston Record-American Sunday Advertiser.

The Play is the story of a group of aged blind people in a sanitarium who constantly maintain false hopes. They all believe that they shall someday regain their sight and they all believe and trust in an attendant who is exploiting them. "The play," in the words of the author, "deals with the rational, the need for delusion and the repression of truth that is sometimes required to keep open an avenue of hope."

The group of experienced thespians who responded to the invitation sacrificed their Kake Walk weekend in order to perform this honor accorded the University. Professor Feldner is chairman of the College and University Division of New England Theatre Conference.

Scope Presents Boursier And World Government

By Margaret Crane

Have you ever considered the concept of world government? How could such an institution be possible? What type of governmental system could be applied? What would be its aims? Last week SCOPE presented Mr. Claude Boursier, a charter member of the Vermont Chapter of the United World Federalists, who spoke on the concept of world government. Mr. Boursier is also the chairman of the French Department at Middlebury College.

The speaker stated first, that his reason for promoting the concept of world government is his belief in the brotherhood of mankind. He pointed out however, that his reason is reinforced today by that threat of man's self destruction through atomic war.

The answer to solving some of the world's problems such as aggression, international war, and general international problems, Mr. Boursier proposed, is a federal international government. Such an institution would mean loss of certain rights of the governments of the world, but the main right that they would lose would be that of waging war. In this federal system the importance of the individual world citizen would be stressed. The individual citizens would be elected and would legislate; they would impose taxes on the individual (not on the country in which he lives); the individual would be responsible to the laws. To illustrate this last point, Mr. Boursier gave the example that, if a country were to wage war on another country, thus breaking the international law, the leaders of the country who led their people to war would be punished, not the entire population of the country.

This international federation would work, then, on a system quite similar to that of the United States. It would be a group of independent states, which of their own free will joined together to pursue a common aim. The nations of the world would have to give up some of their freedoms but, in return, they would have security.

Mr. Boursier ended the lecture by answering several questions from the audience.

ROTC Gives Assignments

The Department of the Army has released branch assignments for University of Vermont ROTC graduates to be commissioned reserve officers upon graduation this May.

Of the 83 reserve lieutenants-to-be, two-thirds received their first choice of branch; the remainder were almost equally divided between second and third choices.

The branch which will receive the largest number of UVM graduates is the artillery. Twenty-six Cadets (31% of the total) will shortly don the "crossed cannons and missile" insignia of the only branch that has been continuously represented in the Army since 1775. All Cadets who signified an interest in the Artillery were accepted by that branch.

The next largest group of graduates will join the infantry. Fifteen percent of the Cadets were accepted; twelve percent having noted infantry as their first choice.

Of Cadets to be commissioned in the Regular Army upon graduation, 83% will be commissioned in their first-choice branch.

Next to be released by DA are initial assignment instructions which should be received here around April 1.

Fellowships

Applications for the Corse Fellowship of $1200 will be accepted by Dean W.H. Macmillan, Graduate College, through April 15.

This fellowship, established through the bequest of Frederick M. Corse, '88, is awarded annually to a graduate of UVM holding the Bachelor of Arts degree, to a senior or to a recent graduate with the proper qualifications.

Applicants, either young men or young women, must have majored in English, or a classical language, or two of the European languages, and must be preparing for a career in college or university teaching. Exceptional ability, character, and capability for independent thought are considerations.

Be Alert!

Secundo speaks next Friday.

A NEW PROGRAM OF INTEREST TO MEN

It isn't easy to become an officer in the United States Army. Only the best young men are selected. The training and course of study are demanding.

But if you can qualify—and you should find out if you can—you will receive training which will put you a step ahead of other college graduates. Army ROTC training will give you experience that most college graduates do not get—in leading and managing other men, in organizational techniques, in self-discipline and in speaking on your feet. This kind of experience will pay off in everything you do the rest of your life.

Army ROTC has a new program designed specifically for outstanding men who already have two years of college, and plan to continue their college work. During your junior and senior years in this program, you will receive $40 per month. Want to find out more about the program? Simply send in the coupon below, or see the Professor of Military Science if you are now attending an ROTC college. There's no obligation—except the one you owe to yourself.

He's finding it at Western Electric

When the University of Nevada awarded John Lauritzen his B.S.E.E. in 1961, it was only the first big step in the learning program he envisions for himself. This led him to Western Electric. For WE agrees that ever-increasing knowledge is essential to the development of its engineers—and is helping John in furthering his education.

John attended one of Western Electric's three Graduate Engineering Training Centers and graduated with honors. Now, through the Company-paid Tuition Refund Plan, John is working toward his Master's in Industrial Management at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. He is currently a planning engineer developing test equipment for the Bell System's revolutionary electronic telephone switching system.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, both educationally and professionally, we should talk. Western Electric's vast communications job as manufacturing unit of the Bell System provides many opportunities for fast-moving careers for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, as well as for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. Closing out the season with a win over the Cadets of Norwich University, the University of Vermont swim team can proudly look back on a fine season in which they compiled a 7-2 record. Under the excellent coaching of Lester Leggett, whose program of physical conditioning is the backbone of his squad, the Cats have come up with wins over Plattsburgh, George Williams, Loyola, Union, Connecticut and twice over Norwich while losing only to Massachusetts and McGill. "The majority of UVM's swimmers," explains Mr. Leggett, "come from the schools physical education classes. Since the school doesn't offer any swimming scholarships, our major attraction is our fine facilities and a training program which offers even an average athlete the opportunity to really make a success of himself in this sport."

This year's team captain was senior Jay Gloetzner, who, Coach Leggett praised "has been a good captain and a fine inspiration to the team." Jay generally participates in the 100 and 200 yard freestyle. Also receiving a great deal of the credit for the team's success are Tommy Mills and Pete Gross. Tom, who usually swims the 50 or 100 yard freestyle, recently set a pool record by swimming the 100 yards in 52.8 seconds. An individual medley and butterfly specialist, Pete can be cited for the comeback of the year. After having a recent appendectomy he has gone on to break a pool record by swimming the 100 yard butterfly in 1:00 flat. Rounding out the remainder of the swim team are Lynn Vicknell, Dave Cheney, Peter Fredricks, Scot Davis, Jim Nixon, Felt Finton, John Linley and Gary Corliss.

Ranging over to the second aspect of swimming, we spotlight Trent Anderson, who is one of the finest divers in New England. Trent gives all the credit for his success to his coach, Denny Lambert. Mr. Lambert also coaches the freshman team.

Swimming is scored on a 5-3-1 point system. In dual meets, each team enters two men and points are awarded accordingly for their finish. In the team medley, 7 points are awarded to the victor and none for the loser. In any meet, the following events are held:

1. 400 yd. medley relay
2. 200 yd. freestyle
3. 50 yd. freestyle
4. 200 yd. individual medley
5. diving
6. 200 yd. butterfly
7. 100 yd. freestyle
8. 200 yd. backstroke
9. 500 yd. freestyle
10. 200 yd. breast stroke
11. 400 yd. freestyle relay

Baseball Begins April 20

UVM Baseball Coach Ralph Lapointe

The University of Vermont baseball fortunes will be decided in a 19-day span this spring.

Because of a new academic calendar which finds final exams beginning on May 10, Vermont must complete its baseball schedule by May 8.

The Catamounts will open their 73rd season of the intercollegiate baseball on April 20 against New Hampshire and in the course of 19 days will play 15 games, closing on May 8 against Rhode Island.

Prior to the start of the regular season, Vermont will make its 54th southern trip with a seven-game swing into the New York City area and Washington, D.C.

Ralph Lapointe, a former Phillie and Cardinal, will be guiding Vermont for his 14th season.

The southern trip: March 28, at Seton Hall; 29, at American University; 30, at George Washington; 31, at Georgetown; April 1, at Columbia; 2, at Long Island U.; 3, at Fairleigh Dickinson.

Regular season: April 20-21, at New Hampshire; 23-24, Massachusetts; 25, at St. Michael's (Vt.); 26, at Middlebury; 28, St. Michael's; 30, at Connecticut; May 1, at Connecticut; 3, Maine; 4, Norwich; 5, Middlebury; 6, at Norwich; 7-8, at Rhode Island.

Vermont Conference Genesis Revisited

Pre-Conference Panel Lays Groundwork

Panel members: Dean McArthur and Professors Torch, Hilberg and Penner.

A fundamental question is raised.

By Douglas MacDougal

The reconciliation of science and technology with philosophy and religion is perhaps one of the most pressing issues of our time, and will be the subject of the Vermont Conference for 1965. A highly interesting preview of this was held Tuesday night in Billings Center, and some of the probable topics of the conference were outlined by Doctors McArthur, Torch, Hilberg, and Penner in a two hour discussion.

Contrary to some widespread speculation, "Genesis Revisited" will not deal with the subject of "test-tube babies," in the manner of Huxley's Brave New World, but will instead deal with the more fundamental issues of the scientific discoveries of the origins of life and their philosophical and religious implications. For example, how would religion be affected if it were discovered that life can originate spontaneously, that is, without the influence of some supernatural being, such as God? Or, what would be the religious and philosophical implications of extending the life of man indefinitely, by replacing worn out organs (which is fast becoming a reality)? Is it ethical? Is it desirable? Where does God fit in?

Introducing some of these questions in the Conference from the scientists' side will be Professor Wald from Harvard Biological Laboratory. Dr. Torch outlined the main aspects of Wald's speech, "The Origin of Life," Tuesday night. To begin with, the theory of the origin of life together with scientific evidence for spontaneous creation (and there is a surprising amount of it) will be discussed. With this, the logical extension is the consideration of life on other planets, and the biological future of Man. The key to life, it seems, is in the Genetic Code: the relation of DNA to the genes of a cell and the method by which DNA forms RNA, and proteins. When the code is finally cracked, the metaphysical questions will inexorably demand answers.

Speaking on the philosophical and religious side of the Conference will be, respectively, Professor Weiss from Yale, and Professor Grant from McMaster University, in Canada. Dr. Hilberg outlined a few of the questions they will probably raise, which reflect the urgency with which some of them must be answered. He, with Dr. Torch, stressed, for example, that the time is near when man's life can be greatly prolonged. Will we someday have to devise means of death? How does one decide when one has lived long enough? Another aspect is the possibility of altering intelligence (this is uncomfortably close to Brave New World). What would be the moral implications of making (or merely being able to make) minds of low intellect for menial jobs? Clearly, a new moral system would be needed.

Dr. Penner gave a clear account of the problem: it seems that the crux of the issue lies in the dichotomy of relating value free science to human values, if this is logically possible. There is a tremendous lag in religion and philosophy, relative to technology, anxiety results and we must find a way to replace the "rug pulled out from under us." The basic premises of right and wrong must be found, for the natural curiosity of men will not lessen.

In light of these comments, then, the 1965 Vermont Conference promises to be extraordinarily interesting.

Peace Corps Week To Begin March 21

By Andrea Gaborsky

The week of March 21-27 will be Peace Corps Week at the University of Vermont. Peace Corps members will be on campus to explain the purpose, programs, and future plans of the Peace Corps, also to accept applications from juniors, seniors, and graduate students. An information center will be set up at Billings.

Anyone wishing to fill out a questionnaire may obtain one from Post Offices or Dr. Jack E. Little, Director of Resident Instruction, Morrill Hall, ext. 256.

An organization or club may have a Peace Corps representative speak and answer questions, by contacting David Mount at 63 Adams St., 4-6002.

Peace Corps training programs begin in nearly every month, but during February and the summer months, the program is especially concentrated. Those who apply during this visit will be notified of their eligibility within two months. Proficiency in a foreign language is not necessary, as the language training is thorough. To apply for a teaching position in the Peace Corps one must hold a college degree; for other positions within the Corps, any person with a high school diploma is welcome. Acceptance in the Peace Corps is for two years, plus three months training.

There are now nearly ten thousand volunteers in forty-six countries and in training.

Twenty-seven Peace Corps members who are presently working under the program or have finished their tour of duty are former students at UVM.

The deadline for all applications on the Billings Center Governing Board is Friday, March 27, 1965.

Governor Hoff

Gov. Hoff To Speak Tuesday At Billings

Governor Philip Hoff will address the University this Tuesday, March 23 at 4:20 P.M. The meeting will take place at Billings Center North Lounge. The Governor will address the student body on the Civil Rights Struggle today. He is talking in a meeting sponsored by the Joint Committee on Human Rights, the group which organized last Sunday's memorial march for Reverend James Reeb. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss current voting legislation in Congress, the Vermont State Resolution on violence in Selma, Alabama, summer work projects in the south, and the Civil Rights picture in general.

The Committee is composed of a cross-section of the campus community: students, both Vermonters and out-of-staters, faculty and clergy. Their concern is not only with the current civil rights struggle but the "all-encompassing problem of human rights." A spokesman for the committee told this reporter that the committee will not dissolve "even if all of its aims in the field of civil rights are obtained," but, rather, will continue to deal with other issues which effect human rights today.

Student, faculty and clergy representatives will also address the ensemble. The meeting will begin promptly at 4:20.

Spring Concert Presents Handel's Messiah Sunday

By Kris Nie

The University Choir and Orchestra will present a spring concert on Sunday, March 21, at four o'clock in the afternoon at Ira Allen Chapel. The program will consist of sections of Parts II and III from Handel's Messiah. Part II will be directed by Mr. Francis Weinrich. Part III will be directed by Mr. James Keene. Featured soloists are: George Bedell, Kathy Hancock, Laureen Coutermarsh, Sharon Dunnell, Bill Bosworth and Brenda Erskine.

The Messiah has a purely Scriptural text, but is the least typical of all Handel's oratorios in that it tells no story; it is a series of contemplations of the Christian idea of redemption. Parts II and III are those divisions which are appropriate to the Easter season going through the life of Christ to his final triumph.

On Campus with Max Schulman

IS EUROPE?

College life is such a busy one, what with learning the Maxixe, attending public executions, and walking our cheetahs, that perforce we find ourselves sometimes neglecting our studies. Therefore this column, normally a vehicle for innocent tomfoolery, will occasionally forego levity to offer a quick survey course in one of the learned disciplines. Today, for an opener, we will discuss Modern European History.

Strictly defined, Modern European History covers the history of Europe from January 1, 1964, to the present. However, in order to provide employment for more teachers, the course has been moved back to the Age of Pericles, or the Renaissance, as it is better known as.

The single most important fact to remember about Modern European History is the emergence of Prussia. As we all know, Prussia was originally called Russia. The "P" was purchased from Persia in 1874 for $24 and Manhattan Island. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.

Persia without a "P" was of course called Ersia. This so embarrassed the natives that they changed the name of the country to Iran. This led to a rash of name changing. Mesopotamia became Iraq, Schleswig-Holstein became Saxe-Coburg, Bosnia-Herzegovina became Cleveland. There was even talk about changing the name of stable old England, but it was forgotten when the little prince escaped from the Tower and invented James Watt. This later became known as the Missouri Compromise.

Only last week he invented the German short-haired pointer.

Meanwhile Johann Gutenberg was quietly inventing the printing press, for which we may all be grateful, believe you me. Why grateful? I'll tell you why. Because without Gutenberg's invention you would not have this newspaper to read and you might never learn that Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades are now available in two varieties—the regular double-edge blade we have all come to know and love, and the new Personna Injector Blade. Users of injector razors have grown morose in recent years, even sullen, and who can blame them? How would you feel if you were denied the speed and comfort and durability and truth and beauty of Personna Stainless Steel shaving? Not very jolly, I'll wager! But injector shavers may now rejoice—indeed all shavers may—for whether you remove your whiskers regularly or injectorly, there is a Personna blade for you—a Personna Stainless Steel Blade which will give you more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other brand you might name. If by chance you don't agree, the makers of Personna will gladly buy you a pack of any brand you think is better.

Yes, friends, we may all be grateful to Johann Gutenberg for inventing the means to spread this great news about Personna. The next time you're in Frankfurt-am-Main, why don't you drop in and say thanks to Mr. Gutenberg? He is elderly—408 years last birthday—but still quite active in his laboratory. Only last week he invented the German short-haired pointer.

But I digress. Returning to Modern European History, let us now examine that ever-popular favorite, France.

France, as we all know, is divided into several Departments. There is the Police Department, the Fire Department, the Gas and Water Department, and the Bureau of Weights and Measures. There is also Madame Pompadour, but that is a dirty story and is taught only to graduate students.

Finally we take up Italy—the newest European nation. Italy did not become a unified state until 1818 when Garibaldi, Cavour, and Victor Emmanuel threw three coins in the Trevi Fountain. This lovely gesture so enchanted all of Europe that Metternich traded Parma to Talleyrand for Mad Ludwig of Bavaria. Then everybody waltzed till dawn and then, tired but happy, they started the Thirty Years War. This later became known as Pitt the Younger.

Space does not permit me to tell you any more about Modern European History. Aren't you glad?

© 1965, Max Schulman

And aren't you glad you tried Personna® Blades? You'll be even gladder when you try the perfect companion to Personna: new Burma Shave®. It soaks rings around any other lather!

Lane Chamber Arts Features Williams As Charles Dickens

By Betty Miller

Emlyn Williams, one of the most distinguished actors and writers of the English-speaking theatre, will appear in his celebrated solo performance as Charles Dickens in Ira Allen Chapel, Sat. evening, March 20, at 8:30 p.m. The program of this last presentation of the Lane Chamber Arts Series, will feature Mr. Williams' acting of scenes from such famous novels and stories of Dickens as "Dombey & Son," "Pickwick Papers," "Christmas Stories," "Little Dorrit," "A Tale of Two Cities," and several more.

Emlyn Williams first appeared before the public as Charles Dickens about ten years ago at the Criterion Theatre in London. At this point the actor had been for some years a star of straight plays, mostly from his own pen, and had never appeared alone. But his Dickens project has been as successful as it was bold. The London engagement, twice extended, was followed by New York, Geneva, Zurich, The Edinburgh, Bath, and Berlin Festivals, a world tour, and a special performance at Drury Lane Theatre, London, before Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother.

As actor, playwright and director-off in all three capacities simultaneously, Emlyn Williams has served the English-speaking theatre for thirty years.

Born in Wales in 1905, the son of a village innkeeper, he spoke only Welsh as a child, learning English at school. This boyhood was freely depicted in his comedy, "The Druid's Rest." At the age of ten he won a scholarship to the local Holywell County School and at seventeen another scholarship, this one in French, to Christ Church, Oxford.

Once at the University, the youngster from the hinterlands discovered the Theatre and realized at once that it was to dominate his life. While he was still an undergraduate, his first play, "Full Moon," was produced at the Oxford Playhouse by J.B. Fagan, who in 1927 gave Williams his first acting job in "And So To Bed" in London.

It was his performance in Edgar Wallace's "On The Spot," and his staging of his own play, "A Murder Has Been Arranged," both in 1930, that really started him on his three-gaited career.

Among Williams' most impressive achievements of recent years are his Angelo in "Measure" and the title role in "Richard III" with the Old Vic.

On Broadway in 1963 Williams starred in "A Man For All Seasons," and in 1964, he played Pope Plus XII in "The Deputy."

This season in more than eighty U.S. and Canadian cities Emlyn Williams will be seen as Charles Dickens, a performance which has been described by critic Walter Kerr, in the N.Y. Herald Tribune as being: "... a combination of personal charm and adroit theatrical mimicry which rivets audience attention to him for two solid hours and which, miraculously, becomes increasingly compelling as it goes along!" Tickets to this "galaxy of remarkable Dickens' characters" may be obtained at the Chapel the night of the performance or in St. Wat.

Annual Military Ball Honors Campus Beauties Tonight

(Credit: Austin, SPS)

The 97th Annual Military Ball will get under way at 8 P.M. Friday night at the Hotel Vermont to the music of Bert Orr and his Band. The highlight of the evening will be the crowning of the Queen to reign over the Ball and to become the honorary commander of the Cadet Brigade for the next year with the rank of Honorary Cadet Colonel. All the girls are winners as far as the Brigade is concerned for four will become Honorary Battalion Commanders and hold a rank of Honorary Lieutenant Colonel.

A Cadet vote selected five finalists from among the 32 candidates chosen by the girl's dorms and sorority houses. The five

The results of the Cadet selection were announced by WCAX-TV last week. The girls appeared then and will appear again on both news shows the night of the ball. The new Queen will be crowned by Miss Barbara Campbell, Current Honorary Cadet Colonel, Queen of the 1964 Military Ball.

The Military Ball, is open to all members of the University family. Dress is formal. Tickets may be purchased at the Military Science Department.

The Ethan Allen Rifles and Pershing Rifles Honor Societies, sponsors of the dance, would like to thank all the girls who entered the contest for their fine cooperation and excellent spirit. There has never been a more dazzling selection of photos in the memory of any of the members of the Cadet Brigade. Thanks is also due WSGA for all its help in selecting the candidates.

The Kake Walk Disposition Committee will soon be meeting to discuss and decide upon the apportionment of the Kake Walk funds. If you desire any money for your organization, please have your petition in the IFC mailbox in the Director of Student Activities office, by Wednesday, March 31, 1965. These petitions for funds will be discussed by the committee at a later date.

Jobs Are Available Now For Interested Students

But you don't know about the new opportunities for student employment! Yes, it's under the College Works Study Program - one of six parts of the Economic Opportunity Act. All kinds of jobs available - everything from animal caretakers to technical assistants needed! And all at current university wage rates. Mr. Paul Sherburne told me all about it and if you read some more you can learn too.

Mr. Sherburne explained that this is a program under which students from lower income families can help meet university expenses through part-time employment. Great, huh? Eligible students can work a maximum of fifteen hours a week while attending classes and a maximum of forty hours a week during vacations.

Jobs available under the College Works Study Program are in addition to those already provided by the university. Mr. Sherburne's greatest problem now is to integrate these new jobs with the old ones. All this means greater opportunities for student employment as well as chances for employers to extend positions.

Mr. Sherburne said there's 250 of you eligible for this program, and you have all been notified of your eligibility. Presently there are sixty students enrolled in the program and 190 jobs are available. Why the poor response? Qualification for the College Works Study Program is determined by the general financial situation of the student's family.

Right now at UVM the departments are increasing the students in this program by getting interested students to fill their positions. Mr. Sherburne said, "Students are hired by the departments and they have the final decision on employment after the eligibility has been determined." He clarified that it is not necessary to be receiving financial aid to be eligible; however, the Financial Aid Office will need information from the financial aid application to determine eligibility. He said, "This office has an open invitation for those students who would like to find out if they qualify to come in and do so." Why not go in - they're friendly!

Mr. Sherburne concluded by saying: "The university has applied for funds under the program for summer employment and will be announcing the program after our application has been approved in Washington. We will be notified prior to May first. . . Incoming freshmen who have been accepted and are enrolled are eligible to work during the summer and upper classmen will be eligible for summer jobs providing they are enrolled as a full-time student in the fall."

Now I told you this was a good opportunity, and it's all for you from Financial Aid.

PRE-LAW ANYONE?

By Eloise Roberts

If you are interested in the law or politics or any other related fields there is now an organization on campus just for you. It's the new Student Law Association which just obtained formal recognition from the Student Association on Wednesday, March 10. The Student Law Association plans to undertake a program that will include a moot court, pertinent films, interesting speakers from many different fields, visits to various courts, and numerous other projects that will contribute to a greater understanding of the Law.

The Association is now in the process of exploring the experiences of similar organizations on other campuses and seeking advice from several different sources. On Monday, March 8, David St. John, President of the Association, made a trip to Boston where he interviewed several individuals including William S. Rubenstein, a senior at Harvard Law School and President of the Student Bar Association who is majoring in corporation law. Rubenstein offered a number of fine suggestions including the establishment of a library of law, school catalogues, visits to prisons (strictly from the observer's standpoint) and participation in debates. He vigorously approved the idea of a moot court saying that a similar program was exceedingly important in the first year of law school at Harvard. There the teams debate cases that have actually been tried or are currently pending. He also recommended the renting of such films as "School Prayer Decision" and "Birth Control and the Law," and explained how they could be obtained.

The Student Law Association plans to consider all these proposals and would welcome any ideas that you might have. We would be glad to see you at the next meeting which will be announced. If you are interested and would like some more information, call Eloise Roberts at Extension 422.

EDITORIAL...

CYNIC PHILOSOPHY

We of The Vermont Cynic do not propose to divorce ourselves from a student body which is both our benefactor and severest critic. We cannot afford to stand aloof as the sovereign dictator of intellectual taste, for we have neither the right nor the qualifications, the inclination nor the ability, to do so.

We are, in fact, the student newspaper and, as such, a function of and spokesman for, the student body. Officially, we exist by the grace of a benevolent Student Association, and our $13,000 allotment comes out of the communal student pocket. Obviously then, we are bound both morally and realistically to serve the students of the University of Vermont. We must answer to them and, bearing the above in mind, it seems that we have much to answer for. As a new editorial board, however, we are at a distinct disadvantage. We do not share the credit for past accomplishments (of which there were many), yet we do assume responsibility for the Cynic's past mistakes (which were also numerous). Before we can formulate any statement of aims and purposes we must, then, answer one plaguing question: How do we dispose of a legacy of mediocrity?

Our choice is basically a simple one. We can, if we so choose, accept this legacy and cater our ambitions to the reality of the situation, remaining the status quo. But this is the easy way out and to take it would be to confirm the suspicions of our numerous critics. We are not satisfied with this and we choose, rather, the difficult alternative of channeling our ideas and enthusiasm into a concerted effort at important.

We are not blind to the obvious; We recognize that there are many things wrong with the Cynic. The new editors are not here to offer apologies for these faults, nor are we foolish enough to offer excuses for what is inexcusable to a student body whose concern is justifiably for results rather than intentions. We see much that is good and much that is bad in the Cynic as it stands now. Our success will consist in our ability to capitalize on the desirable and eliminate the undesirable.

In order to accomplish this, and it is no simple task, we must first overcome certain social ills which pervade our campus and, presumably, other campuses as well. Our sphere is campus life, and outside affairs to the extent that they affect the academic community. The forces that dominate this life take their toll on The Vermont Cynic as well. The dominant force on this campus seems to be inertia -- apathy, if you'll pardon the expression. This is a paradoxical accompaniment of our accelerated academic program. One would expect that an active scholastic atmosphere such as ours would engender an equally vital intellectual atmosphere, one in which students welcome an opportunity to apply what they have learned in the classroom to practical problems -- such as running an effective student newspaper. But intellectual forces seem to work in strange ways here at UVM. Scholastic pressure appear to have a deadening effect on most of us. When the UVM student closes his books he shrinks from any self-imposed challenge that will tax his capacity further. If he were half the intellectual he fancies himself, he would retreat into thought and challenge. It is a curious fact, if a sad one, that where a position on the staff of most college newspapers is a highly prized achievement, membership on the Cynic staff is disdained by many and, for some, even seems to carry a degrading connotation. In short, we know there are interesting people, with stimulating ideas and an ability to express them, on this campus -- we receive critical letters from these people every week. We respect their criticisms and admire their zeal. Yet we feel that their energy has been misdirected. Why may we ask, don't these people work with us rather than against us? We sincerely hope that in the future they will allow us to put their ideas and literary talents to work for The Cynic.

Finally, a criticism which has frequently been leveled at the Cynic is that many of our editorials and columns consist of merely rehashing what is obvious and what has already been said many times. This may be true. Yet it must be noted that while new problems arise each year, the most serious ones (e.g. apathy) are old and sometimes appear to be sorrowfully ingrained into the tradition of the University. We cannot accept this, however, and for this reason, regard-

by Lynn Householder

Those of you who read and disagreed with my suggestions to change Billings from a study to a recreation area may have to prove your point or else just grit your teeth. S.A. passed a recommendation to the Billings Governing Board that sound be on in North and Marsh lounges whenever it is on in the Den.

President Rowell offered opposition reasoning on two others of last week's ideas. The reflecting pool appears to be a major part of a grand design for the campus, and, in any case, the money for it has not yet been found. Concerning the question of (not) developing students' maturity, his point was that the parents, expect the University to be responsible for its students and that therefore the administration must prevent any possibility of abusing opportunity.

To help you in finding outlets for what should be your varied interests, I should mention new organizations: S.A. recognized a History Honor Society several weeks ago and the Student Law Association just one week ago. The first group is, of course, not open to all for membership, whereas the second is, but both hope for discussions and speakers from whom anyone interested can and will profit.

Now that the officer elections are over for the present, I would like to see something added in future elections to give students a basis on which to vote. S.A. meetings are always open "to the public," and senators should be particularly qualified to raise questions and evaluate qualities for S.A. leadership; thus, at one so announced meeting the candidates (at least for president and vice-presidents) could summarize not so much their qualifications as their attitudes and plans. Al Secunda strongly criticized the lack of a thoughtful and questioning attitude among Senators at meetings, as well as the existing casual attitude toward attendance. If we take the trouble to look, we should be able to find students in any living unit for whom S.A. would be both fun and an accepted responsibility. Interest and work are what make any group effective.

"This generation has witnessed hypocrisy as has no other generation. The churches aren't going what they should be doing. There is lie after lie on television. The whole society is run and compounded on lies." - Jeffrey Shero, University of Texas student, March 15, 1965

ET-TU?

This week two events of major importance occurred in the great liberal state of Vermont. The first event took place thirty miles from our protected sanctuary, in Montpelier. The great Vermont legislature voted down a resolution condemning racial discrimination because, in the words of one politician "This resolution is ill advised." The second event, striking closer to home, occurred this past Sunday. Responding to the death of Boston Unitarian minister James Reeb, a "student-faculty" group organized a march in tribute to the deceased clergyman. The march was organized Friday and by Saturday, word was spread around campus to all students. The response was predictable: Out of the two hundred people who marched, thirty were students. The two incidents were incredible in that they blatantly illustrated the sickness which surrounds this state and this university. In Louisville Kentucky, 3,500 people marched; in Asbury Park, New Jersey, 400; in New York, 20,000; in Boston 30,000; in Washington, 15,000; in San Francisco, 6,000; and in Dallas Texas (yes, even sick-Dallas) the Boston-Herald reported "thousands" marched. And at the University of Vermont, 30 students.

And then there are the sick comments we picked up around campus. "Why the hell should we mourn that guy, he shouldn't have been down there anyway." "Why should I spend sometime marching for a dead Protestant minister," a Catholic responded. The complete lack of understanding which we met is utterly inexcusable. That Catholic did not understand that the march was not so much for a "dead Protestant minister," as for the living. If those three Catholic nuns (who are now in Selma) were beaten and killed instead of Rev. Heeb, the Newman Center would have exploded. If that Reverend happened to be a Rabbi, Hillel would have responded in a similar manner. If Reverend Reeb came from Burlington instead of Boston, you can bet everyone would have been there - from Governor Hoff to President Rowell (whose absence is also unexplainable). And if Reverend Reeb was a Vermonter, that State Legislature would have passed a hundred anti-discrimination resolutions. It seems to strike us at least once each semester that most of the people around us are made of the "same cloth" as those in Selma, Alabama.

Last Sunday, the usual parishioners flocked en masse (if you pardon the double entendre) to religious services as they do every week. The Catholics went to their masses, the Protestants to their services. Religion, never - it is habit, habit from indoctrination. Those two hundred people marching down Main Street (catch the illusion?) had more religion, had more faith, than all those who profess belief in a higher spirit each Sunday. It is very easy each week to flock to a service which is exactly forty-five minutes long, the identical service each week and a carbon-copy sermon ("Don't play on Kake Walk, children, for to do so would be to sin.") The fact that every major religion was represented on this march by its leaders is no rationalization for the absence of these leader's followers.

And the Vermont State Legislature failed to pass a joint resolution condemning discrimination and the violence in Selma, Alabama because the resolution was "ill-advised." AMEN

VERMONT CONFERENCE

We originally had a column written on next week's Vermont Conference (For the benefit of Freshmen and for those who already have forgotten, the last Vermont Conference dealt with Civil Rights and was attended by such men as James Farmer and John Lewis. Mr. Lewis now lies with a fractured skull in an Alabama hospital-courtesy of Wallace's Gestapo) but we felt that the above was more important. We are sure that the conference is going to be well-attended: The topic is "Genesis Revisited," which means Test Tube Tots, which means dirty stories. As a preview, the dirty picture (which was carefully drawn after house of examination), that shows an egg and many sperms, is posted all over campus. Although we are sure the student body will not be able to comprehend the significance of the topic, we suggest it to you anyway.

AGR To Celebrate Fourth Year Here

By Armine Wodehouse
A G R celebrates its fourth year at the University this weekend March 19-21.
The Active members are having a hay-ride Friday night, Saturday night actives and alumni will attend a banquet at S. Burlington High School with Francis Colburn as speaker. Also on Saturday night will be the Pine Rose Formal at the chapter house where Sandra Hill will be crowned Chapter Sweetheart.

Students And Faculty March On Burlington

By Syrette Dym
Activities resulting from quick decisions and concentrated effort are just as often more successful than long range, pre-planned projects. The UVM march in memory of the Reverend and James Reeb who was murdered in Selma, Alabama while attempting to aid in the securing of rights for Negroes is a perfect illustration of this. Friday night, March 12, after learning of the Unitarian Church service in memory of the Reverend, UVM student Jean Camp decided to organize a peaceful march of students and faculty to precede the service. With the cooperation of Professor Molho of the history department, and the aid of a number of interested students, announcements of the march and its purpose were circulated to all the dorms and phone calls were made to inform the student body.
The results of this concentrated effort was apparent at two thirty on Sunday afternoon when approximately 250 people -- students, faculty, and members of the local N.A.A.C.P. -- massed in front of Waterman to begin the peaceful march. Professor Molho had secured a permit to march and police escort to lead the march through traffic. Marching double file in total silence, the demonstrators made their way from S. Prospect St. to Main St. and then followed Church St. to the Unitarian Church. All marchers attended the non-sectarian service which, nevertheless, was stated by one of the Ministers to be fundamentally a religious service. After the service, the marchers were given the opportunity to sign petitions to be sent to President Johnson urging him to exercise his powers to secure for all Americans the freedom to register in peace and to vote as citizens. Also available were the means for a contribution to be channeled through Unitarian auspices with the Freedom Fund as its destination. Following this, the marching reassembled and continued their march from the church up Pearl St. to S. Prospect ending at Waterman.

The realization of such a march shows that even though Vermont is somewhat removed from the immediate problem of Negro rights, we are aware of our duty as citizens to express our opinions and sympathies on this issue. Yet, though this march was impressive in its aspect, its most disappointing quality was the absence of student participation. It is a gift to say that even one fifth of the marchers were UVM students and we must commend the faculty and their families and thank the N.A.A.C.P. for their participation. This march succeeded in general, but it failed in its attempt to arouse student interest and in attracting those UVM'ers whom we know are not indifferent to the civil rights movement.

Letters To The Editor Bailey For Work Or Play?

Editor's Note: The following letter is being reprinted in its original form as it was received by The CYNIC office.

To the Editor:
Although letters have been written in the past to discuss this problem, the problem of students socializing in the Bailey Library still remains. Possibly the library got started off on the wrong foot and someone should rename it the Bailey Student Center. While in the process of renaming buildings around campus, how about Billings Library (excuse me, Billings Student Center). Is the purpose of this building to provide a haven for those who can't, or won't study in the Bailey Library? How about some poor misguided person who believes that a student center is for student activities, such as watching T.V. in the Marsh lounge (now a virtual impossibility since there are too many people who may be distracted from their studies there). Those card tables in the North Lounges - were they put there for studying or for playing cards with cards supplied by the desk outside?

There is, my friend, a solution to these familiar problems, and it can be brought about only by action by everyone, including you who are reading this letter and sympathize. How about it? To emphasize the purpose of the student center as such, how about informal dances in the coffee shop periodically - clear out the center tables and put them in the hall outside, which isn't really very useful as it is now? The new stereo system should be capable of supplying music suitable for dancing, now shouldn't it? How about opening the library or the Waterman Study Lounge on Saturday night to give the students a place to study besides their noisy dorms and Billings? Any talkers among you? You say you've been thinking about that for a while? You say you're too lazy (pardon me) to speak up. Now is the time for all good ... etc.

Thank you,
John Rie

ANOTHER ONE-ACT PLAY

By David St. John

Location - University of Verdvallée
Time and Scene - in a pre-college, required course for all those who have been admitted to the University, held during the summer before the freshman year.
Course - Preprofessorizing OI.

NOTE - This course has been deemed necessary by the administration after the completion of recent studies which indicated that perhaps more students would graduate from college if they came in with a better idea of what to expect from the PROFS, and the college campus.
Instructor - First of all boys and girls, I would like to congratulate you on your acceptance by the University of Verdvallée. I am certain that if you apply yourselves you will enjoy the weather here.
This morning I shall point out a few of the highlights of the campus and then we shall go on to consider one of the most important problems in education here. Now, students throughout the year are constantly invited to the Brailey Library to socialize, contact dates and let off steam by yelling and racing in the stairways, no other library in the state is like this one. If you'd care to study there is a small room in the basement set aside for this purpose. Secondly, in regard to study, students are still getting away with studying in the North lounge at Bulgings (Student) Center. If you own earplugs we advise that you wear them as distracting programs are scheduled for your entertainment over a chopped and channeled juke box. Downstairs there is a mud-shop which is a non-credit seminar for all students taking sandbox 212. In front of Bulgings Center is our beautiful College Green in the center of which is located a small wading pool and a statue of one of the flounders of the school. This statue, you are invited NOT TO TOUCH. We are all chipping in to build a pool in front of the boys dorms to compensate for the facts that there are no mirrors in the rooms and no bath tubs in which the boys can float their sailboats and rubber duckies between food fights at the dining hall. So you see, that the University of Verdvallée is always trying to "look out" for its students. Are there any questions?

Student - Mr. Instructor, what is the thing on the Library steps?

Instructor - That, young man, is why the library is known as Brailey. Now that you have a rough idea of the campus we will get on with the subject matter, your teachers. On the whole we have profs who are outstanding in their fields. On the other hand, it has been recently pointed out to the administration that we have a few who are just plain out, standing in the fields. We have had to make the requirement that certain members of the faculty begin passing at least 25 per cent of their classes or dismissal would result. Other of the culprits have adopted the self-amusing policy of never awarding a student over a 75 for the simple reason that "students just aren't that bright." Then there is always the annual contest to determine (from marks) who can give the most difficult tests. To these teachers, measurement of the student's comprehension of subject matter is of little importance. Only a student's ability to decipher trick, negatively stated, questions based around extremely variable factors, can save him. Our object in this class is to make the student aware that the administration knows his plight and to indoctrinate you in some methods of professor diplomacy.
One. If the professor is a "fast talker" and you can't get notes, take a three speed tape recorder to class, record on high speed and play back on low.
Two. If he mumbles or whispers, practice upon ventriloquism and have the mysterious voice ask him to speak more audibly. If he mumbles through whiskers bring a gold watch on a chain and hypnotize him from the back of the room, having with you a bottle of "Nail".
Three. If he knows everything, agree with him at the cost of sounding ridiculous to your classmates.
Four. If he's a bore (and doesn't take attendance) sleep at your room instead of in class. If he does take attendance bring an alarm clock to class which you must constantly be setting five minutes ahead to avoid embarrassment.
Five. If he maliciously criticizes portions of the school newspaper, consider the source and go along with him for the sake of your mark. Bear in mind that though the newspaper staff might or might not agree with his criticism, they would "defend to the death his right to say it."
Six. If he is way out of style, clothing wise, or particularly sloppy in his dress, look around, so are many of your friends.
Seven. If he appears particularly nervous or unsure of himself, ride him, and perhaps you'll drive him away. Signs you ma, look for in these people are: blackboard tapping, failure to look at the class, monotone speaking, inconsistency, fits of anger and generally spastic action.
Let me reassure you that the types of professors which I have covered this morning are in the minority. Often they are unaware of their faults because their peers are too tactful to help them reform. Am I suggesting that there are delinquent teachers here? Yes, very much so, and even as pay raises attract more qualified people into the teaching profession, every large group will have delinquents. By this statement I do not mean that nondelinquent teachers are in any way unqualified for their jobs. These people are department builders and mind builders who have sacrificed high pay and other benefits for the satisfaction of helping students become better developed people.

EDITORIAL...

less of how naive it may sound, a timely restatement of the obvious is sometimes in order. But, again, our success in this will depend upon the extent to which we are able to view old problems from a new perspective. We will no longer bore you with our semi-annual condemnation of apathy. We are convinced that the way to stimulate is not merely to tell students go out and become stimulated or that they must stimulate themselves -- a profound proclamation indeed, yet one which would amount to little more than intellectual masturbation. No, we must stimulate by our choice of topics and by what we say about them. Where we must criticize we will do so judiciously and our criticisms will be accompanied by suggested solutions to the problem under discussion. But, our paramount goal is neither to criticize nor to convince. It is, rather, the provocation of thought. Our efforts in this direction (and it is the only direction we can, in all conscience, take) will be as objective as the limitations of age and situation allow. But where we must achieve our end at the occasional expense of this objectivity (e.g. by playing the devil's advocate) we will feel justified in doing so.

Given time, and the opportunity to interact with and respond to the needs of a vital student body, we are confident that our future service will bear ample witness to the excellence of our philosophy.

Next Week: Our First Step -- Recognition of Kappa Sigma

SCOPE

The SCOPE Committee will initiate a new "student speaker" program tonight. Al Secunda, a junior and a brother in Phi Sigma Delta, will be the first speaker.

Secunda, active on campus, has served on S.A. as chairman of the Library Committee and is a member of the varsity tennis team. He also plays the saxophone, clarinet, and flute, and is a member of the University Orchestra and "The Northern Lights" dance band.

Secunda's program will include acting, reading poetry, and playing each of his instruments. It will be held at eight o'clock, tonight, in the Arena Theater.

University of Vermont, 15 Mar: Company L-12, PERSHING

RIFLES, of the ROTC Cadet Brigade spent last Saturday on a field training exercise near Camp Johnson in Essex Junction. The day's activities were primarily designed to train the cadets in fire and maneuver and to acquaint them with the firing of the M-1 rifle and the .45 caliber pistol.

Firing with the M-1 at 25 meters and with the .45 pistol at 15 meters filled the morning schedule. Colonel L.G. Robinson, PMS, who visited later in the morning, showed the cadets "how it's done" and shot the best score of the morning with the ".45". Safety supervision and training were stressed throughout the exercises. After lunch (not "C" rations, but Saga box lunches), each of the cadets participated in either fire and maneuver exercises or grenade throwing. In mid-afternoon the company reformed for a combined attack and defense problem. Capt. Haas and Cadet Capt. Sheridan acted as judges for the problem during which a force of 12 cadets defended an area of high ground against a superior guerrilla force.

The program for the day was an impressive success. The company was so encouraged at the results and the enthusiasm of the cadets that two more such activities are being planned for the remainder of the spring semester.

Madrigals Explain History

By Kris Nie

On Wednesday, March 10th, the University Madrigal Singers assisted Mr. Francis Weinrich of the Music Department in presenting a humanities lecture to the Humanities Society of Burlington at a meeting held in the Burlington High School auditorium. Mr. Weinrich lectured on the history of the madrigal from the 16th century up to the present. The Madrigal Singers sang selections characteristic of each period.

A madrigal may be classified as vocal chamber music for performers with one singer to a part. At present there are eleven members of Madrigals: 1st Sopranos - Peggy Strait, Nancy Cadmus; 2nd Sopranos - Chris Coleman, Laureen Coutermarsh; Altos-Louise Hubbert, Kathy Hancock; Tenors-Gary Lawson, Roger Feuss; Basses-Robert Chapin, George Bedell, and David St. John.

The Madrigal Singers are under the direction of Mr. Weinrich. They have appeared on local television and throughout the state in addition to their regular appearances at concerts here at the University.

some sharp and probing questions was Dr. Norman T. London, the new Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Dr. London, who remains associated with the Speech Department, held up strongly under the pressure.

When asked about the nature of his new job, Dr. London replied with a detailed description. As he sees it, the most important facet of his job is "student advisement and liaison." Dr. London seems to feel that the student riots at the University of California at Berkeley might have been avoided by more liaison of this kind. His position serves to make certain that administration, students, and faculty retain cohesiveness to some degree. A concern to avoid student "depersonalization" is great among administration officials.

Dr. London was queried as to why he was selected for the job. He speculated that his work with the debate, discussion, and summer orientation programs enabled him to have a "good rapport with students." His only stipulation was that he be allowed to retain his faculty status by teaching one speech course each semester.

Dr. London came to the University from Bowdoin College in Maine. He was attracted here by what he called "one of the two best speech departments in the East," the other being Penn State.

Besides being an invaluable addition to the Speech Department at UVM, Dr. London will also prove to be a superior administrator. His alert and well-informed mind and his poise under fire are sure indicators of his capabilities.

SIX SENIORS ELECTED TO PHI BETA KAPPA HONORARY

Six University of Vermont students have been initiated into the Vermont chapter of Phi Beta Kappa.

The six, all seniors and enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences, are Herbert Safford of 525B South Union St., Burlington, Bennett Machanic of 49 Robinson Parkway, Burlington, Howard Perry Jr., of Bethel, Martin Welt of Elmont, N.Y., Joan Klonsky of Rockville Center, N.Y., and Carl Kleban of Rego Park, N.Y.

Because of their outstanding scholastic work - all have A (better than 90) averages - the six students were elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa after seven semesters rather than eight.

Dr. John Kent, chairman of the classics department and immediate past president of the Vermont chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, said it was most unusual to have more than two or three students qualify for membership after just seven semesters. "We are most pleased and delighted to have six such outstanding students."

Phi Beta Kappa established the Vermont Alpha Chapter at the University in 1848 and it became the first local chapter to initiate women into membership.

HOOPSTERS FINISH DISAPPOINTING SEASON

By Alan Rice

The 1964-65 Basketball season was a long and disappointing one for the University of Vermont Catamounts. Although the Cats showed at times during the season that they had the potential to be a real good team, they could never keep a well balanced attack going for more than a game or two in a row. In years to come however, Catamount boosters won't remember the Cat's dismal record but look back on the '64-'65 season as the year Ralph D'Altilla broke the school scoring record with 42 points. People will bring to mind the big game against St. Michael's in which Vermont was picked to lose by 20 points, but won 75-72. And finally, people will remember it as the year that Fuzzy Evans finally decided to call it quits, after serving many great years as head coach of the UVM Basketball team.

around the 20 point mark. Also scoring well were Layne Higgs who popped in more than 20 points for the third straight game, and Milt Goggins who scored 15 and pulled down a whole mess of rebounds.

Next it was back home to play Norwich as the 2nd semester began. A good crowd witnessed Vermont out match Norwich 89-77. Once again Layne Higgs topped the 20 point mark, and Milt Goggins pulled down 25 rebounds, tops for a UVM player this season.

It looked like sunny days were ahead for the UVM basketball team; however, Vermont's next two games were against two of the top New England teams - URI and UConn, and the Cats dazed twice 93-60, and 107-60, respectively as they were completely outmatched.

Vermont then moved back into the victory column with an 87-62

The season began to drag for Vermont as all they could do was look to next season. In their next game against winless Brandeis, the Cats found some rough going, but prevailed 68-65. It was down to Norwich to play the Cadets and an attempt to gain a tie for the State Series title. However, Vermont met the shock of its life and fell to an inspired Cadet team by the embarrassing score of 113-70.

Fortunately, the season ended on a winning note. In the last game of the season a stubborn Middlebury team at the Patrick Gymnasium, the Cats came out on top 69-65. Leading Vermont in scoring once was Capt. Ralph D'Altilla who scored 30 points, to finish out a brilliant 3 years varsity career on the UVM basketball team.

The Vermont basketball team will be losing four men at graduation. Included in the four are 3

THE SEASON

Vermont had high hopes as the 1964-65 season opened. The Catamounts had three of their starters returning from last year's squad, which included Capt. Ralph D'Altilla, and juniors Layne Higgs and Milt Goggins. The Cats traveled to Hanover, New Hampshire for their first game against Dartmouth, a team whom they defeated last season. The two teams battled closely all the way, but with a minute and a half left, the Cats ran out of gas as they threw away two key passes and fell to the Indians 73-65.

The team then traveled up to Orino to play the Black Bears of the Univ. of Maine. Maine, like all Vermont's Yankee Conference opponents, proved to be too tough and the Catamounts dropped both games 83-60 and 103-84.

It was then back to Burlington to play the University of New Hampshire. Vermont, wanting to make the impression on the UVM students that they weren't as bad as they had appeared on the road, did just that.

D'ALTILIA'S BIG GAME

Not only did Vermont beat New Hampshire 81-76, but Capt. Ralph D'Altilla pumped in 42 points to break the school scoring record, previously held by Benny Becton.

The Cats then came back to the Green Mountain State to begin their state series play. Their first game was against Middlebury. In this game the Cats scored their most points of the season and won easily 93-73. Showing hot hands for Vermont vs. the Panthers were Ralph D'Altilla who scored 26 points, and kept his scoring average win over Clarkson, a game in which Ralph D'Altilla scored 31 points. However, the Cats faded again and lost to St. Lawrence 90-79 and the Univ. of Mass. 96-58.

ST. MIKE'S!

The next game was against St. Michael's. The Michaelmen were confident of slaughtering Vermont. However, the Cats had plans of their own. And whatever their plans were, they proved to be the right ones. Vermont pulled the upset of the century and beat St. Michael's 75-72. The game was close all the way as the score was tied 11 times. But with a little over a minute to play the Cats pulled into the lead for good on two free throws by Ralph D'Altilla. D'Altilla had 14 points and 22 rebounds. However, the big man for Vermont was Layne Higgs who scored 22 points including 12 in a row in the last 10 minutes of the game, which drew Vermont from an 8 point deficit into a 67-67 tie at that point.

SEASON ENDS ON A DISAPPOINTING NOTE

Unfortunately for our Catamounts, the season did not end there. For the rest of the campaign proved to be very disappointing. Their next game was against tough Rhode Island, whom the Cats fell to by a score of 90-69. Following this was the game against New Hampshire, whom Vermont had previously beaten. However, the Cats were to be denied this time and lost 93-76. Next came St. Michael's again, and Vermont had high hopes of upsetting the Michaelmen once again. However, lightning didn't strike twice and Vermont fell 94-69.

starters: Capt. Ralph D'Altilla, Joe Gannon, and Carl Frattini. Also graduating will be reserve center John Bossi.

D'ALTILIA THE KEY

Missed the most of all next season obviously will be Capt. D'Altilla. Ralph led the team in field goals, shooting percentage, free throws, rebounds, rebound avg., points and scoring average, compiling a 20.0 game scoring average. He certainly will be sorely missed next season.

THE OUTLOOK

However, there is reason for optimism for next year. Returning will be junior Layne Higgs, who compiled a 16.6 point scoring average. Although he did a very commendable job this season, Higgs has the potential to be one of the leading scorers and playmakers in the East. He has exceptional ability but has yet to develop to his full potential. If he goes next season, UVM will win a lot of games. Also returning will be center Milt Goggins, who has improved with every game this season. Milt has proved to be an excellent rebounder, and scores from under the basket. Therefore, big things are expected from him for next season. Other members of the team returning next year will be junior Mike Karel, who played well when he got a chance, along with sophomore's Bruce Hanna, who proved to be one of the team's best defensive players, George Abbott, Russ Boardman, Timothy Hayes and Don Longley. Also junior Ken Spalter, who was swing man on last seasons team, but was forced out of action at mid-season this year, will be a great help to the team if he returns next season.

PUCKMEN ERRATIC

By Richard Pollish

The University of Vermont hockey team finished a dismal 5-11 season last Saturday with a 5-4 loss to an experienced U.N.H.

The future seemed bright last October when virtually all the members from the previous season's freshmen ladder squad were back for their second year of varsity competition, but with the end of the first semester over half the team had been lost through marks, including star defenseman Tim Twomey and goalie Bob Sausville. With but eight members remaining, coach Ruffer was again forced to call upon freshmen to comprise the team. The lack of varsity experience showed as the Cats dropped lopsided contests to UConn, Salem and Boston State teams and UMass, with only a hard earned 4-3 victory over Amherst to show. With their record at 3-9, the team did the seemingly impossible feat on Feb. 17 of scoring a thrilling 5-4 victory over a Norwich squad that was at the time rated the top E.C.A.C. small college team. They followed this up with a fine 4-2 win over the Boston State team that had beat UVM by 9-3 only a week and a half earlier.

The Catamount's hopes of scoring a third straight upset was denied by a smooth, powerful Middlebury squad on Feb. 24. UVM was outclassed and overpowered as the Panthers scored their 7-2 victory. The final game was the 5-4 overtime loss to New Hampshire.

The improvement shown in the last part of the season gives rise to hopes that the team will be able to continue to develop the smooth teamwork that became increasingly evident towards the season's end. Next year's schedule is virtually the same, and unless marks again take their toll, so will next seasons personnel. The immediate future is encouraging, with the first line of Orzo Swett, the team's high scorer, with ten goals and nine assists, Capt. Marshall Stevenson (nine goals and nine assists), and Chip Uihlein (6 goals, three assists) expected to again spearhead the Catamount attack. Another bright note is the frosh line which showed plenty of scoring punch in the games they worked as a line. The leading scorer on this line was Lee Roy, who got seven goals and five assists in only eight games. Standout defensemen Riche and Klode should be just as effective next season. Frosh goalie Gregg also showed good potential.

UVM Basketball Captain Ralph D'Altilla.

FUZZY TO RETIRE

Missed most of all next season will be Coach Fuzzy Evans, who has decided to end an illustrious career as UVM basketball coach. Although this was a disappointing season for him, Fuzzy has enjoyed a great season and will be long remembered for his many winning seasons.

The picture could become more promising if the players who left after the first semester return. No definite predictions really can be made for next season since the team's chances depend on how the present squad develops, how many and which of the players ineligible at mid-year return, and how the team adapts to the new, but as yet unnamed coach for next season.

D'Altilla Stars

Ralph D'Altilla, who has been among the nation's leading scorers and rebounders all season long, was the pacesetter in most departments for the University of Vermont basketball team this past season.

The 6-3 captain from Union City, N.J., led the Catamounts in scoring, rebounding, field goals made, field goal percentage, free throws made, and free throws attempted.

D'Altilla scored 400 points in 20 games for an even 20.0 per game average. He hit on 158 of 357 shots from the floor for a .445 mark, was 84 for 130 from the free throw line, and hauled in 283 rebounds for an average of 14.2 a game, a rather notable achievement in an era when the "big man" is dominating the rebounding game in college basketball.

Blood Drive Breaks Record

444 Pints Donated

By Karen Fayette

The Red Cross Blood Drive held at the University of Vermont on March 28th and 29th broke all records for a two-day blood drawing on campus. The drive, sponsored by the Ethan Allen Rifles of the ROTC produced 444 pints of blood, breaking the previous record of 359 pints set in a two day drawing last fall, October 28th and 29th.

One of the major factors in this record response is attributed to the location of the drawing which was held in Billings Center. Previous drawings were held at the Mansfield Center and were not as easily accessible to the students.

Richard Badger, former President of the Student Association, in charge of the project, and his associates did an outstanding job enrolling and registering the donors as well as assisting the Red Cross workers in the donor room, the canteen and in setting up the equipment in these sections.

Edward R. Stearns, Regional Director of the Vermont - New Hampshire Red Cross was very satisfied with the results of the blood drive.

"This generous response could not have come at a better time since heavy demands had depleted the blood supply at the center. With this remarkable turnout we have been able to supply all the blood that the hospitals require."

Gov. Hoff Speaks On Civil Rights

By Joan Clark

On Tuesday, March 23, in North Lounge, Billings, the Committee on Human Rights met to discuss the Civil Rights struggle today, notably the struggle for voters' rights in Selma, Alabama.

The committee of students, clergy, and faculty, heard Governor Hoff speak on the responsibilities of every citizen in regard to the question of equal rights. The governor pointed out that discrimination is not something that we can dismiss because it doesn't affect us directly; he cited incidents of discrimination in all U.S. cities - even Burlington. People must step forward and voice their opinions on the matter, the Governor told the group, or true democracy will never be realized in America.

Also speaking were Profs. Hoffman and Molho of the History Dept.; Prof. Chapman of the Psych. Dept.; Prof. Heller of the Romance Language Dept.; UVM's Chaplain, and students June Camp and Miles Wortman.

Telegrams had been sent to the Vermont National Congressional Delegation, inviting them to speak. Regrettably, pressing business kept them in their Washington offices.

Everyone present was asked to write to his senior senator and state his opinion on the pending voter rights legislation. The letters and a $0.40 donation from everyone for mailing, was collected at the end of the meeting.

The letters will be sent en masse to Washington.

A truck has been offered to the Committee to carry used books to Southern communities this summer for distribution; anyone with old books was asked to donate them to the cause.

There will be another meeting of the Joint Committee on Human Rights in Billings North Lounge, April 12 at 4:15. Anyone interested in the Civil Rights movement is invited to attend.

Untermeyer To Speak At Robert Frost Week

Louis Untermeyer

By William Machanic

The week of April 4-10, 1965 will be dedicated as "Robert Frost Week." There will be a display of Frost's works in the library for the entire week. On Thursday, April 8, at eight o'clock in the Ira Allen Chapel, Louis Untermeyer, famous poet, editor, critic, and anthologist, will speak on Frost. His speech is entitled "Robert Frost, a look Backward."

Frost knew Untermeyer very well and once said of him, "There are times when I think I am merely the figment of Louis' imagination." William Rose Benet called Untermeyer "The American Heine." Amy Lowell says that he is "the most versatile genius in America." And Helen Grace Carlisle declares that he is "the liveliest personality" she ever knew.

Untermeyer is, indeed, an interesting man. Besides being a poet and biographer, he is an essayist, lecturer, teacher, horticulturist, and pianist.

Untermeyer was born, raised, and, as he says, "miseducated" in New York. At 37, he left the jewelry business to devote all his time to writing. The literary world has benefitted greatly by this decision. Today, among other things, he is Honorary consultant in the Humanities for the Library of Congress.

Untermeyer's visit to the UVM presents a wonderful opportunity for both students and faculty to meet and hear one of the leading men in the literary world today.

WOMEN'S RECREATION ASSOCIATION

The UVM Women's Recreation Association held elections for officers recently. The results for the 1965-1966 term are as follows:

President - Pat Thompson;
Vice President - Dina Hackett;
Sports Coordinator - Alice Whitney;
Secretary - Janice Rice;
Treasurer - Debbie Small;
Assistant Treasurer - Nancy Nelson;
Membership Chairman - Carolyn Comstock;
Social Chairman - Sue Creeden;
Publicity Chairman - Helen Burgess.

The new officers will be officially installed at the Annual Dinner for Past and New Officers sponsored by the Women's Physical Education Department on April 21, 1965.

Several girls attended an intercollegiate Fencing Tournament this weekend at Brandeis University. WRA members who went were Sandy Snowling, Jean Stables, and Mary Burnham.

Ten girls are needed to take part in an intercollegiate Bowling Tournament coming up soon. For more information contact Sue Creeden, Redstone, Ext. 441.

STUDENT LAW ASSOCIATION

The elections of the Student Law Association were held last Tuesday, March 16, and the new officers will serve until January, 1966.

President for the coming year will be David St. John, a sophomore from Barre, Vermont. To assist him in the capacity of Vice-President the association chose Matthew Brown of Alpha Tau Omega, a sophomore from New Bedford, Massachusetts. Eloise Roberts, who is a sophomore from South Hero, Vermont, will serve as Recording Secretary. Corresponding Secretary is Eileen Fortana, a sophomore from E. Dorset, Vermont. Selected to the post of Treasurer was John Senning, a junior from Higganum, Connecticut, who is a member of Phi Sigma Delta. Publicity Agent for the coming year is sophomore Richard Flood from Yonkers, New York.

The meeting also discussed and ratified the constitution.

Professor Simon, faculty advisor, spoke to the gathering, suggesting the names of several speakers who might be available. He also advocated a field trip to a session of the Vermont Supreme Court as well as to lower courts in the area in order to learn more about the normal work of a lawyer and "get a taste of" the courtroom.

The next meeting was scheduled for April 20 at 7:00 p.m. in Billings.

ALPHA ZETA

The University of Vermont chapter of Alpha Zeta fraternity has initiated 11 new members. Alpha Zeta is a national agricultural honor society.

New members are Richard A. Kelleway of Rutland; Richard J. Walker of Bennington; Douglas P. Kibbe of Saxtons River; Gerald M. Wilcox of Manchester; Joseph K. Button of Chelsea; and Barent W. Stryker of East Corinth.

Also, John P. Edbrooke of Montreal; Peter H. Foulkes of West Peabody, Mass.; George D. Wrightson of Etna, N.H.; Kenneth N. Geluso of Oyster Bay Cove, N.Y.; and Myles J. Leeds of Malverne, N.Y.

NOTICE

There will be an informal reception for the speakers of the Vermont Conference on Wednesday, March 24, 2-4 p.m., in the North Lounge or Billings Center. It will be hosted by the pledges of A D Pi.

"This book combines the vision and hardheaded, practical touch of its author, one of the ablest new figures in public life of our generation. It is a book to give courage and hope to the anxious and fearful, and to confirm the faith of those who see what a great future lies before mankind. If Sargent Shriver's ringing words could be read by millions - as I hope it will be - it would advance the cause of peace and tell Americans more about their true selves than any book I have seen in many a year. It is a distinguished and thoughtful book by a shining personality."

Peace Corps Week Ends Tomorrow

One of the most frequent questions Peace Corps receives is "I would like to serve in the Peace Corps, but I'm a Liberal Arts major and have no special skills. I thought the Peace Corps just wanted mechanics, farmers, engineers, nurses or doctors. How could you use me?"

Liberal Arts majors who ask these questions are surprised to find that over half the Volunteers now serving in the Peace Corps have a Liberal Arts background. These Volunteers are not super-youths, nor super-skilled. They are people like you: men and women with a liberal education who know something "of shoes and ships and sealing wax, and cabbages and kings." They are people who have lived in a modern world and are willing to share their experience, contribute their skills and engage their emotions in the crucial areas.

Many Liberal Arts Volunteers are not only teaching in such fields as math, science, english, but are also teachers of art and music. They are working in secondary schools and some are instructors in economics, political science and psychology on the university level. In addition to teaching, many of these Volunteers, who in their free time have participated in sports, tinkered with mechanical gadgets, raised vegetables, started libraries, taught first-aid, find that these are skills of contemporary life, and are using them as community development workers in the Peace Corps.

The University of Vermont has its own share of Liberal Arts graduates in the Peace Corps.

Teaching French in Sierra Leone is Richard Burgess of Emerson, Massachusetts; and teaching English in Nigeria is Mary C. Caryl of Brandon, Vermont.

Both Michel J. Charbonnier of Danvers, Massachusetts and Bernadette Steen of St. Albans, Vermont, are teaching English as a foreign language in Thailand.

Katherine A. Connerty of Washington Depot, Connecticut, is serving in a teacher training institute in Malaya.

Doing community development work in Niger is Laurence K. Koff of Chicago, Illinois and working in a 4-H project in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil is Ann Weir of Fairfax, Vermont.

Peter G. Snow of Windsor, Vermont is teaching math and physics in Nigeria.

These liberal arts graduates who are serving as Volunteers, are finding that it is not only two years of giving, but also of receiving. As one recently returned Volunteer, who is planning on a teaching career, put it "I feel that I received far more from my two years in the Peace Corps than I gave . . . I now have a far greater respect and admiration for our democratic government and way of life . . . I was exposed to a completely new type of culture . . . I gained a fluency in a foreign language. Before entering Peace Corps, I was undecided as to what type of career I wanted . . . now, two years later, with an added maturity and greater self-confidence, I know what my goal in life will be."

The Peace Corps means many things to many people. To a starving boy in Peru, it is the American who is helping his father grow more corn. To the girl in the Ivory Coast, it is the teacher who has come from across the ocean to teach her how to speak English . . . and to a new mother in a Malayan village, it is the Peace Corps nurse who can teach her how to give her child the proper care so it can reach the age of two years without succumbing to tuberculosis, malaria, dysentery or hookworm.

Peace Corps nurses are being called upon to work in many situations from the teaching and training of nurses and aides, and public health work to doing surgical and head nursing. They are working in health clinics in rural villages to hospitals in towns and cities . . . in places such as Togo, Malaya, Sabah/Sarawak, India, Bolivia and Peru.

Many Volunteers are also working in special hospitals, such as tuberculosis sanatoria, leprosarias, mental, maternity or infectious disease hospitals.

A Peace Corps nurse may find herself one of just a few persons in an area with medical training when an epidemic or disaster strikes.

For example, Peace Corps Nurse Linda Dubose, who served in St. Lucia, found herself in the middle of a crippling typhoid epidemic. She helped to stem the epidemic with intensive injections, diet instruction and training in personal hygiene. In one 11-week period, she treated 1,650 children with whooping cough, mal-nutrition, intestinal parasites and skin infections. About her work, she said, "the satisfying and heart-warming experiences are multiplied many times a day. You will know these as you assist in the crowded rural clinics, attempting to teach a mother the proper diet for her child, or to explain the reason that her child has intestinal parasites. And you will see the smile on her face which says 'I believe you and will try to do as you say.'"

If you are interested in serving in the Peace Corps, and are willing to share your knowledge and experience to develop and increase medical and health standards, with those who have little or none, stop by the University of Vermont Peace Corps Information Center the week of March 21-27. Members of a visiting Peace Corps team will be there for you to talk to from 8:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. daily. The Peace Corps Center is located in the Student Union.

KAPPA SIGMA - VICTIM AND SCAPEGOAT

Kappa Sigma seems to have become the victim of a major flaw in human nature. People tend to find compensation for their own inadequacies in the failings of others. They love to find fault, yet recognize virtue only reluctantly. And so it is that Kappa Sig has been soundly and repeatedly criticized for its mistakes while its recent accomplishments have been sorely neglected by a student public which is devastatingly human. To the extent that the editors of The CYNIC are human the newspaper seems to assume an almost human personality, reflecting and mercilessly magnifying the shortcomings of its authors. So you see we, too, are human. And in giving the events that surrounded Kappa Sig's social misadventures last year a disproportionate amount of coverage while neglecting their fine Kake Walk performance this year, we committed a very serious, but very human error. If we had to sell our publication one might find some vague, if bitterly pragmatic justification for our action, since, given human nature, this is the sort of thing that most people prefer to read. But if our mistake was psychologically understandable, it was also morally unjustifiable under any circumstances. This may sound somewhat melodramatic but it seems to have upset the members of Kappa Sig and it certainly bothered us. So we are attempting to clarify an issue which has been unintentionally obscured.

The pity of it all is that reputations are almost invariably many years behind the fact. A few mistakes can stigmatize a fraternity, but good reputations are acquired only after long and painful efforts at perfection. As the student newspaper, we should have been the first to recognize Kappa Sigma's efforts in this positive direction. Belatedly, we do so now, for their Kake Walk triumphs are more than sufficient evidence of the fact that their efforts have begun to pay off.

We are grateful to Harvey Bazarian, president of Kappa Sigma, for his letter of March 12. Most of his points were well taken and this editorial is the result. But we must take exception to his concluding (if only implied) assertion that our oversight was intentional -- that it was, in fact, the result of some vaguely defined religious prejudice, or fraternity politics. On the contrary, our mistake was, as stated, an oversight -- perfectly human and perfectly innocent. Granted, a superficial examination of The CYNIC's new editorial board could lead one to suspect that UVM's "Fourth Estate" has become a fourth "Jewish fraternity." But despite appearances, this is not the case. If we were to answer this charge in true fraternity fashion, we would justify ourselves by pointing to our editors and saying, "Look, we took one this year." But we don't want to make one of our news editors self-conscious, nor do we wish to dismiss the problem so lightly. We can only say that if the CYNIC staff is ethnically unbalanced, we did not plan it this way. Nor do we like it this way for, admittedly, it results in a cultural and social bias which inevitably finds its way into our writing. The explanation of the problem can be found in five thousand years of sociological tradition -- the solution eludes us.

We of The CYNIC are in a position vaguely analogous to that of Kappa Sigma. We, too, are hindered by a stigma. We, too, have a varied past. We, too, are human. We, too, have at times regretted our humanity, for it is incompatible with that objectivity which is so essential to the proper performance of our task. And, like Kappa Sigma, our humanity has occasionally been questioned, if unjustifiably.

We can only say that Kappa Sigma has fallen prey to the unfortunate consequences of its own past. We congratulate them on the admirable foundation they have laid for a better future and wish them luck in overcoming the social ills that plague us all.

R.B.

By the way, why doesn't anyone from Kappa Sig write for The CYNIC?

Letters To The Editor Library Is Too Noisy

To the Editor:

In answer to John Rie's letter: I wrote a letter to the Dean of my college which has not yet been answered. The responsibility for a quiet library rests with the administration, if the students will not take it. The students who refuse to make the library atmosphere conducive to study should not be allowed to disturb the studying of those who wish to study in a quiet place.

At Dartmouth College Library, no one is noisy. In the libraries of Keene State College and Marlboro College, anyone who makes noise is promptly ousted, politely, but promptly. This school seems to be more concerned with when a girl student gets in than whether or not she has a study atmosphere that encourages retention. The concerns of a university should be in alignment with intellectual progress for every student. We need and deserve a quiet place to study, every night in the week. A library should be a place where a person can go and read and think without being distracted by extraneous sound!

Thank you,
Betsy Berry

Ethan Allen Rifles Thanks Blood Donors

To the Editor,

The members of the Ethan Allen Rifles would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who made the EAR Annual Blood Drive such a success this year. 444 pints of blood were contributed in the two day drive. This was a new record for UVM. The previous high was reached last fall when 359 pints were collected in two days at the Mansfield Avenue Blood Center.

Special thanks must go to all those who gave blood, to the Student Nurses who donated so many hours of their time to assist the Red Cross nurses, the Billings Center Governing Board for their permission to use the building, Mr. Edward Stern of the American Red Cross for all his assistance, and all the many others who helped in no small way.

It is indeed gratifying to see the students and faculty of UVM turn out in such great numbers to help such a worthwhile cause.

Sincerely,

C.B. Eaton, Jr.

THE SCEPTIC

worthman & a friend

Once upon a time in the village of Zengerton (a place not so far from here) there was a tall, blond and handsome young editor who was attempting to bring news to the people of Zengerton (who, as you probably know, are cut off from the rest of the world) by printing a small newspaper. The boy was poor (we shall not go into his mysterious past) and could not support the paper on his own. There was not a large circulation (for, you see, the town was not very large) and the local merchants wouldn't advertise. So, one day, our young hero (who for the sake of propriety must go nameless) went to the local bank president and asked him for money to support his new journal. The president was smiling, happy, and jovial. "Yes, indeed," said the bank president, "I would be glad to support your paper. But I must protect my investment so let me appoint my unemployed brother to overlook your paper. He will not interfere," the banker continued, "he will just look out for my investment."

"All right," agreed our idealistic young hero, "I accept your terms, we shall have a little partnership. You will not interfere with me and I will produce a good newspaper." They shook hands and parted friends.

Soon the paper was thriving. Everybody in the valley was reading our here's journal. It was bright, witty, urbane, intelligent and down at the people's level. Everybody was happy: the people, the editor and the banker.

One day, about a year later, a gypsy family moved into the valley. In the family was a ravishing dark-haired, dark-eyed beauty who soon became the talk of the valley. As soon as the young editor laid eyes on the girl he was madly in love with her subtle looks and her sceptical air. Reacting in a similar manner, the girl was soon in love with our hero. The two got together and planned an elaborate wedding. They were to live happily forever after.

But, alas, someone else had eyes for the gypsy girl and this someone happened to be the now employed unemployed banker's brother (the same brother who "oversaw" our hero's newspaper). The brother was a fiend. He wanted the tempting gypsy girl and he would not permit the young editor to get in his way. "Come," said the brother to the girl, "I shall take you away from all this." The issue became clear -- either the gypsy girl would leave our hero and go marry the evil brother or the brother would fold.

Will the successful newspaper fold? Will the young man have to give up his ravishing fiancée? Will the evil brother win out? Dear reader, you shall find out by the next issue (if there is a next issue) if this sceptical conflict will be settled.

NOTE - We regret the short column this week but we are currently involved with a dark-haired, dark-eyed gypsy girl.

UVM Profs Sign Vietnam Letter

We, as members of the academic community, feel impelled to raise publicly with you, Mr. President, the question of our government's present policy towards South Vietnam. We ask you to reconsider our present course of action in view of the following facts:

We are intervening unilaterally in support of a succession of undemocratic regimes that are opposed by a majority of the South Vietnamese people.

We are waging an immoral and inhumane war that has brought untold suffering to the people of South Vietnam.

Our recent air attacks on North Vietnam intensify the danger that a local conflict will develop into a major war.

It is maintained that the United States is protecting a popularly supported government against foreign subversion. We maintain, Mr. President, that the evidence available to the Congress and to the public does not support this interpretation of the Vietnamese conflict.

The fact is that the United States is maintaining regimes which are not supported by the bulk of the rural population. How else explain a situation in which 35,000 Vietcong regulars have been able to make increasing gains against a government army of over 200,000 men together with 23,000 American "advisers"? The close-range attacks on Bien Hoa and Pleiku indicate the lack of support by neighboring villagers for the Saigon government.

What has our policy meant for the people of South Vietnam? Only a small minority of the people profits from the $600 million in foreign aid we send annually to South Vietnam. The peasantry of Vietnam has been terrorized. The country, once one of the most prosperous areas of Southeast Asia, is being devastated by the napalm bombing of peasant villages, by the unbridled strafing of the countryside by American-supplied aircraft, by the detention and mass transfers of the South Vietnamese people. Prisoners are being tortured in South Vietnam. If does not seem likely that this could be done without the knowledge of American officials.

What effect has our policy had on United States prestige abroad? By supporting dictatorial military regimes in South Vietnam we have undermined confidence in our professed belief that nations should be allowed to develop their own destinies free from outside interference. Although we pledged to respect the Geneva accords of 1954, we have violated those agreements by supplying troops and weapons to South Vietnam. We have belied our adherence to international law by refusing to submit the dispute to an international conference, such as the parties to the Geneva accords or one of the bodies of the United Nations.

Our justification for intervention in South Vietnam has been that we are preventing the spread of Communism in Southeast Asia. The effect of our policy, however, has been to alienate both the neighboring countries and our allies.

As recent events have shown, the longer the war in South Vietnam continues, the greater are the chances of escalation. Our air and sea attacks upon North Vietnam have not appreciably altered the situation in the south, but they have succeeded in increasing the danger of a major conflagration on the continent of Asia and of nuclear war.

Where 81% of the American people, according to a recent Gallup poll, indicated they were in favor of a conference with the leaders of Southeast Asia and China in an effort to reach a peace agreement, must we continue any longer along this dangerous path?

Mr. President, we urge you to consider another course of action:

We ask that you bring an end to the investment of American men and money in the war in South Vietnam.

We ask you to seek a negotiated settlement by every possible means in order to create an independent, neutralized government and to bring about the withdrawal of United States troops.

We ask you to lay the problem immediately before an international body and to put an end to our unilateral and illegal actions.

We urge you, Mr. President, to take immediate action to end the war in South Vietnam. The longer we persist in our present policy, the fewer will be the alternatives open to us.

We, the undersigned, wish to express our agreement with the "Open Letter to President Johnson on Vietnam" which has been prepared and circulated by the University Committee to Protest the War in Vietnam.

Sceptic Is Criticized

To the Editor:

In regard to The Sceptic, March nineteenth, it seems safe, to me, to assume that the author did not keep his opening quote in mind when writing his article.

I gathered from his remarks that he is in favor of finally granting Constitutional rights to our Negro citizens. However, The Sceptic seems to have forgotten the First Amendment, which grants freedom of religion, both in establishment and "the free practice thereof."

Since The Sceptic is a human being, he is in no position to judge the value of one religion over another, or of religion itself. His claim that, "It is very easy each week to flock to a service which is exactly forty-five minutes long, the identical service each week and a carbon-copy sermon," may or may not be true. I do not think it is.

I do think that it is quite easy to write a hypocritical student newspaper column, one in which an author advocates allowing one group to gain the use of their Constitutional rights, and, at the same time, criticizes another group for exercising theirs. I have concluded that The Sceptic, in his article, has proved only one thing. "This generation has witnessed hypocrisy as has no other generation."

Superstition Stopped

To the Editor:

The superstition still prevails on campus, despite abundant grammatical evidence, that I am the true writer of the Skeptic column. As a result, I was recently approached by an indignant member of Sigma Nu, who claimed that I had insulted his frat club in a column. He gave three reasons:

1) The frat in the column was called Beta Sigma. Sigma Nu's chapter here is Beta Sigma.

2) The title of the frat's president resembled the title of Sigma Nu's president.

3) The hero of the column's frat eavesdropped on the Dean of Men while in the Dean's bathroom. The frat men of Sigma Nu installed a tape recorder in their ladies' room during Kake Walk weekend and used it to eavesdrop on the girls' conversation.

I denied his accusation, and hereby deny it again. Sigma Nu sounds like a lovely group and certainly deserves no criticism.

Yours truly,
James Donald O'Hara

INJUN' LETTER

Dear SAGA Joe,

Why you makem friendly maidens hike across mountainous terrain at speed of Thunderhawk in highnoon? If they havem classes on main reservation before and after highnoon, why you makem run, or starve, or pay double? They pay throughem nostrils any way we see it. Maidens no have moons enough to make journey to chow teepee between classes. Chief Wasson say him think it good that UVM Campus havem thinnest maidens in land of east sun. Me think some thin by lack of choice. If evil spirits send strong wind we lose half of co-eds. Then who supportum SAGA Joe?

Witchdoctor say maidens' stomachs feel like war-dance going on inside after run to and from lunch. Heap little get done in following class. Wasson say it necessary to shootem one a week due to broken leg from running. Running OK for warriors but maidens luggem W&W bags (Wampum & Warpaint) which trippem up when running. Tired ones and lazy ones not takem these chances, they buyem food(?) at schloffee shop or Blottermann cafeteria. They payem double and we know this is an oversight on your part because we know you not wantum all that extra wampum or the wrath of Fire gods for the injustice of overcharge.

We already hadem Pow Wow with Sun god and him say it be impossible for him to "hang around" to makem highnoon longer. We "peacefully" invite you to Pow Wow and revamp situation. We carvem SAGA Joe on top of all tottem poles if he fixem. When maidens become squas, all will want to name first papoose, SAGA Joe, so your name go down in herstory. Makem Blottermann efficient enough to servem maidens who have only highnoon between classes. Put drop of red warpaint on chow-cards and count on this much more work at one chow teepee and same amount less at other chow teepee. Growem new corn-field in unused lot behind in back of chow teepee (nothing sells like corn). We know you will rally to peace-pipe and soon the young braves will have co-ed applause when someone drops a tray.

Thank you for oiling the Waterman building doors. Perhaps with progress we can counter-balance them. Five, perhaps seven, years will pass before we find this necessary?

The Arts Alfred Secunda Makes Debut

By Ken Klonosky

Who is Alfredo Secunda? He's one half of an amusing Jekyll and Hyde act presented by Scope last Friday evening at Arena Theatre. At the evening's conclusion one could say that kingly Dr. Jekyll had stolen the show from the evil Mr. Hyde. Al Secunda upstaged his alter-ego, Alfredo.

Al is an unassuming boy from the Bronx who happens to be one of the most talented men on campus. He displayed his prowess on the flute, clarinet, and saxophone. Al is also the possessor of a fine singing voice. Without accompaniment he gave a remarkably tuneful rendition of Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Mr. Snow." Al also read some verses from William Shakespeare's Measure by Measure and impressed the audience with his robust and fiery speaking voice. Mr. Secunda's ability with the flute was the highlight of the evening. One could have been fully satisfied if he gave a concert with that instrument.

Alfredo Secunda is a fiery Latin from Porto Chico, dedicated to resisting Fidel Castro. The character was comical but the jokes weren't. Given some decent material, Alfredo Secunda could be a unique and successful idea. The humor used was not universal but was esoteric, pertaining to the brothers of Secunda's fraternity. Dr. Scheans of the Sociology Department had a few choice comments and presented some piece of "jabber-worky" to someone for something or other accomplishment.

The night at Arena Theatre was a worthwhile one. Mr. Secunda distinguished himself as a highly versatile and talented performer. His Sammy Davis Jr. type style is certain to prosper with decent material.

April 10 Is High School Day

By Judy Beeber

On April 10th, UVM will resemble a small bustling city. The thirteenth annual High School Day will be held on this date, when 1100-1200 high school juniors and their parents will arrive on our campus. Each year, UVM presents Vermont high school juniors with the opportunity to get acquainted with the school's educational opportunities and a chance to get an idea of what college life is in general.

Much effort has been devoted to make High School Day a successful one. High school students will be given the chance to meet the students and faculty of UVM. First, the students will go to Waterman, where they will receive their registration materials and from there, they will cross the green to Ira Allen Chapel, where they will be addressed by President Rowell. From here, the visitors are on their own to explore the campus. Various panels in almost every field of education offered in the University will be held to give the students an opportunity to get acquainted with UVM's academic programs. Panels will be held in the fields of Agriculture, Education, Engineering, Science and Math, Liberal Arts, Music, Commerce and Economics, Health, Foreign Language, Speech, Political Science, and Home Economics. Certain classes, demonstrations and exhibits will be open to the students to attend.

All in all the high school students should find this experience to be a profitable one.

Joint Concert Is Enjoyable

Sunday, March 21, at 4:00 p.m., the large audience present at Ira Allen Chapel witnessed a most enjoyable concert presented by the University Choir and Orchestra.

The program consisted of selections from Parts II and III of George Frederic Handel's Messiah. The first half of the concert was directed by Mr. Francis Weinrich, choir director, and consisted of choruses, airs, recitatives, and an arioso. Soloists for the first half were Kathy Hancock, Bill Bosworth, Sharon Dunnell, and George Bedell. All four gave excellent performances and a word of praise must be given to the University Orchestra. The Choir must be commended for their excellent performance of "Lift

Danny Newcomb,
Chairman Vermont Conference
(Credit: Scott, SPS)

By Judy Triplett

The University of Vermont has been honored this week in having one of its outstanding seniors named as Intercollegiate Council Student of the Week. The recipient of this distinction is Danforth Newcomb, a political science major in the College of Arts and Sciences. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Newcomb of Norwich, Vermont.

A graduate of Hanover Union High School, in Hanover, New Hampshire, Dan has been active in a host of activities during his college career. As a freshman, he was Chairman of the Freshman Picnic and a member of the debate team which was selected as the most outstanding.

During his sophomore year he had a radio program on WRUV, was a member of the Debate and Discussion Group, and received the Lisman Award for Debate.

As a junior, Dan was Public Relations Director of the Vermont Conference, a member of Student Court, and a member of the Debate Club. He also attained a Dean's List average, an average which he has maintained as a senior.

Also this year he is Chief Justice of Student Court and a member of Boulder, the senior men's honorary. Dan has received honors in political science, and will enter law school in the fall.

He serves on the Governor's Committee on Children and Youth, and is chairman of Vermont Conference.

Vermont Conference is a student activity that is directed to the entire university community as well as to the general public. Dan has expressed the hope that both undergraduates and seniors will participate in this year's conference.

Dan has asked that members of the college community who, after attending this year's conference, are interested in serving next year, leave their names in the Vermont Conference box in Billings Center.

Joyce Herlihy Crowned Military Ball Queen

The Military Ball, held last Friday evening at the Hotel Vermont, was highlighted by the crowning of Queen Joyce Herlihy, a freshman from Jersey City, New Jersey. Joyce was crowned by last year's queen, Barbara Campbell and escorted by Brigade Commander, Herbert Safford. She will serve as Honorary Brigade Commander with the rank of Honorary Colonel for the next year. Four other coeds were chosen Honorary Lieutenant Colonels. They were sophomore Ann Brown from Montreal, escorted by First Battalion Commander, Thomas Whittaker; senior Diane Monti from New Britain, Connecticut, escorted by Second Battalion Commander Kenneth Bailey; sophomore Sylvia DeJager from Ridgewood, New Jersey, escorted by Third Battalion Commander Scott Severance; and freshman Barbara Sadler from Garden City, Long Island, New York, escorted by Fourth Battalion S-1 Nash Lamb.

The five finalists were chosen from among 32 campus beauties who represented their dorms and sororities by a popular vote of the 1100 members of the Cadet Brigade. The Queen was selected at a formal tea held in Memorial Lounge a week before the ball by a panel of judges composed of Mrs. Frances Smith of Magram's

Bert Orr provided music for dancing from 8 to midnight. Dean Rowell and his wife headed the list of dignitaries who attended the gala affair. Other guests included other UVM family members and officers of the local National Guard and Army Reserve units. Several hundred ROTC Cadets and their dates attended, making this the most successful Military Ball ever held at UVM.

When our reporter asked Joyce for her reaction to the crowning, she replied, "The crowning was exciting, it was a thrill I never expected."

up your heads", however this reviewer was disappointed in the "Hallelujah" chorus, the final selection of the first half of the program.

Laureen Coutermarsh, George Bedell, Kay Scott, and Bill Bosworth, soloists for the second half of the program gave very enjoyable performances. The second half of the concert consisted of airs, recitatives, choruses, and a duet from Part III of the Messiah. A special word of praise must be given to the first trumpeter, Clifton Mellen, for his excellent playing of the air "The trumpet shall sound" sung by George Bedell. This half of the program was directed by Mr. James Keene, orchestra director. There was excellent contrast and balance between the orchestra and choir, especially in the three final choruses, "Worthy is the Lamb", "Blessing and honour", and "Amen". In retrospect, it was a concert enjoyed by all.

Mexican Tour Organized

Mr. William Hanson of the Department of Romance Languages announces that he is organizing a six-week Microbus tour of Mexico this summer, beginning in early June and ending in July.

With the desire to give the student a view of a cross-section of Mexico, the tour will go from Mexico City through the colonial cities to the present-day Indian villages, and will include visits to the Aztec-Zapotec Olmec archeological sites of pre-colonial Mexico.

The trip is designed for the student who is curious to see not only a "foreign" country, but a country that is modern — and yet so ancient.

Any student may apply, but the group will be limited to seven persons. The student of Spanish will benefit greatly from the constant exposure to the language and to the people of Mexico. Interested person should contact Mr. Hanson in his office, 317 Waterman Building, before April 15th. The deadline for applications is April 15th.

Cats Open March 28 vs. Seton Hall Will Play 7 Games On 7 Day Southern Trip

Foster and Lapointe: A winning pair - Charlie hopes to aid the Cats this year with his fine arm. (Credit: Austin, SPS)

By Alan N. Rice

The UVM Baseball team faces a tough season ahead of them. If this were a normal year, Coach Ralph Lapointe could look forward to a successful season; however, due to the shortened semester, the Catamount ball-players must play their 15 game season in 19 days. Before the regular season begins, the Cats go southward for their annual trip. They open a 7 game schedule March 28 against Seton Hall and then go on to play Columbia, Fairleigh Dickenson, Georgetown, George Washington, American University, and Long Island University.

PITCHING

Since the Cats must play a game nearly every day, they need not only a good pitching staff but one with great depth. Returning from last year's pitching staff will be Bill Christie, and Charlie Foster. Both proved that they are excellent pitchers; but, they can't pitch every other day; Coach Lapointe will have to depend on the rest of his staff and some of his sophomore talent. Moreover, what will decide how successful the pitching staff is, is the performance of the three sophomore pitchers: Bruce Bovenizer, Len Sleffott and John McCord. Coach Lapointe says that all three have great promise.

If just two of the three can show that they have the stuff to be good varsity pitchers, the Cats pitching staff will be ready to handle the rough schedule ahead of them.

THE INFIELD

The Catamount infield appears to be pretty strong. They have the leading hitter from last year's team, John Tartera, at first base. Tartera hit .367 last season, and handles himself very well around first base. He could in fact be the best first baseman in the East. At second base is Bobby Cronin, who was the regular third baseman last year. Cronin has shown "good progress," and should do a very capable job at his new position. The left side of the infield is still in doubt. Fighting it out for shortstop are Dick Whittier and Bunky Morris.

The job could go either way. A dog fight also exists at third between Jim McKinnon, Rich Aldrich and Billy Copp. The Cats are strong behind the plate with Mike Behan and Rich Aldrich.

THE OUTFIELD

There are a lot of question marks in the outfield. Returning will be Wayne Van Ham, who will hold down one outfield position. In center will be Pete McDonald. Fighting it out for the other outfield spot will be Steve Morse, Frank Foerster, Dave Longley, and Dan Navin.

THE OUTLOOK

Last season the Catamount's strong points were pitching and defense. Their pitching is still good; however, along with the tight schedule, the Cats will be missing star pitcher Carl Martin, lost for the season due to a sore arm. As a result, the pitching situation has to be a question mark, even with 2 or 3 good pitchers. The defense should be great again this year. The Catamounts were sixth in the Nation in fielding last year, and have many of the same ballplayers back. The Cats, who batted a dismal .238 as a team last season, will once again have troubles at the plate.

The Yankee Conference shapes up to be tough once again, Maine, who played in the semi-finals of the NCAA playoffs last year, will have practically the same team back. They will obviously be the team to beat. Other Universities in the YC with strong teams are UConn and UMass. The Cats will certainly have no easy time in Yankee Conference play.

Although this will be the toughest season ever faced by a UVM team, Ralph Lapointe's ball-players will be ready. They have been practicing since January 18, and have been putting out 100% in each practice. They know the odds are against them, but with their desire, plus ability in many spots, this could once again be a successful season for Coach Lapointe and the UVM baseball team.

NOTICE

Applications are now being accepted for next year's Charlie Catamount. All interested persons should submit a letter stating his qualifications to the Pep Committee mailbox in Billings Center by April 10, 1965. All those interested in this position as well as those desiring information on cheerleading next year should attend the regular Pep Committee meeting on April 13, 1965.

INTRAMURAL SPOTLIGHT

By Bob Bloomenthal

With three more events completed, Tau Epsilon Phi has made the greatest improvement in the standings for the intramural all-sports trophy. Led by star tennis player, John Adler, TEP has moved into fifth place in the race for the all-sports trophy. Adler won both the paddleball and squash tournaments for his house as the team took a second place in paddleball and a first in squash. TEP also finished seventh in the intramural ski meet which took place over the past weekend.

Delta Psi, however, continues to hold a commanding lead in the standings, as it leads its nearest competitor, SAE, by over one hundred points.

All-Sports Trophy Standings
(Through Squash)

1. Delta Psi 620.5
2. Sigma Alpha Epsilon 509.5
3. Sigma Nu 491
4. Sigma Phi Epsilon 475.6
5. Tau Epsilon Phi 452.6
6. Sigma Phi 358.5
7. Phi Mu Delta 280.1
8. Alpha Tau Omega 278.3
9. Phi Sigma Delta 265.5
10. Alpha Epsilon Pi 259.3

Paddleball Singles: SAE was the team victor in this tournament, edging TEP by three points with Sigma Phi third. John Adler (TEP) beat Rich Holden (Sigma Phi) in the Finals, 21-16, 21-3.

Squash: TEP placed three men in the semifinals, with Adler defeating Weiss (TEP), 15-5, 15-6, 15-10, for the individual championship. The top three teams in the tourney were TEP, Sigma Nu, and Delta Psi in that order.

Ski Meet: The results of the ski meet were just being recorded at press time. The winner of the meet was Sig Ep, with Sigma Phi second. Other finishers were SAE, Sigma Nu, Delta Psi, Phi Delta Theta, TEP, and Theta Chi, in that order.

CURRENT EVENTS

The volleyball tournament has recently gotten under way with teams competing in three different leagues. Early leaders are SAE in League A, Sig Ep, Sigma Nu, and Phi Mu Delta in League B, and Sig Ep (B) and Hills Building in League C.

John Adler, ECAC Tennis Champ, UVM intramural tennis, paddleball and squash Champion.

EVENTS IN THE FUTURE

There is still a full intramural schedule in the few remaining weeks of school upon returning from vacation as Mr. Strassburg has many activities yet to be completed. Among these events are a badminton tournament, a tennis doubles tournament, a swim meet, and a wrestling tournament. Then, to finish off the year's intramural schedule, is the action-packed softball schedule.

Welcome Future Freshmen

UVM Celebrates 13th Annual High School Day

The University of Vermont's High School Day will celebrate its 13th birthday April 10 and well over 1000 high school students from all over the state are once again expected to help mark the anniversary.

There have been some changes since the first 1000 high schoolers accepted that first invitation to visit their state university to take in classes, laboratories, demonstrations and talk with Vermont students and teachers to see what college had to offer.

The first and succeeding programs down to recent years invited both juniors and seniors, but gradually the numbers participating threatened to overcrowd the University classes and labs, now the invitation goes to high school juniors, and their number alone is nearly as high as the totals who used to come when both juniors and seniors were invited.

During its first few years, High School Day was held in conjunction with a program called "Town and Country Days," which invited the general public to visit the University of Vermont campus for two days of special lectures and exhibits.

The first "T & C Days" program attracted more participants than High School Day, but the latter gained in attendance, while the former gradually declined and eventually was discontinued. Some things have remained basically unchanged since the first High School Day. For one thing, the University makes it clear that high school students need not plan on attending the University of Vermont in order to participate in High School Day. Basic idea is to spend a day at the University and visit classes and labs of special interest to the student, with a view to getting an idea of programs available at the college and university level.

Another High School Day ingredient remaining basically unchanged is the cooperation of principals, guidance counselors and teachers of participating high schools.

Advance registration materials are sent to each school by UVM's Director of Admissions Harold C. Collins, and staff and teachers at the schools contribute a good deal of time getting the materials out and having registration cards returned to Collins. Collins admits High School Day would long since have been a bust without the interest of the high school staffs.

Transportation arrangements are made by each participating high school, and many send bus loads to Burlington for the day. A good many students also arrive with teachers, parents in cars.

Nobody has kept a record of the weather, but by and large it has more often provided sunshine than rain, and Collins and his committee of faculty and staff who help plan UVM's annual big day for Vermont's high school juniors, hope that tradition holds up as High School Day celebrates its 13th birthday on Saturday, April 10.

Pearson To Speak At Founders-Honors Day

When Canadian Prime Minister Lester Pearson speaks at Founders-Honors Day ceremonies in the Patrick Gymnasium on April 30, it will mark one of those rare occasions when Burlington and the University count themselves host to one of the world's great leaders.

Mr. Pearson's distinguished career as a public servant was begun after WW I, and followed service as a lecturer in history at the University of Toronto.

Chosen to become the first Canadian Ambassador to the United States, in 1945, he was named senior advisor to the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations Chapter Conference in San Francisco.

Mr. Pearson subsequently served the UN as president of the seventh session of the General Assembly. In 1957, he was honored with the Nobel Peace Prize for his leadership as chairman of the Security Council in resolving the Suez crisis.

From 1951-58, he served as chancellor of Victoria University of Toronto.

He is the author of books on "Democracy in World Politics," and "Diplomacy in the Nuclear Age."

His Honors Day address will be open to students, faculty, staff and to the public.

The academic procession for the convocation will begin at 10:30, followed by Mr. Pearson's address, and the awarding of honors and prizes. The ceremony will be over by noon.

STUDENT INTEREST BRINGS PEARSON

When Canadian Prime Minister Lester Pearson speaks at the University on Founders-Honors Day on April 30, his appearance may be credited, at least in part, to student interest in hearing Canada's distinguished world statesman.

The invitation by the University to Mr. Pearson to speak at this year's Founders-Honors Day program seemed a natural, since this year marks the first year of the University's new Canadian Area Studies program.

But the first invitation to Mr. Pearson to speak at the University originally was tendered by a student organization, Scope, the cultural committee of the Student Association, which sponsors a number of speakers, panels, films, and other special events during each college year.

The Scope invitation came in 1963 when the University was planning its Canadian Area Studies program, after Scope representative Jeff Sokel discussed with members of the CAS committee the possibility of bringing a major Canadian figure to Vermont.

Mr. Pearson was unable to accept the Scope invitation at that time.

Trustees Promote 25

The Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont today approved promotions for 25 staff members, effective with the 1965-66 academic year, including promotion of eight to the rank of full professor.

The eight are Henry Atherton, dairy manufacturing; Leonidas Jones, English; Herbert McArthur, who is also associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, to professor of English; S. Alexander Rippa, education; Robert Sinclair, agricultural economics; Reuben Torch, zoology; Lester Wallman, neurosurgery; and Fred Webster, agricultural economics.

Promoted from assistant to associate professor were Frank Falck, audiology; Jeremy Felt, history; Robert Fitzsimmons, animal and dairy science; and A. Paul Krapcho and Martin Kuehne, both chemistry.

Promoted from instructor to assistant professor were William Deane, social psychiatry; Martin Flanagan, neurosurgery; William Hodgkin, pediatrics; A.M. Levy, medicine; Marion McKee, and Dorothy Morrow, both pediatrics; Mitsuo Numoto, experimental neurosurgery; Hans Penner, philosophy and religion; Morris Reichlin, experimental medicine; James Simpson, orthopedic surgery; and Stanislaw Staron, political science.

Roger Murray, assistant animal pathologist, was promoted to associate animal pathologist.

All students planning to make application for Medical and/or Dental School during the academic year 1965-1966 should secure the Pre-Application Form from the Dean's Office, College of Arts and Sciences, Waterman 125, by April 21, 1965. It should be completed and returned to the Dean's Office by May 7, 1965.

The Pre-medical and Pre-dental Committee will not write recommendations until this form has been completed.

Trustees Plan Improvements

NEW RESIDENCE HALL PLANNED

The Trustees gave approval for selection of an architect and application for federal planning funds for a new residence and dining hall unit to serve 450 students with a completion target date of September of 1966.

President Rowell said the University's present enrollment outlook makes it apparent there will be a need for the new facility at that time.

NEW FOOTBALL STANDS

The Trustees authorized an expenditure from general funds of the balance necessary to build new bleachers, press box and washroom facilities at Centennial Field.

President Rowell said estimated cost of the total project, on the basis of bids requested earlier by the Trustees, had been set at from $185,000 to $195,000. About $35,000 has been set aside in an athletic facilities fund, and Rowell told the Board it would be possible to handle the improvements in phases, with priority to the bleachers. The present south stands, which are to be replaced, are considered "long overdue for this action," President Rowell said.

The Board suggested the entire project be approached as a single unit, if funds could be found to make this possible, in order to save money.

In another plant action, the Board authorized the University to request bids on construction of new farm facilities on Spear St. Funds for the project were approved by the special session of the Vermont Legislature after a study of the proposal by a special committee.

Family Associates Invite Parents

The University's Family Associates -- an organization of parents of University of Vermont students -- has just sent an invitation to all parents to visit the Vermont campus for an annual spring weekend on Saturday, April 24.

Highlights of the weekend will be a special buffet supper at Simpson Dining Hall, and a lecture demonstration on Contemporary American Art by Prof. Francis Colburn.

Charles Lyman of Burlington, president of the Associates, notes that the weekend has been planned to provide a full evening of activities for parents. "Students are most assuredly welcome to join their parents for the evening events," he said, but added that the program has been designed to provide a busy evening schedule for parents whether or not their sons and/or daughters join them.

The program opens on the 24th with registration at Billings from 10:30 to noon and 1 to 2 p.m.

Arrangements have been made with Saga so that students who wish to do so may invite their parents to take lunch with them in their dining halls at a cost of $.75 for each guest. Students who do not have meal contracts may also take lunch with their parents in the dining halls on the 24th by paying the $.75 guest charge.

Arrangements have also been made for all interested parents to be guests of the University for the home varsity baseball game scheduled with The University of Massachusetts at 1 p.m. at Centennial Field on the 24th. But parents must pick up tickets at registration at Billings.

An informal tea and reception is scheduled for the Fleming Museum from 4 to 5 p.m., and a meeting of the executive board of the Family Associates will take place at 5 in the Marsh Room of Billings.

At 7 p.m. at Simpson Dining Hall, there will be a repeat performance of the buffet supper which proved so popular at last fall's Parent's Weekend. Parents and their guests will be charged $2.50 per person, and $1.50 for children under 12.

University of Vermont students are cordially invited to join their parents for this buffet, at $1.50 for those with meal contracts,

$2.50 for those not having meal contracts. Parents are asked to make reservations by April 19.

Following dinner, Prof. Francis Colburn will give a color-slide-demonstrated lecture on contemporary American art at 8:30 in Southwick Ballroom. Students at Vermont are welcome to join their parents for the lecture, which is free.

Following the lecture and beginning at 9:45 p.m. there will be a movie, "No Man of Her Own," starring Carole Lombard and Clark Gable. Sponsored by the Associates, it is free of charge to parents and their guests.

The Saturday program wraps up with an invitation to parents to visit the Den at Billings for a snack.

Open Houses for parents have been scheduled by St. Anselm's and the Newman Center from 1 to 3 p.m., and though Hillel is not scheduling an open house, it will be serving Kosher food as Saturday, the 24th, will be the last day of Passover Week. Parents are invited to attend with their student sons or daughters.

Fine Arts Festival To Start April 10

"Kalesh Krek," 80x 80, 1964 by Marcel Barbeau in one-man show, January 12-30, 1965 at East Hampton Gallery, New York City.

By S. Plotkin

The 1965 Festival of Fine Arts will present a student art show, the world premier of a new play and in keeping with the presentation of new and controversial developments in Art - an OP Art Show.

The rags affixed to art movements and tendencies are seldom precise . . . The term optical and retinal are only provisional. Optical and retinal responses happen behind our retina, where all optics end.

Two revealing criticisms have been leveled at these works: that they are little more than psychologist's diagrams, and that they resemble projects from classes in graphic design . . . It is surely true that psychologists diagrams are noteworthy precursors of the style.

As is usually the case in appreciation of art, there is more than meets the eye (no pun, intended) in viewing OP Art. The appreciation painting's of four Canadian Artists, Sculptor and Print maker require that you look at them carefully and more than one. Like realistic art, the viewer may at first think he has it.

OP Artists work with a hard edge and unmodulated color. OP Art is, in a sense, a reaction to abstract expressionism, where someone's soul is splashed about," Dr. Jansen has said. The idea of abstract art based on the phenomena of visual perception, and color dates from the 19th century.

Montreal has produced a precise school of abstract art and many artists who are interested in OP. Dr. Jansen has chosen four of these Canadian artists, a sculptor and print maker to present at UVM because their approach to OP is different.

Molinari is characterized by paintings that appear to be repeated awning stripes, but on closer examination are revealed to be subtle and gentle. Barbeau is also a painter of stripes, yet his interest is mainly the movement of line rather than color. Torsignant paints targets, his interest is the tension between concentric circles. The prints and sculptures are more concerned with light. Gaucher used raised impressions which create real shadows. The sculptor, Lercini, is interested in the "splintering of light among the polished blocks of aluminum."

In connection with show, which will begin April 10th, a color study by Albers, to whom all these artists have a conscious or unconscious debt to, will be presented.

OP Art is, from my brief acquaintance with it, fun. I would therefore urge all of you to visit Fleming this week.

Concert Pianist To Give Recital

An internationally-known concert pianist who is an instructor in the University of Vermont department of music will give a piano-recital in Ira Allen Chapel at 8:30 p.m. Friday (April 9).

Mrs. Norma Auchter will perform the four-part program which will include four sonatas by Scarlatti; Sonata, Opus 7 in E Flat by Beethoven; Six Piano pieces, Opus 118, by Brahms; and a Fuguing Set by John LaMontaine.

The Fuguing Set by LaMontaine, a well-known contemporary composer, includes seven pieces which show a modern application of some of the most difficult skills of the composer, including the contrapuntal technique. Contrapuntal technique is the art of combining independent melodies so that they sound equally well apart and together.

LaMontaine was commissioned to compose "From Sea to Shining Sea," which was played at President John F. Kennedy's inaugural in 1960.

Mrs. Auchter has had several years of professional concert piano experience. Critics hailed her Town Hall debut as establishing her "among the top rank of our musical young" and she made numerous subsequent appearances throughout the continent. In June she will appear in concert at Northern Michigan University at Marquette, Mich.

The pianist studied with Carl Friedberg in New York and is listed with "Who's Who in American Women." She makes her home in Colchester where she maintains a private studio of piano teaching. She is chairman of the Burlington chapter of the National Guild of Piano Teachers.

All interested persons are invited to attend the piano recital.

Players Perform

April 22,23,and 24

The University Players is continuing its new policy, first introduced by the successful production of Ibsen's Yerma by producing a new play, The Look of Eagles, authored by a University of Nevada professor, Jerry Crawford. The new play will have its world premiere April 22, 23, and 24, and is being produced by Professor Ronald Willis of the Drama Department. An added feature to this attempt at experimental theatre is that the playwright will be in attendance during the last week of rehearsal and production. The Look of Eagles concerns itself with a group of settlers attempting to build a settlement on a Mississippi island, their idolized leader, and the frontier wanderer who comes into their midsts to destroy the illusion of security that the settlers have formed.

Starring in the production is Steve Stearns as Hamilton, the wanderer and Suzanne Ek as Joanna, the sanctified leader of the settlement. In supporting roles are Richard Donn, Cora Stimpson, Barbara Phillips, Paul Humes, Nancy Beckwith, Janet Hadda, Tony Hall and Santo Padilla. The cast represents a large geographical division: Mr. Padilla comes from Callo, Peru while Miss Hadda derives from Bradford, England and Mrs. Phillips, from London.

The introduction of experimental theatre to the University is a bold advancement for the University Players. The results are eagerly awaited.

French Cultural Center To Stage Variety Show

The French Cultural Center at the University of Vermont will stage its first varieties show on Sunday (April 11).

Dances and music from three periods will be presented, including the 17th century, the 1885 era of Toulouse Lautrec and Moulin Rouge, and the 1920's.

The program is at 8 p.m. in the Southwick Gymnasium and is free and open to the public.

The cast includes 45 students. Dances are built around French folklore, especially Spanish-French frontier gypsies. Two guest artists will also perform. They are Mrs. Marvin Durham, a soprano, and Mrs. Hilda Metcalf, a pianist on Radio Canada.

Mrs. Renee Swift, director of the Center, is producing and directing the show. She also designed the costumes and choreographed the dances.

The French Cultural Center was established at the University last fall to provide students with the opportunity of continuing their learning of French outside the classroom. The Center is open four afternoons a week. In addition there is a special "French" table set up in Simpson dining hall for the evening meal three nights a week.

Shakespeare Festival July 27

When the Champlain Shakespeare Festival opens its seventh annual season on the campus of the University of Vermont this summer, it will offer three plays new to its repertory, and the earliest starting date in the modest history of this festival which played to 95 per cent of its capacity last season.

Festival director Edward J. Feidner has announced the Festival will offer "The Merchant of Venice," "Antony and Cleopatra," and "Henry VIII," in continuous repertory beginning July 27 and continuing through Aug. 31.

The Festival company of young professionals will once again perform in the 250-seat Arena Theatre of the University's Fleming Museum. The theatre features faded plush seats saved from the old Boston Opera House when it was torn down.

Over its first five years, the Festival played nightly during August. Last season, the August repertory was carried over into the first evenings of September. This year's starting date of July 27 marks the first departure from the August 1st-inaugural.

The selection of this year's plays follows the Festival pattern of offering a comedy, tragedy and history each season.

In its inaugural year, the Festival won a regional award of the New England Theatre Conference, and though its audience in any season is limited by its small theatre, it has been counted "one of the seven major Shakespeare festivals of North America."

Many patrons make it a stop between the festivals at Stratford, Conn., and Stratford, Ont.

EDITORIAL...

Students versus faculty -- students versus administration -- faculty versus administration -- these three conflicts were melted away Wednesday afternoon as the "campus leaders" met with faculty advisors, Deans, and Acting President Rowell. We will be the first to admit it and admit that we were wrong. Students have a preconceived notion that the administration is out to get us -- they aren't. There are always rumblings on every campus about "that stuffy old" administration. As we filed into Memorial Lounge of Waterman, we were greeted by the warmest of smiles. There was no falsity or attempt to hid opinion in the two-hour gathering.

The purpose of this editorial is, we hope, to deter rumor by now, has probably spread throughout the campus. President Rowell has no desire to hold back decisions of the University Senate or the Board of Trustees. Several new measures have been approved recently and have spread by word of mouth. The facts were presented to us and we wish to inform the entire University body so that everyone will be aware of these happenings and so that comment and/or criticism (constructive, of course) can be made.

The most important new adoption is that of a four-point grading system which will replace the 101-point system now in effect. The majority of the members of the University Senate approved this system which will go into effect in the Fall. A complete description will appear in next week's paper.

The ROTC department has announced the change in policy from a course required of all men to an elective beginning next semester. The credit change, if there is one, has not been decided, as yet.

As usual, UVM is expanding. Most of the additions have been well publicized and are either in the process of being built or are in an active planning stage. We feel that many of the buildings are quite adequate; the administration is working to satisfy and enhance those areas in need of renovations and additions. The most imminent renovation is that of the cafeteria in Waterman. President Rowell showed us the plans, color scheme, and other features which will increase efficiency and attractiveness while cutting operating expenses. The work will be done in July - for the arrival of our new president.

In response to questions posed by students, we were informed of plans being made for the benefit of the sports program. The last page of this week's paper sports an article about our new basketball coach, Arthur Loche. There is an increase in the number of scholarships available for athletes in the coming years. In short, the administration has accepted the fact that athletics are an integral part of a college campus. In view of this, improvements in the department are being made so that UVM can boast winning teams for all seasons and all sports.

A note of happiness for everyone -- in order to provide for a Thanksgiving recess, the calendar for next year indicates that classes will begin two days earlier than usual. The major complaint in last semester's program was that there was no break in the semester. We hope that this change will alleviate some of the pressure which was felt.

Unlike many of the typical classroom lectures and discussions, the afternoon was exciting and stimulating. The size of our institution is not especially conducive to intimate contact between students, faculty, and administration. We would like to encourage increased interaction. There is a great deal to be gained if only we will take the time to go out of our way and meet the other members of our family.

Letters To The Editor BEWARE

To the Editor:

It is necessary to repeat the caution to the women students: DO NOT GO OUT ALONE AFTER DARK. It is not safe to do so.

There are usually other students on the Redstone Campus, who would walk along to the Library, Billings Center, or other places, and back to Redstone at night. I am sure that men and women students would be glad to be of assistance to each other.

If a woman student must go somewhere alone at night, a taxi-cab fare would be a small investment to make toward one's personal security.

This is an urgent matter. I hope we can prevent the occurrence of incidents like those of last fall.

Sincerely,

Anna Rankin Harris
Dean of Women

Frat Rebels

To the Editor:

Recently there was in The CYNIC an exchange of letters between Kappa Sigma and the editor of The CYNIC concerning the lack of recognition which Kappa Sig received from The CYNIC for their fine Kake Walk performance. Even after this had been brought out into the open the editor of The CYNIC, rather than give credit where credit was due, chose to enter a plea of human failure on his part.

This same lack of recognition confronts fraternities as a whole. Collectively, fraternities are the most influential group with perhaps the exception of the Student Association on the University of Vermont campus. Fraternities not only bring Greek Week and Kake Walk to the UVM campus but also make Homecoming a success and offer a lecture series to all UVM students. Fraternities maintain the student image in the community by carrying out charity drives, giving parties for orphans and doing work projects about the city. In addition to all this, one finds that the overall average of fraternity men is above the all-men's average.

Why, then, must fraternities have to ask for recognition from The CYNIC? Is the answer to the problem merely to work a fraternity man into a high position on The CYNIC staff as suggested by the editor? I hope not, the purpose of The CYNIC is to represent the student body, to report the activities of all the various groups. Human failure is not a valid argument for not having done something but should serve as a basis for improvement. Fraternities do not need tears from The CYNIC, they need action!

All students are cordially invited to the first meeting of the newly formed History Honors Society, this Friday evening, April 9th at 7:30 in the Marsh Room of the Billings Student Center. The subject of discussion is the period of the Renaissance. Two essays will be presented and criticized. A question period will follow.

Intercollegiate Council Elects New Officers

The Intercollegiate Council, made up of representatives from Champlain College, St. Michael's College, Trinity College and the University of Vermont, held elections at the last meeting.

Miss Suzanne Provo of Trinity College succeeds Frank J. Celer of St. Michael's as the new Council Chairman.

Miss Provo, editor of Trinity's paper, "The Triad", is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Provo, Syracuse, N.Y. An English major who plans to enter secondary education, she has also been active in Trinity's Triple Key Society.

Also taking office was Vice-Chairman Stuart Shapiro of UVM, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Shapiro, New York City, N.Y. He is a Psychology major who seeks a future in the medical field. Shapiro is also a member of Tau Epsilon Phi.

Continuing as Secretary-Treasurer is Suzy Brown of Trinity. Miss Brown, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Constantine, Geneseo, N.Y., seeks a future as a secondary school teacher. A business major who likes to toboggan, she has for the past year held the post as secretary of the ICC.

Other business of the meeting included a talk by UVM library director, Mr. Ben Bowman. He asked that the Council emphasize the need for cooperation on the part of those who use the UVM library.

Chief among these problems are theft, book shortage, library space shortage, and displacement of UVM students by non-UVM students. Any student who needs a book from the Vermont library may obtain it by presenting a note from his respective librarian, said Mr. Bowman. However, some students do not follow the customary procedure, but resort to thievery. This, coupled with the nationwide book shortage, places severe handicaps on those honest students who desire to use the library. Mr. Bowman concluded his remarks with mention that he believes there is far too much socializing going on at the library.

Plans of the Council for the future include continuation of the ICC Student of the Week and the revival of the ICC calendar.

TRUSTEES APPROVE RESEARCH GRANTS

Research and teaching programs of the University of Vermont received another boost Saturday when the University's Board of Trustees acknowledged 12 grants totaling over $153,000. These included:

A grant of $10,500 from the National Science Foundation for instruction in the Department of Psychology Undergraduate Research Participation Program under the direction of Dr. Donald Forgays;

From the Associated Industries of Vermont, $10,000 for instruction in the 1965 Economic Education Workshop under the direction of Dr. Raymond Phillips;

From the National Vitamin Foundation, Inc., $3,340.04 for research in the Department of Home Economics under the direction of Dr. Ellen Morse;

From the National Science Foundation, $27,000 for research in the Department of Physics under the direction of Dr. Thomas Sachs;

From the U.S. Public Health Service, $26,744 for research in the Department of Pharmacology under the direction of Dr. Julian

Jaffe;

From the Vermont Heart Association, $1,650 for research in the Department of Surgery under the direction of Dr. William Stahl;

From the U.S. Welfare Administration, $4,376 for the Home Economics Day Care Conference under the direction of Dr. J. Anthony Samenink;

From the U.S. Public Health Service, $4,900 for a Predoctoral Fellowship for Patricia Ann Stone under the direction of Dr. Donald Forgays;

From the U.S. Office of Education, $14,897 for the Work-Study Program in the Financial Aid Department under the direction of Mr. Allen Walker;

From the U.S. Public Health Service, $8,294 for instruction in the Department of Psychiatry under the direction of Dr. Thomas Boag.

From the U.S. Public Health Service, $25,920 for instruction in the Department of Psychiatry under the direction of Dr. Thomas Boag.

From the Lederle Medical Faculty Awards, $16,080 for instruction in the Department of Medicine.

Civil Rights College Fad?

To the Editor:

Some time ago an article appeared in The CYNIC which expounded upon a general lack of interest shown for the recent student protest march extolling the unfortunate death of Rev. Reeb. I strongly feel that this so called "apathy" on the part of the student body is far more commendable than it was made to appear. To elucidate, I apologetically must state that much of the meaningful devotion formerly associated with civil rights movements has been drowned in a sea of college fadism. If two hundred of my fellow students felt compelled to take part in that recent demonstration I hope that it served to alleviate their moral outrage rather than to elevate their social status through the medium of conformity.

Sincerely,

Howard Savin, '68

The Joint Committee on Human Rights will be having its first organizational meeting this coming Monday, April 12 in Billings' North Lounge. Debaters Loaf In Pomeroy As West Point Approaches

By Robin Frost

Although debate results have been printed in the CYNIC for some time, few students know who the debaters are. The purpose of this article is to introduce them by relating the happenings on a typical afternoon in the debate lounge, rooms 304-304A Pomeroy Hall.

The date is Monday, April 5. The time is 4 P.M. You, the reader, are walking up the winding staircase in Pomeroy.

The fact that there are seventeen debaters and three coaches on third floor first becomes apparent as you hear Dr. Huber (Doc), one of the best-known coaches on the debate circuit, working on one of the planks of the affirmative plan with UVM's top team, Norman Snow (Norm), a junior and Burlingtonian, is President of the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club, his colleague is Carmen Wessner (Carm), a senior from Manchester and Vice President of the club. Carm is also secretary of the national debating honorary organization Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha. Three weeks ago Norm and Carm went to the Regionals tournament in New York, to which each school in our geographic region sent its top team. Only five teams qualify to go on to Nationals at West Point in April. Success in the form of an 11-5 win-loss record was theirs, success gained only through long hours of research and argumentation. Congratulations and on to West Point, Norm and Carm!

In room 304 is a soda-filled refrigerator for refreshing tired throats after debates, each of which lasts 65 minutes and requires each debater to speak for 15. There are also several typewriters, large file boxes for carrying evidence cards, attache cases, and piles of magazines, government pamphlets, and books. All contain information on the national intercollegiate debate topic which is Resolved: that the federal government should establish a national program of public work for the unemployed.

Carl Lisman, a sophomore from Burlington, and Sharon Call (Shay), a senior from Springfield, are the second of the three teams in the Big Six, or top six debaters. At present Shay, who is club Secretary, is working on a new filing system for evidence cards. Carl has just managed to get 416 pieces of evidence from a four-page booklet. Carl and Shay placed fifth with a 4-2 record at American University last weekend.

The third team in the Big Six is Dave Webster, Burlington, and Dave Waite, Springfield, both juniors. Dave 'n Dave have just reviewed the negative positions of the teams they met at AU last weekend and are wandering into the lounge to play cribbage. All work and no play can make a dull debater.

Dissecting the book Unwanted Workers is Mike Schoenfeld, a junior from New York City. Having debated only since January 12 of this year, Mike has piled up a 14-7 win-loss record against varsity teams. His colleague is Robin Frost (Robbie), a freshman from Haydenville, Mass. Manning a typewriter, Robbie is retyping a stack of cards over which she spilled a cup of coffee the day before.

Sophomore Bob Bullard, Barre, has been working with Mike and Robbie this semester as a three-man unit. Mike and Robbie went to Brooklyn College three weeks ago and Mike and Bob were at Siena College in Albany last weekend. The 20-7 record of the Triumvirate has helped to bring seven trophies and three plaques back to UVM.

Bob is now helping George Shapiro, a sophomore from New York City, with the working of objections to various plans. George's partner is Ruth Frost, a West Hempstead, New York sophomore who is in the lounge playing two-man bridge with coach Miss Lynn Baier. Last weekend George and Ruth went to C.W. Post College in New York. Results are not in as yet.

Director of Debate, Robert Carr is also in the lounge talking debate with the other team which went to C.W. Post. Steve Adler is a senior from Arverne, New York, and Bob Brooks (Brooksie), a Trumbull, Connecticut junior.

Burlingtonian Nick Danigelis, a freshman, is giving one of the speeches for which he was awarded third place at the New England Forensic Conference several weeks ago. The speech is entitled "Lady Bird Chiro's in the Garden of the Great Society." Nick's partner is Barry Messinger, a senior from New York City. Barry is presently reading the ballots from the team's debates at Siena while humming "Goldfinger" to himself.

Junior Craig Nelson, Greenville, Maine, is reading the "Economic Report of the President." A few weeks ago Craig debated at N.E.F.C. with Dave Waite, the club's Treasurer. Both were awarded certificates for excellent debating. Henry Wellman (Puffer) who usually debates with Craig, is sprawled on a couch, helping Brooksie work out the details on a new cybernation-megalopolis-time lag case.

You have now met the seventeen debaters and three coaches whose success in debating is known throughout the debate circuit. None of them are 100% certain just why they debate. The challenge, the people, and the traveling are all part of the reason for these students being on third floor Pomeroy on this particular day.

Spring Concert

The seventy-piece University of Vermont Concert Band will present its Annual Spring Concert on Sunday, April 25th, 4:00 p.m. at the Ira Allen Chapel. The concert is the culmination of the band's annual Spring Tour which will take it to the Opening Day of the '65 World Fair and to high schools in New York, New Jersey and Vermont.

A feature of the band's presentation will be the performance of a special work commissioned by the University for this season's performance. The composition "Spectrum for Accordion and Band," by Richard Oliver explores the tonal possibilities of the Cordovox, an accordion with many of the tonal possibilities of the electronic organ, and concert band. Mr. Oliver, a composer and arranger of some forty published works for chorus, band and ensemble, is a former student of famed French composer-teacher Nadia Boulanger. Miss Laureen Coutermarsh, a music major at the University will be soloist.

Dr. Frank H. Siekmann is director of the band. The concert is without admission charge and is open to the public.

6 Of 10 Choose UVM First

A survey of students at the University of Vermont has indicated that this oldest Vermont institution of higher learning was the first choice of 69 per cent of the freshman men and women admitted two years ago, and first choice of better than 70 per cent of this year's freshman class.

The figures were termed "reassuringly impressive from several points of view" by Acting University President Lyman S. Rowell.

Nearly 25 per cent of freshmen surveyed two years ago indicated that the University of Vermont was their only choice, another 44.2 per cent indicated it as their first choice; 24.12 per cent, second; and 5.37 per cent third choice.

The figures for the current freshman class count 23.8 per cent making Vermont their only choice, 46.8 per cent their first choice, 22.1 per cent second; and 5.7 third choice.

President Rowell noted the figures "show some interesting patterns" when responses from Vermont students surveyed are separated from responses by non-resident students. (The University of Vermont has traditionally had a high non-resident enrollment, and the percentages this year show about 55 per cent resident and 45 per cent non-resident enrollment.)

More than 80 per cent of Vermont residents among freshmen sampled two years ago indicated the University was their first choice, and 47 per cent of those sampled listed Vermont as their only choice. At the same time, 57.9 per cent of non-residents admitted two years ago indicated Vermont as their first choice; 3.52 per cent of non-residents made Vermont their only choice.

This year, 74.8 per cent of Vermont residents made their state university their first choice, and 37 per cent of the total made it their only choice. At the same time, more than 63 per cent of non-residents admitted to this year's freshman class made Vermont their first choice; 3.6 per cent of the total their only choice.

President Rowell noted that the University grants admission to every qualified Vermont resident who applies by March 1.

He said the survey showed that 43.8 per cent of Vermont residents and over 77 per cent of non-residents admitted two years ago had been offered admission by from two to seven colleges.

Over 36 per cent of this year's in-state freshmen, and over 78 per cent of this year's non-resident freshmen had been offered admission by from two to seven colleges.

The survey two years ago consisted of 1061 students with no previous college attendance out of a total of 1092 who entered the University. This year's survey included 1000 out of 1103.

Princeton Scholar Speaks

Dr. P.C. Hammond

The Goodrich Classical Club is pleased to announce the second speaker in the Goodrich Lecture Series. On Tuesday, April 13, at 8 p.m. in Votey Lecture Hall Rev. Dr. Phillip Hammond will speak. Dr. Hammond is a camel-riding Methodist clergyman from Princeton, N.J., who speaks Arabic. When Dr. Hammond is not teaching at Princeton Theological Seminary, where he is assistant professor of the Old Testament, he is directing a team of archeologists at the sites where Bible history was made. He recently returned from his latest expedition in the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan, where he made archeological history by directing the first "dig" ever undertaken at Hebron in modern times. Dr. Hammond will talk about his work as well as show many interesting slides.

54 ANNUAL SOUTHERN TRIP COMPLETED

CATS POST 2-4 MARK. VICTORIOUS AGAINST AMERICAN AND GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY. LOSE TO SETON HALL, GEO WASHINGTON, COLUMBIA, AND FARLEIGH DICKINSON.

TEAM SHOWS PROMISE-POOR FIELDING COSTLY

As the 54th Annual Southern Trip drew to a close, the outlook for Coach Lapointe's 1965 baseball squad to have another winning season became considerably better. Although the Cats won only two of their six contests, many of the team's problems seemed well on their way to being solved. Wayne Van Ham, Bob Cronin, Rick Aldrich and Pete MacDonald all had a good week at the plate, and should, along with John Tartera, last year's leading hitter, give the Cats a solid offensive punch. MacDonald was the top hitter for the trip, compiling a .456 batting average for five games, while Cronin led in R.B.I.'s with 6.

During the trip, it became increasingly evident that the team's record will hinge on the performance of its pitching staff, but here again the outlook has brightened considerably. Captain Al Foster and Len Sheflott both turned in fine pitching performances and should form the nucleus of this year's mound corps. Foster allowed only three earned runs in eleven innings while Sheflott struck out 14, and did not give up a run in the eight innings which he worked. Three other pitchers: Bill Christie, John McCord, and Bruce Bovenizer looked good at times and should improve considerably by opening day to give Vermont a reasonably strong group of pitchers.

Fielding Needs Attention

The Cats most glaring weakness was in the fielding department, as they committed numerous errors which led to twelve unearned runs, and cost Vermont two victories. Fielding is, however, something which can be improved through constant practice, and Coach Lapointe should have this problem pretty well worked out by the time the regular season rolls around.

Seton Hall

In the first game against Seton Hall, which marked the first time that the Cats had been outdoors this season, the Green and Gold lost by a narrow 6-4 margin. Al Foster and Bruce Bovenizer made a creditable performance on the mound, allowing only four earned runs, but two unearned runs by Seton Hall along with a fine pitching performance by Bill Matuza, one of the nation's leading hurlers last year spelled the difference. Trailing 6-2 in the ninth inning, Vermont rallied for two runs on a walk, an error, and singles by Pete MacDonald and Wayne Van Ham, but the rally ended, and the Cats went down to their first defeat of the season. Van Ham and MacDonald each accounted for two of Vermont's six hits in the contest.

George Washington University

In its second outing of the season, the Cats seemed unable to come up with the clutch hits, as they left 12 men stranded on base and fell before George Washington University 7-4. Pete MacDonald had his best day at the plate with a 4 for 4 performance, but it was not enough as sophomore starter John McCord suffered the loss in his pitching debut.

American University Georgetown University

Vermont came back strong the next day with a double victory, defeating American University, and Georgetown University in successive afternoon games. In the first game, the pitching of Len Sheflott just about told the story, as he blanked American 5-0, allowing only two hits and fanning 13 batters. Rick Aldrich led the Cat hitting attack with 3 singles, while Sheflott added two more to help his own cause. In the second game, Captain Al Foster put on a pitching show of his own allowing only one run and two hits before he was relieved, after the 7th inning. The big story, however, was a sudden explosion by the Vermont batters which led to 19 runs on twenty hits. Wayne Van Ham topped the Vermont hitting with 2 singles and a home run, while Cronin, MacDonald, and Morris chipped in 3 singles apiece. The final score was an embarrassing 19-2.

Columbia University

The next game was a complete reversal of the last, as Columbia walloped the Cats 13-2. Columbia took a 4-0 lead in the first inning and just kept rolling up the score as Vermont made numerous fielding errors, and could manage only 6 base hits, two of which were doubles by sophomore Rick Aldrich. Probably the highlight of the very dismal game was a chance to see how All-American football player Archie Roberts handled himself on the baseball diamond. Roberts proved himself to be probably the finest shortstop that Vermont will face this season. Not only is he an excellent fielder, but he also came up with three of the solidest hits that the Cat's pitching staff gave up on the entire trip.

Fairleigh Dickinson University

In the final game, Vermont lost in its bid to play .500 ball on the trip by dropping a 3-1 decision to Fairleigh Dickinson University. Dennis O'Brien and Don McGoe were very effective in limiting the Cats to only 2 base hits, triples by Van Ham and Foster, but once again it was poor fielding that made the difference. Five errors, all of which came with men on base, led to 4 unearned runs and forced John McCord, who pitched a fine game, to suffer his 2nd straight loss.

Postmen Begin Season

(Credit: Audio-Visual)

By Richard Polish

The UVM track team, under the direction of coach Archie Post, appears to be headed for a rough outdoor season. With virtually the same team that posted only one victory against Union during the indoor season, the outlook is not bright. Lack of depth, one of the main reasons for the dismal winter record, will again be a factor in limiting the team's chances this spring. Without the aid of scholarships and with very little student support at home meets, it is no wonder that only a handful dedicate themselves to the grueling routine of constant practice that is so necessary for success in track. However, there are a few bright spots in any gloomy picture. One of these bright spots is team mainstay Don Mayland. Don has been consistently polevaulting over fourteen feet in practice. He is also the number one man in the high hurdles and the high jump. Another standout is Carl Frattini, a consistent 20 footer in the broad jump and also the number one man in the hop step and jump. Other UVM hopes lie in Walt Stonell in the mile, Kent Hankin and Layne Higgs in the half mile, Vin De Cesaris and Peter Nolan in the quarter mile, Larry Perlmutter in the 100 and 220 sprints and the broad jump, and Argie Economou in the 120 high hurdles. George Oelze and Tom Whittaker are the mainstays in the hammer throw and the Cats are counting on Pete Stickney in the discus and shot put.

The first meet is April 17 against a strong Bowdoin squad whom the Cats upset last year. The chances of doing it again are doubtful.

Bright Hopes For Netmen

By Richard Polish

With probably the best team in the University of Vermont's history, this year's tennis team has excellent prospects for an outstanding season. The squad, under the direction of coach Fred Marston, has an excellent chance of capturing every dual match and the Yankee Conference Championship, and should place very high in the Eastern tournament in which sixty to seventy teams compete. The team has four extremely high quality players in John Adler, Dick Holden, Wynn Marston and Paul Ryan. Adler led the team in winning the fall E.C.A.C. tournament by capturing the individual championship, but the top four are so evenly matched, that the rankings for the coming season have not as yet been decided, for any one of these top four could beat another on a given day. The team's excellent depth was exhibited last fall when the bottom three of Richie Sacks, Al Secunda and Dutch Curtis won every match in a dual contest with Hunter College while the top four were successfully competing in the E.C.A.C.'s. The team should overpower Union, Middlebury, St. Lawrence, Clarkson, U.R.I. and U.N.H. in dual matches, which are comprised of six singles and three double matches. It is remarkable that U.V.M. is represented by such a strong team without the benefit of a single scholarship. However, one cannot deny that the money provided for indoor tennis courts in the Gutterston Field House had been extremely useful in allowing the players to start practicing quite a few weeks before they normally would have been able to.

UVM APPOINTS NEW BASKETBALL COACH

The assistant basketball coach of New York University has been chosen to become the new head coach at the University of Vermont.

Arthur K. Loche (Lou-sh), 29, replaces John C. (Fuzzy) Evans who stepped down last month after guiding the Vermont basketball fortunes since 1940.

Acting President Lyman S. Rowell said Loche's appointment will be recommended to the University's Board of Trustees at their May meeting. In addition to coaching, Loche will teach in the men's department of physical education. Rowell said that Loche was the unanimous choice of the athletic council committee chosen to find a successor to Evans.

A native of New York City, Loche has seen the game as both a player and a coach. He played four years of varsity basketball at Commerce High School in New York City and was co-captain as a senior. As an undergraduate at New York University, he was a three-year member of the varsity and captained the Violets as a senior. He played a major factor in leading NYU to a third place finish in the Nit during his sophomore year and a fourth place finish in the 1960 NCAA championship. He was a teammate of Tom (Satch) Sanders who is now playing with the Boston Celtics.

After receiving his B.A. degree from NYU in 1962, he was invited to return to his alma mater as assistant coach to Lou Rossini and to coach the freshmen. The Violets took third and fourth places respectively in the 1962 and 1963 NCAA playoffs and have finished fourth for the past two years in the NIT.

As a senior, Loche was the recipient of the Lancaster Memorial Trophy, annually awarded to the best defensive player on the team.

He has spent three of the past four summers coaching basketball in Puerto Rico and last year was named Coach of the Year for leading a team that had finished sixth in 1963 to a second place finish.

A Navy veteran, Loche is married. He is presently working on his Master's.

At Vermont, Loche is replacing a man who guided the Catamounts to 261 victories during his 23 years as head coach and at the time of his resignation only one other active coach in New England had won more games. Evans will continue to teach in physical education.

Loche becomes Vermont's 11th head coach since intercollegiate basketball was started in 1900. Vermont did not field teams from 1908-1920 and for two years during World War II.

During the past season, the Catamounts were 7-13. Loche will inherit eight lettermen.

Kake Walk directors for 1966 have recently been announced. Each of the three new directors has been promoted from a position as assistant director for this year's Kake Walk.

Appointed as Financial Director is David Cohen of Phi Sigma Delta. Dave is a psychology major, and intends to go on to medical school.

The new Publicity Director is Vincent DeCesaris, a brother of Delta Psi Fraternity. Vince is a math major in pre-med.

Bob Ostrom, Production Director for next year's festivities, is a brother of Sigma Phi Epsilon. Bob is a political science major, and plans to go on to law school.

The four assistant directors will be selected by fraternity application, and will be named in October.

Our three enthusiastic directors share the hope that the 69th Annual Kake Walk will be the traditional "biggest and best yet."

We salute this year's directors, Steve Watson, Steve Slack, and Cal Walker, for a job magnificently done, and for giving us a Kake Walk we'll never forget.

As Vince said, "It's going to be tough to out-do the job the boys did this year," but if it can be done, we'll bet on Vince, Bob, and Dave to do it.

"Look Of Eagles" Debuts On Thursday April 22

The Arena Theatre on the University of Vermont campus will be the scene of the world premiere of a new play, "The Look of Eagles," on April 22.

Written by Jerry L. Crawford, an assistant professor of English, speech and drama at Nevada Southern University, the play will run for three nights -- April 22-24 -- and the playwright will be on hand for the final three days of rehearsals and the three performances.

Sponsored by the speech department in conjunction with the University Players, the play is directed by Ronald Willis, a member of the speech and drama faculty.

"The Look of Eagles" tells the story of a small party of eight pioneers moving westward during the early part of the nineteenth century. Led by the young widow of their first leader, the group decides to settle permanently on an island in the middle of the Mississippi and to build a church and later a settlement to serve as a beacon and haven for others making the difficult trek into the new land.

Two strangers come into camp one day and the core of the play involves the conflict between one of them and the widow.

"Crawford explores man's reactions to human frailty, both his own and other people's. All of the characters represented on stage face the unrelieved problems of their own existence. Collectively, they must try to survive the oncoming winter without a sure knowledge of what that winter will bring while individually they must live with the memory of past errors and with the continuing pain of their own crippling disabilities. Within this context, Crawford pays particular attention to the qualities of the true leader when contrasted to the jaded cynicism of the disillusioned romantic," says Willis.

The third of Crawford's full-length plays to be produced by a university group, this will mark the first time any of his works has been seen in the east.

He will arrive in Burlington on Monday and will consult with the cast and the director for whatever adjustments seem desirable in the production.

University Approves New Point System

By Judy Beeber

Starting with the fall semester, 1965, for the first time in UVM's history there will be a switch from the conventional grading of students in numbers to the use of the point system.

Last April, a committee was appointed by the Dean of Faculty to look into the effect of the decision to count all failing grades in the calculation of graduation averages; to examine our present grading system; and how our practices of awarding honors at graduation compares with other schools. Members of the committee were Prof. Crowell of the Physics Dept., who was acting chairman, Prof. Bogorad of the English Dept., Prof. Schoonmaker of the Math Dept., Dr. Torch of the Zoology Dept., Prof. Ripa of the Education Dept., and Prof. Little from the Dept. of Agriculture.

During its deliberations, the Committee gave thought to the question of the purposes of grades. Grades are in the first place intended to report to the student, his parents and the University the instructor's evaluation of the quality of his performance in a given course. A second purpose is to furnish information which can be used to determine an overall estimate of performance, i.e., to compute an average, which then serves as a basis for deciding whether or not to award a degree, honors, etc. These two purposes are not necessarily best served by the same grading system. A system which provides a satisfactory average does not require as refined a basis for individual grades as is convenient and possible for giving information to the student.

The main reason why this point system is being innovated is because our present system tends to hurt the very good students by assigning grades which seem low compared to those at other schools. With the new point system, the quality of the best students will show more quickly and also by this system, failing grades will not count as heavily as in the past. The majority of schools use the letter or quality point system and therefore our system often is unfamiliar to graduate schools and employers. This is part of the reason why so few students have received fellowships and other national awards.

Our present system also makes it difficult for students to acquire honor awards. Over the past ten years only 2% of our graduating students have received honors of cum laude or better. It is surmised, that under the new system, at least 10% will get honors.

The grades for the undergraduate college will be reported on a letter basis of A, B, C, D, and F. Pluses and minuses may be added to the grade to indicate the student's performance more precisely. In computing the overall average the letter grades are assigned points as follows: A=4 B=3, C=2, D=1, F=0. The average will be weighted by credit hours. In order to attain a Bachelor's Degree, one must have an overall average of 1.70 in all the courses taken. Points needed in the overall average for honors are as follows: summa cum laude -3.70, magna cum laude -3.50, cum laude -3.30.

The present system can approximately be correlated with the new one. Grades of 90-100 correspond to A, 80-89 to a B, 70-79 to a C, 60-69 to a D and 45-59 to an F.

There is no assurance that this new system will be successful, but it seems to solve some of the problems already mentioned and is in accord with the grading systems all over the country.

QUIET AREA TO STUDY?

Acting upon the request of many students, the UVM Student Association has made arrangements for a supplementary study area in the Waterman dining hall. Students have expressed their desire for a quiet area in which to study, and, to meet this need, the Waterman dining hall has been put into service. There is, however, one stipulation: as stated, the students have asked for QUIET study areas, and, therefore, if ABSOLUTE QUIET is not maintained, this area will be immediately closed.

The Waterman dining hall will be available for study from 7:30 P.M. on Monday through Thursday nights from now through the end of finals.

These study periods will be monitored, and, if ABSOLUTE QUIET is not maintained, the monitors reserve the right to close the dining hall without notice. Your cooperation in maintaining silence will be essential to the continuation of these study periods.

Heller Exhibits Abstracts At Fleming Museum

A show of 36 drawings by Peter Heller, instructor in French at UVM, opened at the Fleming Museum on Wednesday, April 14. Done in pen and ink, and ink and wash, all black and white with occasional touches of color, they are neither representative in the conventional sense, nor abstract or "non-objective."

Mr. Heller believes in what you feel. The drawings are efforts to give form to emotional states. "Images" there may seem to be, but not of recognizable objects. Rather they are visual equivalents, or symbols, or inner realities, things beyond words and literal delineations.

Only in two instances is the outer world specifically referred to -- a pair of drawings relating to the murder of Reverend James Reeb in Selma.

Monday evening, April 19th, at 8 p.m., Mr. Heller will talk informally about his drawings and answer questions under the heading of "Speculations on Form." Students and faculty are invited. Coffee will be served.

The exhibit will continue through May 5.

Future Teachers

By Mary Ellen Anderson

The Education Department at the University of Vermont feels that students in Teacher Education require an additional screening program in order to raise its standards. Beginning with the Class of 1968, all students expecting to prepare for public school teaching must be formally admitted to Teacher Education.

Application is to be made at the end of the freshman year or during the first semester of the sophomore year. To qualify for admission to this program, applicants must present satisfactory academic records, perform satisfactorily in both writing and speech test, be endorsed by at least two faculty members, and may have to be recommended by an interviewing committee.

All freshmen in all colleges expecting to qualify may take the writing test in Votey Hall (Room 101) on either April 19 or 20 at 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. This test will reveal such things as the student's extent of vocabulary, logical expression of ideas, paragraph organization, and sentence structure. Plans are now being made for a test of oral expression. Information will soon be available concerning this.

The new procedures and requirements for admission to Teacher Education at UVM are expected to 1) assure that only qualified students enter teaching, 2) aid in early identification of students who expect to prepare for teaching, and 3) bring about improvements in the advisement and counseling of students in Teacher Education.

Applications and further information may be obtained from the Dean's Office at 143 Waterman.

"Playtimers" Tour Vermont And Canada

A "magic window" that wouldn't work, a lost list at customs, one flat tire at 7 a.m., none of these obstacles prevented a determined group of University of Vermont students from traveling more than 1500 miles during the spring recess as part of the Playtimers Tour of Vermont and Canada.

"And we weren't late for a single performance either," laughed senior David Storti, who directed the Playtimers' production of "Puss in Boots."

The magic window was a curtain which refused to cooperate after several days of action and had to be manipulated by hand.

Since the company was giving two performances in Canada, they thought it would be helpful to leave a listing of props with customs but unfortunately upon returning to the same station the list had been misplaced and it was necessary to awaken a customs official at home and have him come down to his office to locate the slip.

"These were minor problems and actually gave us all a good laugh," said Storti. "Perhaps the funniest bit of the whole trip involved our make-up. Since we often had to travel a distance before our first performance which was always in the morning, we were all up by 6:30 a.m. at the latest and put on our face make-up before going to breakfast. Bonnie Murray of Barre wore gray, facial make-up and a few heads turned when she walked into the dining room."

The Playtimers gave a total of 14 performances and played to nearly 4500 youngsters from grades one through six during the tour. When time allowed, members of the cast mixed with the students after a performance and invited youngsters back stage.

"It was a hard trip but I think we all enjoyed it -- we must have because we were still all speaking to one another when we got back," said Storti.

Talk Given

The chairman of the speech department at the University of Vermont delivered the main address Friday morning at the annual meeting of the Speech Association of Eastern States.

Robert Huber gave a talk entitled "Speech: Theory of Performance" to nearly 500 members attending the three-day session in New York City.

In his address, Professor Huber pointed out there are three shrines of worship in teaching today -- shrines of research, knowledge, and scholarship. He advocated adding a fourth shrine -- master teaching.

"It is being brought to our attention more and more and many educators are expressing alarm that undergraduate teaching is becoming a lost art and as a result the undergraduate student is becoming neglected," said Huber in his talk.

Cadet Of The Month

University of Vermont, April 9, Cadet S/Sgt Richard W. Flood, Class of 1967, son of Mr. & Mrs. E. James Flood, 57 Bretton Road, Yonkers, N.Y., has been selected as the Vermont ROTC Brigade's Cadet of the Month for March, 1965 according to information released today by Cadet Col. Herbert D. Safford, commander of the Cadet Brigade.

In a letter of commendation presented to Cadet Flood, Colonel L. G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, cited his outstanding knowledge and proficiency in leadership, drill, military bearing, and world affairs. Colonel Robinson noted that Cadet Flood's selection distinguished him among the 919 basic course cadets enrolled in the ROTC program at UVM. His other activities include the campus radio station (WRUV), Men's Residence Hall Assembly, the University Choir, and Student Law Association.

Local merchants join in honoring Vermont Cadets of the Month. Gift certificates, clothing, and services amounting to approximately $50, are provided each monthly winner. In addition, merits are awarded by the cadet brigade for outstanding performance.

Fisher To Speak On Shakespeare

A talk by an engineer who has made himself known in Shakespearean circles throughout North America will be the opening feature of the University of Vermont's Shakespeare Quadricentennial Celebration Sunday evening (April 19) at 8 p.m. in the Bailey Library.

The engineer is Sidney T. Fisher of Montreal, and his informal talk, open to the public will open a two-week exhibition of outstanding items selected from his collection of Shakespeare books. The exhibition will be on view through May 3.

For the past 10 years the Fisher collection, which has been described as "one of the most important private collections of Shakespeare books in North America, and, indeed, in the world," has been on view every summer at the Stratford Shakespeare Festival in Stratford, Ontario, Canada. Visitors have been able to see at close range such treasures as the First Folio of Shakespeare's works, collected by two of Shakespeare's loyal fellow actors, Heminges and Condell, and printed in 1623. This most valuable book in the collection, which will be on view at UVM, provides the only source for 18 of Shakespeare's 37 plays.

The collection also includes the other three "Folio" editions printed in the seventeenth century. It boasts such famous source books for Shakespearean plots as Raphael Holinshed's CHRONICLES OF ENGLAND, and many books illustrating the life and interests of Shakespeare's times. Notable among these is a copy of Foxe's BOOK OF MARTYRS, filled with what one student has called "naïvely horrific woodcuts" and "scream-by-scream accounts of torture and execution." Manuscripts of various kinds, maps, and similar items are also included in the collection.

Fisher has found time to pursue his interest in Shakespeare and book-collection despite a busy engineer's life that keeps him commuting by jet to London and even to India.

At the close of the exhibition, on May 3, Fisher will again speak, this time about his own research regarding Elizabethan maps of London. The talk, also open to the public and also in Bailey Library, will be at 8 p.m.

ROTC Offers Scholarships

University of Vermont, April 13, Colonel L. G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science at the University, today announced receipt of an allocation of two Army Reserve Officers Training Corps Scholarships to be awarded to selected UVM sophomores who have applied for the Advanced ROTC program starting in the fall. Two alternate nominees are also to be selected.

Department of the Army released details of the scholarship program last week. Ultimately, 5500 ROTC scholarships will be in effect. This first year, the total will be 1000; 600 will be awarded to next year's juniors, 400 will be awarded to incoming freshmen. Scholarships are available only at institutions offering the four-year ROTC program. Scholarships are not available in the newly announced two year ROTC program.

Authorized by Public Law 88-647, the scholarship program provides for payment of full tuition, fees, textbooks, travel to and from campus (once), and a retainer of $50.00 a month. At UVM, this would place the value of the scholarship for out-of-state students in excess of $4500 while in-state students would glean over $2500. In addition to high motivation for military service, scholarship applicants now at the University must be in the upper-third of the ROTC Cadet Brigade and in the upper-half of their university class. Selection will be made by a board, the membership of which will be drawn from the Military Science Department, other University agencies, and the Cadet Brigade. Those selected will receive final notification of scholarship award in late June.

Four year scholarship awards will not be administered locally. Students receiving four-year Army scholarships will be centrally selected and then permitted to attend any institution of their choice, providing that it offers a four-year ROTC program. Those who desire information on this phase of the scholarship program for the coming academic year should communicate directly and immediately with the Commanding General, First U.S. Army, ATTN: AHFAG-RC, Governors Island, New York 10004.

1200 Attend H.S. Day

By Andrea Gaborsky

Saturday, April 10, was the thirteenth annual High School Day at UVM. About 1200 high school juniors throughout Vermont attended.

The day-long program opened in Ira Allen Chapel with a speech by acting president Lyman S. Rowell. There followed talks on agriculture, education, engineering, liberal arts, nursing, social science, home economics, and other fields. There were also demonstrations and exhibits, sample college classes, tours, and discussions on college admission and financial aid. The program closed with a concert by the band in the chapel.

The day was planned to give high school students an opportunity to learn more about college courses, discover their educational goals, and find out more about occupations and professions. It was open to students thinking of other colleges, as well as those considering UVM.

49th Meeting Held At Atlantic City

The University of Vermont was well-represented from Friday to Wednesday (April 9-14) at one of the largest scientific conventions ever held in the world.

The mammoth convention, to be held at Atlantic City, is the 49th annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology. College of Medicine staff members presented nine papers reporting their most recent investigative work in their chosen fields.

Five papers were given by personnel of the department of pharmacology. They are Dr. Eileen T. Eckhardt, Dr. J. J. Jaffe, Dr. A. Kuperman, R. E. Taylor, Jr., and S. B. Barker, and Dr. W. B. Wastila and Dr. R. A. Maxwell.

Dr. R. Corson and Dr. R. L. Naeye from the department of pathology also presented papers.

UVM Group Tours Ottawa

By Joy Lipman and Eloise Roberts

Thursday, March 18, at 5:30 a.m., thirty-six participants in the Canadian Studies Program of the University of Vermont left from Waterman Building bound for Essex Junction and eventually Ottawa and a weekend of intensive study of Canada and Canadian government. The train arrived in Canada's capital city at 1:00 p.m. where our group began a busy schedule with the hurried process of checking into the hotel.

The first appointment for the Ottawa Field Trip was at the American Embassy where we were received by Mr. Don Wilson who gave short informative talks about the Embassy and its functions. This led into a question and answer period concerning United States-Canadian relations and Canada's domestic problems.

The next point on the agenda was a stop at Carleton University, a beautiful new institution on the outskirts of Ottawa, where we were received at a student tea. UVM and Carleton students soon broke into small groups and engaged in conversations ranging from international politics to university life. These informal discussions gave us greater insight into the thoughts and ways of young Canadians. The UVM delegation was also greeted by Professor McDougall of the Carleton faculty who spoke earlier this year at UVM in Canadian Studies Program Lecture Series.

Following the tea there was a guided tour of the new University showing us several buildings, containing modern facilities, connected by underground tunnels, as well as the handsome dormitories. Activities at Carleton ended with dinner there Thursday night.

At 7:00 p.m. the group gathered on the steps of the Parliament Building where we were greeted by the Honorable Heath Macquarrie, M.P., who escorted us into one of the Committee Rooms. Here a real honor awaited us for several members of Parliament had arranged to take time out of their busy schedules to speak to us. The Honorable Max Saltzman, a member of the New Democratic Party, began by explaining the Canadian party system. Then the Honorable L. T. Pennel, a Liberal and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, spoke about the workings of Parliament. He was followed by our host, Mr. Macquarrie, a Conservative, who explained the role of the opposition in Canadian government. Climaxing this reception Mr. Saltzman presented Dr. Miles with a true copy of the Proclamation for the adoption of the new Canadian flag. After a question and answer period, we broke into informal groups and spoke with the three M.P.s.

At 7:45 we were taken to the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Commons, seats generally reserved for state dignitaries, to view an evening session of Parliament. Here we observed what no textbook is a substitute for — Parliament in action. We were especially fortunate to be there that evening for Prime Minister Pearson himself addressed the assembly. In addition to Parliamentary process we also found the bilingual translation system new and fascinating. 2:30 p.m. brought the close of that session of Parliament and the end of a very eventful day for the UVM students.

Student Law Association meeting Thursday, April 22 at 7:30 at Billings. All interested students may attend and are invited regardless of whether or not they plan a career in law.

NEW MARKER

A new 12-foot granite marker engraved with the legend, "The University of Vermont," was set in place recently on Rte. 2, Williston Rd., near East Ave. It is also engraved with the University seal and "Gift of the Class of 1923 in Memory of E. Curtiss Mower."

WCAX Television has made available the films which were taken of KAKE WALK and the skits. Only the portions which were not shown on their half hour special are available at the Student Photography Staff office for any interested fraternity.

Coming to Boston?

Here are four good reasons why you should stay at Franklin Square House:

- It is economical. Rates $17-$26 a week, with two meals a day.
- It is homelike. Management makes every effort to make it a "home away from home."
- It is convenient. Close to good public transportation.
- It has a 62-year record of safety and security.

NO. 5

From The Editor's Desk...

This week marks a solemn occasion for every major religion of the western world. For Christians, it is Easter; for the Jews, Passover. But the weekend also marks the fundamental oversight in the administration's planning of this year's class schedule, for these holidays have more than a religious significance; both Easter and Passover are deeply traditional family occasions - a time when the family should be together to worship and partake of the various customs. Last semester, those who live far from here were denied the opportunity to spend Thanksgiving day - a family tradition for all Americans - at home. This weekend the administration's lack of foresight merely adds insult to injury. Granted, more than ample provisions have been made for students of all faiths to attend to their religious obligations here in the Burlington area, but the point is that in most cases they will not be worshipping with their families. What the administration has succeeded in doing, although unintentionally we are sure, is to trample on the family ties of a large portion of the student body.

Some University departments have done everything in their power to make it easier for students to attend religious services here in Burlington. For example, the Military Science Department has been considerate enough to allow students to change drill periods to the morning so that they could in fact attend services in the afternoon. However, beyond this point faculty hands are tied by University policy which is: classes are not to be cancelled (in other words, no one is to go home).

We are glad to see that next year the administration has scheduled a four-day Thanksgiving recess which will allow students to spend the holiday with parents and relatives. This has been facilitated by starting the fall semester two days earlier than last year. Why then, could not a similar arrangement have been made this semester, whereby classes would end two days later, allowing students a three day weekend to worship with their families, thus maintaining a minimal family tie?

Letter To The Editor

Fad Wins In Alabama

To the Editor:

In regard to Howard Sayin's letter in the April 9 Cynic, stating that civil rights may be, in effect, a college fad; may we suggest: A fad is defined as a "style or fashion interesting a large number of people for a short time." (Webster)

Is it such a short time since 1865 when somebody first suggested that those inferior beings commonly known as Negroes might in fact be as good as the rest of us?

And is it such a "large number of people?" We understand from the Sceptic (which we may be foolish to believe) that somewhere in the vicinity of 30 students marched in memory of Reverend Reeb. Is 30 students so many, when you've 4000 enrolled in your University?

Yet perhaps we're quibbling over words. We see Mr. Savin's point in that we were among many, two years ago, who joined civil rights groups because it was the fashionable thing to do; carry a CORE card in the city and you were "arty." But somehow when you see enough people clubbed, the whole thing rather loses its charm.

Is it, then, true that the enthusiasm for civil rights is a college fad? Or is it perhaps that we in college are young enough to be foolish enough to think we can change some of the ills of the world?

Anyhow, somebody's "fad" just won a victory in Alabama.

Gamma Phi Wins Award

On Sunday, April 11, the annual IFC - Panhellenic banquet was held at the Hi-Hat Restaurant. Attending the banquet were representatives from each fraternity and sorority, as well as President and Mrs. Rowell, Dean Patzer, Dean Eycke and his wife, Miss Smith who is the Panhellenic advisor and the guest speaker Dean London and his wife.

Presented to Gamma Phi Beta was a trophy donated to Panhellenic council by Lambda Iota several years ago to be given annually to the outstanding sorority.

Dean London, former professor of speech and now assistant dean of the College of Arts and Science presented a humorous talk on his early experiences in Phi Sigma Delta fraternity at New York University. Speaking in a more serious tone, he said that "his fraternal experiences were highly stimulating and rewarding."

"This is a different approach we are taking," says Willis. "This is sort of 'educational theater.' We aren't taking an established work but rather something that is brand new."

Crawford is a graduate of Drake University and received his M.S. from Stanford and his Ph.D. from Iowa University. His other plays were "The Dark Roots," a three-act serious drama first performed at the University of Iowa in 1961, and "Half a Pound of Tea," a three-act comedy produced also at Iowa in 1963. The work is now being translated into Hebrew for possible future production in Israel.

"Eagles" also represents the first work directed by Willis at Vermont.

THE SCEPTIC

WORTMAN

The game used to be called "STEAL FROM THE BOOKSTORE," and the object was to see who could sneak into the bookstore and carry out the most books without being caught (A friend of ours holds the record; twenty-nine hard-bound copies of Goethe's Faust.) But times do change and, as a recent letter in this newspaper reminds us, so do fads. The Sceptic, always keeping its eyes open for new and different fun around the campus green, has now discovered a new game which is so great, everyone is playing. It's called "LOOT THE LIBRARY."

The object of "LOOT THE LIBRARY," is to see who can get the most diversified set of books from "Bailey," without charging them out. The current champion is in possession of a complete set of the Encyclopedia Britannica, Who's Who for 1929, Clark Kerr's The Uses of the University, Leon Uris' Milla 18, Morris West's The Shoes of the Fisherman and a new copy of Seldom Comes The Dawn.

The game is actually more fun than "BOOKSTORE" because the people in the library are actually helping you (Remember a couple of years ago when they posted those finicky guards so that we couldn't play? Well, that's all changed now).

As more people learn how to play, the game can become more diversified (Wouldn't it be fun trying to carry out the complete set of the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature?). You'd be surprised to find out all the varieties of games you can discover and if you can't find any, well just ask the librarian.

So that you can have more time to play, and less time to think, the Sceptic brings you a list of these games.

1. The Complete New York Times Microfilm Edition with Microfilm Readers (while nobody is looking carefully mount the cabinets of microfilms on one of your fraternity brother's back, and sneak out of the library. Return later for the reader. If someone asks you what you think you are doing, tell them "It's all right, it's charged out.")
2. The New Books Game - trying to steal the newest book in the library, or the newest set of books in the library. For example the complete set of Parliamentary debates.
3. Mutilate the Magazines (sneak up to the magazine section and make as many paper airplanes as possible. Don't bother with the glossy magazines, they don't fly well-the thicker, more academic journals are more aerodynamically suited).
4. Hide the Hardbounds (If you happen to be doing a paper, and you don't wish to bother to take out the books, hide them in another section, so no one else can use them).
5. Xerox Monopoly (who can cut the most classes so that he has to copy the most notes from his friend's notebooks. This game is scored on the number of hours spent at the Xerox machine).
6. Signature (a new and tascinating game - How many seats can you inscribe your name on? This game ends when there is no more space remaining on the seats).
7. Cop the Card Catalog (The most difficult game of all. Once a day, every day, remove one tray from the card catalog, take it out in front of the library, turn it over and make sure the cards are evenly distributed throughout the vast college green. Do not think that this game is immoral, the card catalog is obsolete anyway - all the books listed in the catalog have been stolen - and don't think you're littering. No, you're just covering up candy wrappers.

New Awards will be given out as the games increase. Awards like "Skirts Up!" given to the girl who attracts the most men's eyes in one evening, or the "Sound Off" award, given to the man who can first yell five vulgarities across the first floor at Bailey.

Games, like all games, must have some bad side effects. For instance, after we are finished playing, there will be nothing left for the librarians to do and they will all have to lose their jobs (but then again, they are helping us, aren't they?). Yet, there is nothing like intellectual stimulation to make the heart feel good and who can deny that book-stealing is as intellectual as you can get.

Next Week: BOOK BURNING.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK

"It is not necessary to repeat the caution to the woman students: DO NOT GO OUT ALONE AFTER DARK. It is not safe to do so. . . . I am sure that men and women students would be glad to be of assistance to each other." - Anna Rankin Harris, Dean of Women, April 19, 1965

Who Needs Thoreau?

By Lynn Householder

S.A. Senate has been meeting regularly, and I'm sorry to have neglected its activities. German Club has been recognized, and preparations for a Waterman Study Hall are complete. Committee work on next year's freshman activities, another S.A. responsibility, is getting underway. One unfinished concern -- the most tangible S.A. function -- is budget allotments to student organizations.

Unlike true legislative bodies, the Finance Committee, and, in turn, the Senate, takes almost everything on trust, hoping that the clubs have chosen worthwhile uses for all money, and that the treasurers have correctly estimated expenses. True, S.A. does not have access to investigating staffs. Forms are to be filled out in the spring to estimate for the next year and in the fall to list for the past year the budget. Proposed budget and budget summary sheets have to be turned in to give the Committee something from which to work. However, investigations, which are a continuing function of the club evaluations committee, to provide a source of information for occasions like budget reviewing, have been very limited. S.A. should know just what is going on everywhere on campus, how well planned the activities are, and what the response is.

Also, the fall financial report rule has not been strictly enforced. S.A. had depended upon proposed budgets of past years, and the previous experience of some officers with the clubs. Next year there will be reports, however, because the administration's Student Activity Fees Committee -- of which only one member represented S.A. -- has decided to create a new committee whose powers are perhaps intended to stir up S.A.

Its powers and duties directly related to S.A. are: on the basis of the financial report (S.A. will also get a copy), which will be investigated by the Fees Committee, to freeze an organization's funds if any inaccuracies are found; and to approve or reject any use S.A. wishes to make of its accumulated funds. The latter is a source built up over years, intended to be used for special things that might take large sums of money. S.A. has only dipped into these funds once -- when Billings was converted to a student center; however, evidently the Committee considered this money too much of a temptation.

In addition to the financial report rule, S.A. has several other rules not stringently enforced; for example, that authorizing the Senate to take away a Senator's office for two unexcused absences. Few Senators take their obligations of attendance very seriously. Almost any upcoming hour exam will provide legal excuse so that the ouster threat will not apply. At the moment, a 6:30 meeting time is being tried as a partial solution to the poor attendance. Why this time has more pros and fewer cons than 7:15, I'm not sure. Even if it helps, the change may not be noticed, the empty seats are so glaringly numerous.

Frost-Poet's Poet

By Kenneth Klonsky

Sifting through the murky and labyrinthian world of existentialism is the tedious and sometimes rewarding task of the contemporary philosopher. However, most of us do not have the time to be philosophers, in the strict sense of the word. The world of Sartre and Heidegger is "lovely, dark and deep, but (we) have promises to keep. . . ." So we must settle for the occasional moment in life, when we momentarily glimpse that which transcends ordinary existence. Robert Frost provides any reader of poetry with a cornucopia of these inward glimpses.

The great value of Frost's poetry lies in the fact that his many works can be so easily understood. We are not forced to examine every word for its loaded symbolic content. Robert Frost says what he means. But this is not to say that his poetry is childish or pedagogic. In fact, the poetry of Frost is life itself. It is not only the life of the New England countryside that he loved so dearly, but the life of every man in this world. What Frost has done is to write music with words. For just as we are moved by a symphony that we hear, the words to Frost's poetry move us profoundly. Understanding is not required -- to know Robert Frost, we only need our sensitivity.

Robert Frost is a poet's poet. Throughout a life marred by tragedies, he was able to transmit feelings of rare beauty with the language of the common man. Bearing the world no grudge for his ill fortune, Frost heaped love upon the earth that he walked. His poetry affords transcendental feeling for those of us without the time to philosophize and contemplate. His poetry can be snatched up, digested, and appreciated by the man caught in a rush through an ever-changing and tumultuous world.

Studentes

By Craig Watt

A great stir-up has been developing during the last several months over the war in Viet Nam and the United States' role in that war. Perhaps foremost among the complaints heard about the conflict in Viet Nam is that the United States is needlessly, yet not necessarily wrongly, involved in a futile war in which hundreds of American lives have been lost so far. Another major complaint we hear over the issue, though not so widespread as the first, is that the United States is basically wrong in its present actions in Viet Nam. According to the proponents of this charge, the continuation of the struggle over there not only increases the possibility of a major war in South East Asia, but also impedes the chances for the exercise of political self-determination by the peoples of that area of the world, by the Viet Nameese in particular. They go further, moreover, in contending that the war itself is inhuman, and that the United States has almost a moral obligation to seek a peace settlement with the Communists.

Now, what about all these charges, which are both moral and practical in nature? Surely, if we were to look into some of them and analyze their validity with respect to the whole conflict between Communism and the free world, of which the Viet Nam war is only a small part, we would have to concede that those who go along with many of them are thinking with their passions, and are under the false assumption that peace in the face of the aggressions of a steadfast and unscrupulous enemy can be negotiated.

The complaint concerning the loss of American lives in Viet Nam is a most valid one. Who is not concerned when one's countrymen are perishing in what seems a never ending war, especially when that war is being fought in a far off land. Yet, this complaint is more likely a manifestation of a certain sentiment of isolationism that has been finding its way back into the political thought of this country as a result of years of American experience with global commitments. The point about this isolationist sentiment is that it does not really question the right of the United States to intervene in Viet Nam; it questions the practicality of our intervention in this struggle, a struggle for which we receive little, if any, moral support from our allies, and in which we stand to gain hardly anything for ourselves, save the thought that we are helping a people fend off the creeping menace of Communism.

Much more obnoxious than the charges laid down by the isolationists are those of the liberals and pacifists who attempt to lay the responsibility for the war squarely on the United States. We continually hear, from intellectual and academic quarters especially, the warning that if the United States does not cease its role in the struggle in Viet Nam, the war will surely escalate into a disastrous holocaust. To these learned minds, then, it is the United States that bears the full responsibility for the conduct and consequences of the Viet Nam war; if the world is to be made secure from a major war, the United States must sue for peace. No mention is made of the part the Communists, both Chinese and Viet Nameese varieties, play in this war. In other words, it is fine for the Viet Cong to raise hell in South Viet Nam, killing both Viet Nameese and Americans and terrorizing the peasantry; but let the United States and South Viet Nameese forces retaliate against Viet Cong and North Viet Nameese aggression; and we are immediately charged with seriously forcing the outbreak of a major war. It seems plain that, while they are rightly concerned with maintaining peace in the world, the pacifists and liberals cannot really come to terms with the fact that the free world, in particular the United States, is involved in a life or death struggle with a hideous system of oppression called Communism.

All of this bears relevance to the charge levelled by these same pacifists that the actions of the United States in Viet Nam are detrimental to the right of the Viet Nameese to choose their own political course, their political self-determination. The question of the political freedom of the Viet Nameese people is important here, but not in the twisted sense in which certain people view it. If the United States were to leave South Viet Nam in the hands of "neutralists" according to an immediately negotiated peace settlement, the Communists would no doubt gain, or be in a position to gain, the political support, by force, of the South Viet Nameese population, of the peasantry in particular. And, under the Communist system, as any citizen of the free world knows, there is no political freedom.

As for the alleged inhumanity of the Viet Nam war, what war does not carry with it an inherent element of cruelty and suffering? It is true, war does do violence to mankind. Yet, this fact has never in any way served to discourage the prosecution of war, whether it be offensive or defensive in nature. What has always been the prime factor in the rationalization of war is the belief held by each belligerent that its side is right, and that the suffering its people and other populations undergo as a result is for a good cause. Whether populations subjected to war suffer for a good cause or not, war is carried on with the idea that they do, or at least with the idea that their suffering will greatly facilitate the victory of one side or the other. While all this sounds extremely reactionary, it nevertheless was and is the spirit that guides modern nation-states in war. If it were not for this spirit, it is doubtful that the Allies would have found the will and determination to fight the Fascist powers in the Second World War. So it was with the United States in Korea, and so it is with the United States in Viet Nam. We feel we are fighting for a good cause, and are therefore risking the horrors of war.

If we give the matter one more quick thought, however, we will come up with an idea at once both novel and simple, so simple, in fact, that most pacifists and liberals would cast it off as ludicrous in the face of all the intellectual arguments at their command. Why not blame the Communists for the war in Viet Nam and all its attending suffering and anguish? After all, if it were not for the infiltration and terrorism of the Viet Cong in South Viet Nam and, more generally, the threat of Communist expansion in South East Asia, we would not be in there now.

The thought surrounding pacifist opinion of the Viet Nam war is wholly reminiscent of the days of Munich. Back in those dark ages, certain individuals thought we could bargain with the Nazis for peace; they called it "peace with honor." Well, did the Munich settlement satisfy Hitler? Nein. Only after he had stomped over half of Europe did the Allies finally wake up to the fact that they had to stop him with force. The situation is the same with Communist aggression in South East Asia. Although the particular ideologies of Communism and Nazism differ, we can rest assured that the implementation of these ideologies calls for one thing: control of the world, or, if not of the world, of as much of it as possible.

Ceremonies Committee Prepares For Pearson

Honors Day at the University always poses a number of special problems for the members of the Ceremonies Committee but with the head of a country coming to campus to deliver the main address the problems are somewhat compounded.

"In addition to all of our planning here at the University, we have also been in touch with officials in Ottawa and Washington; D.C.," says Roy A. Whitmore, Jr., chairman of the Ceremonies Committee which is making all of the arrangements for the appearance of Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson on Honors Day on April 30.

Professor Whitmore has been corresponding with and talking to Lloyd Hand, chief of protocol in the State Department about the many arrangements necessary for the appearance of the head of a country.

A number of University departments are also involved in getting ready for April 30. Buildings and Grounds will be putting two flag poles up in the circle at the main entrance to the Patrick Gym, where the ceremonies will be held. One pole will fly the American flag, the other the new Canadian flag which features a bright scarlet maple leaf on a white background.

The University Band busily engaged in rehearsing "O Canada," the Canadian national anthem, and the "Ruffles and Flourishes" played for the head of state. Dr. Frank Lidral, chairman of the music department, reports they had to get a special band arrangement of "O Canada" from a Canadian musical firm in Montreal.

A specially selected group of 60 ROTC students will form the military honor guard and will be reviewed by the Prime Minister. Cadet Colonel Herb Safford of Burlington, brigade commander, will command the honor guard.

Although the Prime Minister will be in Burlington for about only five hours, many months of preparation are necessary to insure a smooth flowing program.

WEEKEND OF APRIL 16-18

Friday, April 16 - S.A. Movie - CAROUSEL - Gordon MacRae and Shirley Jones - a classic musical drama. Music and lyrics by Rodgers and Hammerstein beautifully performed.

Friday-Saturday - Strong Theatre - Walt Disney's TRUTH ABOUT SPRING - Hayley Mills in a new and older role.

Friday - Unlimited engagement - Flynn Theatre - Walt Disney's MARY POPPINS - 5 Academy awards including Julie Andrews as best actress. Wholesome and clean.

Friday-Sunday - State Theatre - Richard Burton and Peter O'Toole in BECKETT. Two of the finest acting performances in movie history. Shattering human drama; a flawless movie not to be missed.

With an 8-2 record, the four-man team won a plaque for second place school, with fifteen colleges participating.

NOTICE TO ALL 1965 GRADUATES

Your 1965 ARIEL will be delivered during the summer to the address listed in the 1964 - 65 Directory. If you desire your ARIEL to be delivered to an address other than the one listed in the Directory, please leave a piece of paper with your name and new address at the ARIEL office. This notice applies only to seniors.

DEBATERS CONTINUE WINNING STREAK

Having been under the impression that the Norwich Novice Debate Tournament was April 16-17, the four debaters who were to participate discovered last Friday morning that it was April 9-10 and that they were to leave in three hours. With one week less preparation than planned, the four walked away with three awards.

The affirmative team of Bob Bullard, Barre, and Robin Frost, Haydenville, Massachusetts, won all five rounds of debate. Teams representing Iona, Norwich, Princeton, St. Lawrence and Southern Connecticut were defeated by the team.

Bullard won a certificate for third place affirmative speaker.

On the negative were Nick Danigelis, Burlington, and Ruth Frost, West Hempstead, New York, who won three debates and lost two. They won over Princeton, Brandeis, and LaSalle and dropped decisions to Maine and Holy Cross.

Danigelis was awarded a plaque and certificate for best negative speaker.

CATAMOUNT CORNER

As was brought to light in the editorial column of last week's CYNIC, the University of Vermont has made plans to expand its athletic scholarship program as well as appropriate additional funds to the athletic department in general. Naturally, I was pleased to learn this, as I'm sure many of you were. The 12 annual football scholarships or 2 annual basketball scholarships offered by the University have grossly failed, on the whole, to achieve their purpose - to field better athletic teams for the University of Vermont. Despite the fact that we had an excellent football team this past season, it was the exception rather than the rule, and the credit for the team's performance does not go to the school's scholarship program, but to the team as a whole. Twelve "stars" cannot possibly carry a team to victory on their shoulders alone. The fact that UVM was able to assemble a football team which accumulated a 7-1 record, losing only to powerful UMASS, is, to a great extent, lucky. On paper, we were playing other Yankee Conference teams who had up to twice as many players on scholarships. UVM has never been a football power in the past, and, discounting the University's recent increase in scholarships, would not be in the future. One or two good seasons does not qualify a team to be regarded as a power. It must consistently have winning seasons, even on off years, and, when conditions are right, it will win its conference or league championship year after year. Such has been the case with UMASS in football (They finished 2nd in the Yankee Conference in 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1st in 1963, 1964.), and UCONN in basketball (They have finished first in Yankee Conference 13 times since 1948, and have accumulated an overall won-lost record of 113 - 22.). Both these schools have solid foundations of scholarship players which bring them consistent winners in their respective sports.

Our swim team, as well as our tennis team is in a situation which is very similar to that of our football team. The swim team's excellent 6-2 record is a credit to Coach Leggett and the boys under him, not to the administration of the University of Vermont. Had Coach Leggett not been fortunate enough to have a few boys with real natural ability (e.g. Jay Gloester, Pete Gross, Trent Anderson) the chances for his team having a winning season would have been quite slim. Our good fortune to have such a fine tennis team is, once again, no reflection on the policies of the University. Such a key man to this year's tennis team as John Adler came to the University only by chance, and only then with the distinct hope that he would receive a tennis scholarship. Although he won the ECAC singles tennis championship and virtually every racquet sport he has participated in since coming to UVM, he still has not received a scholarship. At this point, he no longer expects one.

Many of our other varsity squads were not so lucky as our football, swimming and tennis teams. To be specific, track, golf and particularly basketball and hockey all had poor seasons which can be directly related to a shortage or complete absence of financial endowment.

In the Yankee Conference, a limit is set for the amount of money which may be spent for scholarships in each sport. Please notice that I did not say a set amount of scholarships, but a set amount of money. UCONN for example, charges in the area of $250 a year for residents, UVM charges $500 a year. Since Connecticut has no problem recruiting from within the state and UVM must go out of state for many scholarship prospects ($1500/year), the case can and does exist where schools like UCONN, UMASS and URI get up to 3 or 4 times as many athletic scholarships than does UVM. This situation must be remedied soon. The unfairness of it is all too clear when UCONN trounces us by doubling our score in basketball games or UMASS beats us by 20 points in football.

The projected increase in scholarships by UVM was inevitable and a very necessary improvement. With one of the finest set ups for athletic programs in the East, it would be criminal not to use these facilities, along with scholarship offers, to attract some of the finer athletics from the New England area. UVM has, with these increased scholarships, opened the door to many of our varsity sports. This opportunity now presented may not come again, and, with proper recruiting, UVM can truly become the Yankee Conference power, which it has always dreamed of being.

Cats Open Yankon Play April 20th Against UNH

By Alan Rosenstien and Al Rice

After a rather disappointing Southern trip, the Cats are eagerly looking forward to their first Yankee Conference game against the University of New Hampshire on April 20th. Paced by the strong hitting of Wayne Van Ham, Pete MacDonald and Richie Aldrich, and the strong pitching of Al Foster, Lenny Shefflott and John McCord, the Cats are highly expectant of bringing home a solid victory for their initial endeavor. Although they were sixth in the nation in fielding last season, the Cats have started the season somewhat below par defensively, and it was mainly this poor defense which accounted for their early losses. However, Coach

Ralph Lapointe has had to rebuild his infield and he feels that everything will improve with further experience.

After an exhibition game in Greenfield, Mass., Coach Lapointe has switched around the squad and with these adjustments, he hopes to secure a more solid defense.

Expected to start at first base against the University of New Hampshire will be last year's leading hitter, well-experienced John Tartara. Although John had a poor southern trip, Coach Lapointe feels that any player capable enough of compiling a .367 batting average last season, won't need long before he will begin hitting again. At second base will be junior standout Bobby Cronin, last year's third baseman. He was switched to second base this season in order to tighten up the right side of the infield, and he was already well-adapted to his new position. The shortstop will be Tom Whittier who has been improving with every game. At third base, Coach Lapointe has moved over from shortstop Bucky Morris in hope to strengthen the left side of the infield. In the outfield will be hard-hitting Rich Aldrich, who has been shifted from third base to right field for the season's opener. Veterans Pete MacDonald and Wayne Van Ham will be starting in center field and left field respectively and together, with Rich Aldrich, it has been these three standouts who have paced the Cats throughout their Southern Trip and pre-season play, and hope to continue to do so throughout regular season play.

With two weeks of regular competition behind them, the outlook for the Cat's opener is an optimistic one. The Cats appear to be in top shape, both physically and mentally for their Yankee Conference opener. Looking into the future, stiff competition will be faced by an experienced NCAA regional winner, the University of Maine, who has most of its team returning from last season and could prove to be the team to beat in the Yankee Conference. However, if the Cats continue to improve their hitting and pitching, and can strengthen their fielding, they should give any team a tough fight for the Yankee conference title.

Linkmen Meet UMASS April 22

By Bob Bloomenthal

The UVM golf team opens its season with a young, but promising squad on April 22 at Massachusetts. Only three veterans are returning this year-headed by Captain Steve Slack. Slack is the squad's only returning senior and the other two are juniors Bob Whitman and Jim Nixon.

Four sophomores have been working with this group and these boys hold the key to the team's bright future. They are Art Shields, Lloyd Heir, Peter Sargent, and Joe Donnelly. Another possible team member is Carl Martin, a senior. Martin, a former pitcher for the Catamount baseball nine hurt his arm and thus has turned to golf for spring-time activity.

The big loss to this year's squad was John "Moose" Donnelly, last year's New England and Yankee Conference individual champion. He led his team to a fourth place finish in the New England meet. UVM was also second in the Yankee Conference to Connecticut.

Due to the typical Vermont

weather this year, the linkmen have been unable to get in any outdoor practice yet this spring. This predicament has forced Coach Ed Donnelly to schedule away meets at Massachusetts and Williams on April 22 and 24, in order for the team to get outdoors and so that he may be able to decide which players he can rely on most. This is unfortunate because Williams is perhaps the toughest team on this year's schedule, since they are the defending New England champs.

State competition will begin on April 29 against Middlebury after the team returns from a meet against St. Lawrence and Clarkson on the 27th. After Middlebury, the Cats meet St. Michael's and Norwich at home and then compete in the State championship meet in Burlington on May 4. The final meet of the year is the Yankee Conference Championships in Storrs, Connecticut.

The toughest opposition of the year should, of course, be Williams. The other opponents to watch are Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Massachusetts in the Yankee Conference and St. Michael's in the State Conference. The Michaelmen are favored to cop their fourth straight state championship. UVM beat them in match play last year, but lost to the Knights in medal score.

Coach Donnelly, in appraising the team's chances this year says "with the possibility of four sophomores as members it is hard to predict the outcome of the season. However, the team has better balance this year, and if we can get some practice in before the season starts, it can make for an interesting season.

At any rate, the undergraduate carry-over for next year brightens the future."

Anyone interested in applying for the position of Charlie Catamount for the 1965-66 season should submit an application to the Pop Club and leave it in the club's box at Billings Student Center by Wednesday, April 21, 1965.

Associates Plan 2nd Weekend For Parents

If you were one of the 500 parents who enjoyed last fall's gala Family Associates Weekend, you'll want to return on Saturday, April 24, when the Associates will sponsor a delightful spring version of their twice-a-year weekend by and for parents of students at The University of Vermont. If you had to miss last fall's festivities, you will especially not want to miss this April 24 program.

HERE'S WHAT THE ASSOCIATES HAVE PLANNED FOR YOU

REGISTRATION: 10:30 a.m. to 12 noon and from 1 to 2 p.m., Billings Center. No charge.

LUNCH: Parents are cordially invited to take lunch with their sons and/or daughters in the University Dining Halls. Cost: $.75 per person for parents and guests accompanying parents, and for Vermont students who do not have meal contracts. Lunch is served in the dining halls from 11 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. on Saturdays.

BASEBALL: Parents are invited to be the guests of the University at a 1 p.m. Yankee Conference varsity baseball game between the University of Vermont Catamounts and the Redmen from Massachusetts at Centennial Field in Burlington. No charge, but parents must pick up game ticket at registration at Billings.

TEA AND RECEPTION: The Family Associates will host an informal tea and reception for parents at the Fleming Museum from 4 to 5 p.m. Parents' guests, including sons and daughters at Vermont, are welcome. No charge.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING: There will be an open meeting of the Executive Board of the Family Associates at 5 p.m. in the Marsh Room of Billings Center to hear reports of the nomination, auditing, and special gifts committees of the Associates.

BUFFET DINNER: A highlight of the fall meeting was the buffet dinner served by Saga Dining Services at Simpson Dining Hall, and arrangements have been made for a repeat at the spring meeting. The buffet will be at 7 p.m. at Simpson, for parents and guests of parents, including sons and daughters at UVM, $2.50 per person; $1.50 for UVM students with meal contracts, and for children under 12. Please return the enclosed reservation form to help us in planning.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURE: Prof. Francis Colburn, chairman of art and resident artists at the University, will give his delightful, color-slide-illustrated lecture on "Contemporary American Painting," at 8:30 p.m. at Southwick Ballroom. Free of charge.

MOVIE: The Associates will once again sponsor a movie for parents and guests, and this year have chosen to bring you an old classic, "No Man of Her Own," starring Carole Lombard and Clark Gable. The movie will begin at 9:45 p.m. in the Auditorium in Votey Engineering Hall. Free of charge to parents and guests.

DUTCH-TREAT SNACK: Parents are once again invited to visit the Catamount Den in Billings for Dutch-treat snack time from 10:45 to midnight.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES ON CAMPUS

Open House Saturday, April 24 from 1:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. at the Newman Center and St. Anselm's Chapel.

Hillel Foundation will serve Kosher food as Saturday will be the last day of Passover Week. No open house.

Saturday - Catholic Mass at 4:30 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel.

Saturday - Episcopal Service at 10:30 a.m. in St. Anselm's Chapel.

There will be Catholic masses Sunday at 9:30 a.m. and at 4:30 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel and at 11:00 a.m. on Redstone Campus in the Southwick Ballroom.

Players Present World Premiere

Playwright Jerry Crawford Supervises Production

The Arena Theatre of Fleming Museum was the setting last night for the world Premiere of a new play by a Nevada instructor. The play, "The Look of Eagles," written by Jerry Crawford, a Nevada Southern University Professor, was performed in front of a near capacity house and shall appear two more nights - tonight, and tomorrow (A review shall appear in next week's CYNIC). The playwright has been in attendance for the last week working with the cast to adjust the work for the World Premiere. This is the third of Crawford's full-length plays to be produced by a university group and the first time his work has been seen in the east. The play is being directed by UVM Professor of Drama, Ronald Willis.

The cast of "The Look of Eagles" is a diversified one, coming from all over the world from Peru to Great Britain. Suzanne Ek and Stephen Stearnes, the two leading performers come from Shrewsbury, Mass. and Hanover, N.H., respectively. Barbara Phillips, the wife of Evening School Director Raymond Phillips, originates from London, England, while Paul Humes and Nancy Beckwith come from, respectively, Lake Placid, N.Y., and Manchester, Vermont. Richard Donn, in a supporting role is from Ft. Braagg, North Carolina while Tony Hall derives from Bennington, Vt. Janet Hadda and Sancho "Tito" Padilla head the list of diversified actors. Janet originates from Leeds, England, and "Tito" is a citizen of Bella Vista, Callal, Peru.

"Crawford explores man's reactions to human frailty," says director Willis, "both his own and other people's. All of the characters represented on stage face the unrelieved problems of their own existence." The play takes place on an island in the middle of the Mississippi in the nineteenth century and is concerned with the attempt to establish a pioneer settlement.

Tickets for the production of tonight's and tomorrow night's performances are available at the Arena Theatre.

"Vermont, Stand Up"

Music Department archives include original college songs written by University of Vermont students since the early 1800's. One of the more recent additions to this collection is a song written in 1956 by three faculty members, "Vermont, Stand Up," melody by Francis Weinrich, harmonization by Howard Bennet of the music faculty with words by Herbert McArthur, Associate Dean, College of Arts and Science, was sung in musical productions soon after the song was written. "Vermont, Stand Up" will appear in new shining form at the University Band Concert, this Sunday, 4:00 p.m. at the Ira Allen Chapel. A new band arrangement written by music majors Sharon Debuque and Norma Hanson will renew old acquaintances for some and will be a new experience for others. All are invited to not only "Stand Up" but SING!

GROUP GIVES CONCERT

"An Hour of Baroque" by the UVM Baroque Ensemble will be presented in Fleming Museum Marble Court on Sunday, May 2, at 3 P.M. The Baroque Ensemble is composed of Mary Durham, and Ruth Wilson, sopranos; Philip Ambrose and William Metcalf, recorders; Elizabeth Metcalf, Harpsichord, Mrs. Surham, Mrs. Wilson, and Mrs. Metcalf are faculty wives, their husbands being in the Political Science and History Departments. Dr. Ambrose is in the Classics Department.

The Ensemble will play music by Bach, Loeillet, Purcell, and Blow. The major works are the Bach A-Minor English Suite and Blow's "Ode on the Death of Henry Purcell," to a text by John Dryden. It is interesting to note that Blow's Ode was originally for two Counter-Tenors, two Recorders, and Harpsichord. Purcell himself sang counter-tenor, and wrote a fair bit of very lovely music for the recorder himself, so the Ode is particularly appropriate.

This performance is independent of the Music Department; it is being put on for the enjoyment of the faculty members in the Ensemble and their friends, and for all those who enjoy listening to rare pieces of Baroque music.

Ceremonies Committee Prepares For Pearson

Honors Day at the University of Vermont always poses a number of special problems for the members of the Ceremonies Committee but with the head of a country coming to campus to deliver the main address the problems are somewhat compounded.

"In addition to all of our planning here at the University, we have also been in touch with officials in Ottawa and Washington, D.C.," says Roy A. Whitmore, Jr., chairman of the Ceremonies Committee which is making all of the arrangements for the appearance of Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson on Honors Day on April 30. Professor Whitmore has been corresponding with and talking to Lloyd Hand, chief of protocol in the State Department about the many arrangements necessary for the appearance of the head of a country.

A number of University departments are also involved in getting ready for April 30. Buildings and Grounds will be putting two flag poles up in the circle at the main entrance to the Patrick Gym, where the ceremonies will be held. One pole will fly the American flag, the other the new Canadian flag which features a bright scarlet maple leaf on a white background.

The University Band is busily engaged in rehearsing "O Canada," the Canadian national anthem, and the "ruffles and flourishes" played for the head of state. Dr. Frank Lidral, chairman of the music department, reports they had to get a special band arrangement of "O Canada" from a Canadian musical firm in Montreal.

A specially selected group of 60 ROTC students will form the military honor guard and will be reviewed by the Prime Minister. Cadet Colonel Herb Safford of Burlington, brigade commander, will command the honor guard.

Although the Prime Minister will be in Burlington for about only five hours, many months of preparation are necessary to insure a smooth flowing program.

STUDENTS REVIVE LITERARY MAGAZINE

By Puffer Wellman

Departure, a literary magazine organized to focus and interpret fresh currents of ideas in creative writing, research, and critical work, has been founded at the University of Vermont. The magazine is to be a unique experiment in that it is founded upon the principle that the students of UVM have the creative abilities and interest to make it a real success.

A brief history of literary magazines on our campus shows us that in the early 1950's Windfall, a similar magazine was formed. Five years later the name was changed to Centaur and small revisions were made in its constitution. Immediately the changes brought bad luck and because of lack of interest and piling debts the magazine was discontinued in the early 1960's.

The first issue of Departure has been generously subsidized by the CYNIC. However, a new constitution has been formed and is being submitted to the Student Association to recognize Departure as an independent organization complete with its own organization and funds.

The purposes of this magazine are far more extensive than the brief statement at the beginning of this article indicates. It is difficult to say just what the purpose in the mind of each member of the staff really is. But generally, this is an attempt to bring to the student body as a whole their own magazine, containing their own ideas, philosophies, thoughts, and creative works. There exists on this campus a strong undercurrent voice expressed in the unheralded writings of many of its students. This magazine is formed to bring this undercurrent to the surface and in doing so it will not only be representative of a large segment of the university population, but also it will be a fine magazine of which the University may be justly proud.

In order to closely approximate these goals the support of the student body is urgently requested. There is a place in your magazine for the creative writer as well as the person willing to work hard in order to produce it. Any interested persons are urged to contact either Henry Wellman, Ken Klonsky, or John Caputo within the next two weeks.

Rhine Discusses ESP, PK

By William Mechanic

On Thursday evening, April 15, Dr. J.B. Rhine, expert in the field of parapsychology from Duke University, discussed not the possible existence of this field, but rather the practical use of this new idea.

Dr. Rhine began his lecture by pointing out that all significant scientific advances pass through three stages. Man will 1) make fun of the theory, then 2) try to make sense of it, and finally 3) make use of it. Parapsychology has already undergone the first stage and man is now trying to understand it.

Parapsychology, according to Dr. Rhine, is divided into two groups. The first is extrasensory perception (ESP). ESP consists of: "1) Telepathy, or thought transference, from one person to another, 2) clairvoyance, or the perception of objects or events not influencing the senses, 3) precognition, or the perception of a future event." The second group is Psychokinesis (PK), whereby a mental operation affects a material body or energy system (e.g., wishing for a number affects what number comes up in the throw of dice.)

Dr. Rhine went on from here by giving specific examples of ESP. One such example was about a Duke student who, in the middle of the night, heard her grandmother calling her. The grandmother was 250 miles away. When the girl called home, she discovered that at the exact moment she heard her grandmother calling her father had suffered a heart attack. It seems that the grandmother had forgotten that the girl was not in the house and had called her for help.

If this sounds wild, one should remember, as Dr. Rhine pointed out, that parapsychology is only "another order of mastery" for man. It is "a key which will enable man to understand himself better."

According to Dr. Rhine, parapsychology can lead to almost anything, including telepathic interplanetary communications. It is even possible that one may know what will happen before it does. Parapsychology is, indeed, a topic for the future.

There will be a meeting of all those interested in working on Vermont Conference next year on Monday, April 26 at 8:30 p.m. in Conference room C in Billings Center. Executive committee will be appointed from among those present.

MED STUDENTS GET INTERNSHIPS

Forty-one senior students in the University of Vermont College of Medicine have won internship appointments in hospitals located both in Canada and in 15 states throughout the nation.

The breakdown, by states, follows:

California - Robert B. Daig-neault, Burlington, at Children's Hospital of L.A. in Los Angeles, and Allan L. Gardner, also of Burlington, at University of California Hospital, Los Angeles.

Canada - Philip T. Cole, Brighton, Mass., and Frederick G. Lippert, III, of New Canaan, Conn., will be interns at the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal.

Colorado - David I. Hirsch, Newport, N.H., at Denver General Hospital in Denver.

Connecticut - Frederick M. Burkle, Hamden, Conn., at Grace-New Haven Hospital in New Haven and Woolson W. Doane, Burlington, St. Francis Hospital in Hartford.

Florida - Thomas W. Dow of Roslindale, Mass., Lakeland General Hospital in Lakeland, Florida.

Maine - James F. Butler, III,

Augusta, Me., and Andrew B. Packard, Hanover, N.H., Maine Medical Center in Portland.

Maryland - Robert I. Keimowitz, Middletown, N.Y., Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore.

Massachusetts - Sanford Levine, Brooklyn, N.Y., Massachusetts Memorial Hospital in Boston.

Michigan - Alan F. Crosby, Burlington, and David L. Perkins of Barre, Blodgett Memorial Hospital in Grand Rapids.

New York - Marlene A. Aldo, Bridgeport, Conn., and Merrill D. Benson, Alburg, will intern at Bellevue 1st Medical Division in New York City; Myer S. Bornstein, West Roxbury, Mass., Rochester General Hospital, Rochester; Gerald P. Corcoran, Newton, Mass., U.S. Naval Hospital in St. Albans, N.Y.; Robert J. Hobbie, Cranford, N.J., and David E. EDITORIAL...

The new grading system recently announced by the administration seems to have placed many students in a mild state of panic. Our own reaction was one of equal suspicion. However, upon closer examination it became obvious to us that this initially unfavorable reaction to the four-point index was premature, that it was, in fact, based on incomplete information compounded by a natural resistance to change.

We believe that much of the confusion stems from two mistakes on the part of the administration. First, the student body was never consulted for its views on the proposed change while it was still only a proposal. Now, the letter system is a reality - a reality which the student body had no part in making. It is a matter for debate whether student feeling on this issue should have been the ultimate criterion for the administration's judgment. But all will agree, we are sure, that student opinion, the opinions of those most closely affected, should have been a consideration in the final decision.

The administration's second mistake was in the manner in which its decision was made public. Information trickled back to the student body in bits and pieces via the grape vine, thus leaving too many questions unanswered. The new grading system remains the hottest and most distorted rumor on the UVM campus. Perhaps, then, the greatest service we can perform at this time is to dispel some of these doubts by way of an objective appraisal of the 4-point index.

The principal question which remains to be answered is the matter of whether the system is to be retroactive. The answer, for all intents and purposes, is no. It has been decided that all numerical grades received through this semester will remain on the transcripts in numerical form. Cumulative averages as a whole, however, will be converted to an index form according to a table devised by the administration.

Another question which has been raised is that of the comparative accuracy of letter grades. Conceivably, under the new system, a situation could arise, though admittedly a highly unlikely one, in which one student receives five 70's in a given semester while another receives five 79's. In such a case both students would have the same C average. This sounds very unfair, yet we have found that such a question arises out of an ignorance of statistics. The fact is that in any ten point range (i.e. 70-79, 80-89, etc.) there are three or four marks in the lower half of the given range for every mark in the upper half. For example, for every mark between 75-79 there are four between 70-75. Under the new system these would all be C's, and thus four out of five students would reap obvious benefit. For the student who receives the 79, the probability is that he will receive a 70 or an 80 in some other course in which case he will then gain the advantage that the others did in the previous case. In short, it has been statistically proven that the student will benefit in this manner much more often than he will suffer.

Unfortunately, psychology pervades a marking system as it does all other human institutions. Professors seem unable to award many marks in the high 90's, perhaps because they equate a mark with a percentage and cannot conceive of a student knowing 98% of all there is to know in a given subject. Whatever the reasoning behind it, the fact remains that almost all marks in the 90's are very low 90's. The result is that only half of the "A" scale is being used. Under the letter system a 90 will be an A and the result will be an increase of 8% in the number of students graduating with honors. We may ask, why not keep the numerical system and simply lower the criteria for all honors by an arbitrary number of points, say three, for example. The answer is very pragmatic and again fraught with psychological considerations. Unfortunately, a substantial part of a university's reputation is based on the number of its students who are accepted to good graduate schools. Admissions committees, unpredictable and mysterious bodies that they are, seem to find an A more impressive than a 90, even if they are the same grade. For this reason, plus the fact that most graduate schools convert numerical grades into index equivalents before reviewing applications, it was decided to switch to the grading system used by 80% of the schools (and 90% of the students) in the United States. The justification is not conformity, but expediency.

Letters To The Editor No-good Co-ed

One sunny afternoon on 8 Isham Street.

Dear UVM,

My reason for this letter is to apologize for not being your idea of a good co-ed.

When I came, I wasn't at all expecting the care you offer - from all kinds of "sisters" and "mothers" - to a chance to "share" in dorm life, to all my numbers which assure us all of better statistical care - I foolishly expected what I paid for - good instruction and a quiet room plus meals. After 6 weeks of pleading, I did get off campus - and it surely was worth those grueling weeks. Sorry I'm not as financially useful to you as dorm liver's - I was thinking more of my own sanity than your financial success. It is only fair to tell you that I still only go to Billings for food and for study, not men, and to Bailey when I must - not keeping up the image - sorry.

Also, in my humble opinion, I think a reflecting pool is assigned. The idea of an artificial pool on this pretty campus (which is the only natural thing around) makes me shudder. I propose using the money to start a "Replace Coolidge Hall" fund.

Obsessions with impression, rules, "adjusting," and money, cause you to overlook two things that I - and some others - find important - quality and individuality. This is evident in your inflexible rule system styled for students en masse, and not people. And you miss quality when you pressure into leaving one of your best instructors because of a degree which would make the school look better. - And an instructor such as he - who has given so much - from lectures and art shows, to his teaching abilities - you don't deserve him.

Oh - I haven't mentioned Wasson - the infirmary where you can go one day for a sore throat - stay for 6 days, and leave - finally - with the doctor's words of - "You may leave though there is no improvement since the day you entered." - But your parents are resting at ease because they received word that you were "responding well to treatment."

Please note that both Scope and the instructors and professors escape criticism. I found the teachers to be interesting and qualified and interested in individuals. And Scope - is terrific. Scope obviously finds quality to be important - it is apparent in all its endeavors.

I understand that you sometimes ask "non-adjusting" students such as myself to leave if they cause problems or ripples in your reflecting pool of smooth operation - but I've already decided to leave.

Virginia A. Burnham

P.S. I'd like to extend thanks to those who have found my cause a worthy one. You are few - but you're there and I hope you don't feel that I'm letting you down by leaving.

EARTH TO EARTH

Last week, in honor of the university's fast-falling condition, a pre-mortem tombstone was established on UVM's eastern border (near the Cupola Motel). This tombstone represents the efficient planning the administration has been noted for in the past few years. They have no doubt realized that the resignations of teachers, which, this year, have come in such a large quantity is a foreboding. Students at the University, ignorant of these resignations, are (like the University's cows) contented. (This ignorance, which is due to the CYNIC's policy of reporting only good news, has often bothered us. For example, a few weeks ago the CYNIC reported the appointment and promotion of many faculty members in large, eye-attracting headlines, but failed, at the same time, to announce those many resignations from the faculty.) In the past, students would discover that a teacher had resigned, when during the opening week of classes, a new face appeared in front of the black board (it has, in fact, become a sort of game: The administration would publish its catalog and "little white book," the students would read the name of the teacher who would instruct the course. If that teacher appeared, the student wins, if a new, less-experienced teacher appeared, the administration wins.)

ADMINISTRATION 7 STUDENTS 0

Thus, the Sceptic announces a new policy to publish (since no one else will) some of the names of those teachers who have chosen to leave our midsts. Look at these names closely, some might appear a little familiar.

These are the names of just a few of the more prominent teachers on campus; there are many others. These above mentioned emigres, all have something in common - they are active, alive. They all have, aside from academic chores, attempted to stimulate the university community - be it by talking at Vermont Conference, writing a column in the CYNIC, painting a mural of St. Anselm's Chapel, or producing a play at the Arena Theater. Their minds are working outside as well as inside the classroom. They are alive.

ASHES TO ASHES

Yet, the University administration continues to talk of constructing buildings while they continuously import, for the most part, new, second-rate and inexperienced teachers to fill these new classrooms. A couple of years ago this University served as a training ground for a university president. Once he was trained (after a few gymnastic mistakes) he moved elsewhere. This university is rapidly becoming a prep school for both administrators and teachers. Bring in the new teachers and university presidents, train them, sent them elsewhere and to hell with education. Just like that old Burlington minor-league ball club, this University is playing Class C ball. UVM is the "METS" of education (all Vermonters love their state school, but, in fact, the school is always coming in last place.) The only difference being the "METS" pay big-league prices for big game ball players while UVM pays little league prices for little teachers.

THE PEPSI GENERATION

Why this sudden departure from this northern mecca? After all, the skiing is good, the baseball team is getting better and we have a winning football team this year. We're getting new and bigger buildings and the organization of the University has improved immensely. Why are they leaving us?

First, there is the question of money. All that money that's going for those hollow buildings could be best put to use in the pockets of faculty members. But the main reason for this departure, which we have ascertained from talking with some of these teachers, is the campus atmosphere (Does that mean the temperature is too high in Lafayette?) This campus has an incredible ability to do nothing. With riots on other campuses, with a war in Vietnam, this campus gives the impression it has just undergone a frontal lobotomy. The intellectual stimulation present in this "collegiate community" is as prevalent as in the poems of Edgar Guest and the paintings of Norman Rockwell (or even as prevalent as in the piece of pornographic trash which has just come into the library, 'Seldom Comes the Dawn.') The administration helps in the lobotomy; controversy is frowned upon (upperclassmen will remember the convenient excuse

Joint Conference

The JOINT CONFERENCE of the Spring Semester 1964-1965 was called to order on April 14 at 7:00 in Southwick by Deborah Whitaker, President of W.S.G.A. Dr. Boller presided over the meeting and members of the faculty were introduced.

Business:

1. Four Point System

Professor Bogorad explained the proposed system. His interest was stimulated in the evaluation of the present system because of the unfair distribution of grades. In such courses as English, where a certain amount of intangible ability was assigned a definite number grade.

Among the points presented were these, given as the main structure:

1. Grades in Undergraduate colleges will be on a letter basis: A, B, C, D, F. These grades may be modified with plus or minus.
2. Letter grades are assigned points.
A-4; B-3; C-2; D-1; and F-0.
Average would be weighted to two significant digits.
3. Bachelor's degree would require an overall of 1.70 in all courses.
4. Honor Graduates determined in this manner:
Summa Cum Laude 3.70
Magna Cum Laude 3.50
Cum Laude 3.30

A speech was presented to the UVM Senate. Many statistics were quoted showing that even though UVM has more students, its ratio or percentage of Honor graduates is four times as low as other comparable institutions. This information has a direct significance to the graduate schools who are evaluating students with similar intelligence and yet, UVM students are marked on a scale that makes it look as if our students are inferior.

Discussion followed:

1. How does 1.70 come out to be 72 when 1 is a D which is supposed to be 60?

Answer: Assured, that this is the closest we can come out with our figures.

2. Will an 88 student become an 85 student in the transition period?

Answer: Even though the mechanics of the transition period are still to be worked out, the fact that we will be talking in terms of letters with the stipulation of plus and minus, this will not happen.

3. What of instructors who give 85 as their highest grade?

Answer: Sympathy expressed, but this will probably not change any from the present time.

4. What is Dean's List?

Answer: Close to 85 as possible -- 3.0

5. Why are some schools switching from the 4 to 6 point system at other schools?

Answer: Trying to get away from 0 as F. Many possible arbitrary standards -- some based on 12.

6. Will this system have a psychological effect on professors who don't feel they can give high As as proposed?

Answer: It is hoped so, and firmly desired.

2. Wording in the Housing Contracts which says that our rooms may be occupied by others over vacation. Please explain.

Dean Wing explained that it states that UVM reserves the right to have another UVM student reside in the room. This would entail a conference, but would not mean just anyone. ONLY UVM STUDENTS.

3. Is it true that two roommates cannot let one of their friends occupy their room if they are away for the weekend?

Roommates may permit their room to be used if the girl's hostess is present that weekend in the living unit.

4. Opinion was asked of the extended curfews.

Show of hands was in favor.

5. Question concerning more distinguishing between the Freshmen and Seniors in regard to late nights.

a. Head Residents have to stay up until every girl is in.
b. Suggestion to issue front door keys to all seniors.
c. Seniors do not take advantage of the ones they have.

6. Shouldn't friends be able to stay in living units during the week?

Presuming there are beds for each, we are near so many recreation areas that if there were beds which were permanently empty, UVM could become an inn.

7. Why must we take our shirts to the parking lot instead of having them picked up with the sheets?

The Laundry contracts were explained in answer to this question.

8. Complaints of the present laundry service.

Administration is aware of this and will look into it, but if there is any real evidence, bring to the Dean's office to help them have something definite to prove the University's point.

9. Announced that there will be 5 sessions of Orientation this year.

10. Starting earlier next year (WED. after Labor Day) to allow for the Thanksgiving Holiday.

11. In reference to Physical Education, there have been students investigating the suggestions of the students, and information will be available at a later date.

Meeting was adjourned at 8:25.

Respectfully submitted,
Joan Newman

Letters Writer Criticized For Explanation Of Grading System

To the Editor:

With her customary passive voice and vague vocabulary, Judy Beeber presented the new marking system adopted by some unspecified group within Administration (evidently) upon the recommendation of a committee appointed by the Dean of Faculty last April.

If the reasons for the change listed in the front page article are precisely as expressed by the faculty committee, the editorial staff of the CYNIC has missed a rare occasion for a justified attack upon a University policy.

The reasons as presented by Miss Beeber are:

Primarily, that our present system tends to hurt the very good students by assigning grades which seem low compared to those at other schools. Which means, evidently, that the possible spread between the marks of very good students and the marks of lesser students is less at UVM than it is elsewhere. The new marking system will correct (or over correct) this seeming handicap. For example, under our present 100 point marking system a failure is counted in the average as almost half of full credit, 45%. However, under the new marking system a failure will be counted as a zero - no percent of full credit, a definitely discriminating feature of the new marking system, I would think, and also (apparently) contradicting a later statement in Miss Beeber's article "... failing grades will not count as heavily as in the past."

Miss Beeber also asserts that with the new point system the quality of the best students will show more quickly.

A question of the validity of the statement: if one mark, 'A', denotes the grades both of those who are doing 100 work and of those who are doing 90 work, instructors will be less apt and administrators less able to distinguish between good (90) and excellent (100) students.

Miss Beeber also rather crudely implies that since our school is of the minority using the 100 point system, graduate schools, employers, and the awarding boards of fellowships and national awards discriminate against UVM graduates because of an unfamiliarity with the grading system. I suggest that so few UVM graduates receive national awards or obtain fellowships not because of a marking system discrimination, but because so few people with the capabilities and motivation for the necessary outstanding scholarship come to this University as students.

"Our present system also makes it difficult for students to acquire honor awards." No. All that one has to do is to stop at Badens House of Trophies, and for a small fee they'll make one.

The new marking system has some merit, however, the reasons given for adopting it are not worthy of an academic committee; they are almost reasons for not adopting the system.

On The Prowl

By Charles Catamount

By the way of self-introduction, my name is Charles Catamount and I'm pleased to make your acquaintance. On my lightfooted prowls throughout the UVM campus (and it isn't easy for a catamount weighing several hundred pounds to be lightfooted, believe me), several things have come to the attention of the keen eyes of this particular puma. Actually, I'm a little nearsighted, but then we all are at one time or another in one way or another. So much for small talk and on to my first attempt to invade the literary world.

As you humans say, "Spring has sprung." The grass has ris. I wonder where the flowers is. This thing about spring springing has always baffled this poor beastly brain of mine. A few days ago I set out to discover what spring is. It must have been a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday because I had public speaking, but I can't remember which one. (I can give the most persuasive speech you ever heard, complete with growls.)

While in Pomeroy I discovered one aspect of this hard-to-define word. Spring is a misguided tender-gray seagull flying low over the Burlington reservoir with the water rippling, sparkling, alive in the sun. Believe it or not, I thought of that all by myself.

This "springing" bit is also evident on Redstone Campus. It's guys in madras jackets and levis using skateboards to impress the girls by riding down the sidewalks and springing off just as they get to the steps. Lion-hearted of them, no? Maybe, I should say catamount-hearted, for I am a courageous beast though perhaps a bit egotistical.

Yesterday I found myself smiling and saying Hi to a fellow who lives on my floor (I won't antagonize anyone by saying whether it's a floor in a dorm or fraternity.) whom I hadn't spoken to for weeks. Although I must have looked like one of the grinning griffins on Sci Hall, I was just happy to be Charlie Catamount on such a fine, blue-sky day and felt like giving a piece of my happiness to everyone. Guess that's spring, too.

Spring is also wet ground and the smell of mud. Be thankful that you don't have to worry about dishpan feet at this time of year like I do. Soggy Saga pancakes can be tolerated, but soggy paws are another matter. I have, however, noticed several coeds springing across Main Campus, loafers in hand.

Excuse me for a minute. The mailman just delivered a letter from Mama (of course, I have a mother). Let's see - there's a picture in here, too. My, my, my. It's a picture of one of my high school girl friends who is on vacation from Smith this week. Her mother is coming down from the Jolly Green Mountains to meet her bus which gets in ten minutes. She certainly has grown up and grown out and ... Think I'll go down and meet her. Maybe we can get rid of the old lady.

As I dash off these last words it suddenly occurs to me that spring is a nice day and a Vermont Transit bus with a cute female catamount as a passenger.

Happily yours,
Charlie Catamount

that was given for not permitting George Lincoln Rockwell to speak). The stressing of the diploma over education by the people in Waterman naturally helps those students who desire sports cars over stimulation.

DUST TO DUST

Thus the University shall flow on. Like clam chowder without the clams, it shall still exist, with potatoes and onions. The students will not care, and the administration will remain, as always, blissfully happy.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK OR VERMONT HAS ALWAYS BEEN A YEAR BEHIND THE TIMES DEPT.

"A talk ... will be the opening feature of the University of Vermont's Shakespeare Quadracentennial Celebration, Sunday evening (April 19) at 8 P.M. in the Bailey Library. - The CYNIC, April 16, 1965.

Editorial

The new grading system will also deemphasize the importance of grades slightly, and will allow for the imperfections in a grading system in a way that number grades do not. Specifically, it will tend to equalize the range of standards between different instructors in the same course since currently one instructor's 71 is sometimes worth another's 78.

Bearing this in mind and assuming both the accuracy of the administration's statistics and the validity of its assumptions, one or two semesters under the new system should dispel any currently existing doubts.

Vermont Treasures

Vermont art treasures -- from a 19th century weathervane from the Shelburne Museum to a contemporary Spanish terra cotta and wood from the Bunday Art Gallery in Waitsfield -- are featured in the Summer Session Catalogue of the University of Vermont, currently in the mails to 16,000 past and prospective students in and outside the Green Mountain State.

Last year, taking advantage of the fact that the University of Vermont has one of New England's fine small university museums, Summer Session Director Raymond V. Phillips and Public Relations Director Larry Van Benthuyssen selected 37 pieces from the Museum and reproduced them in the Summer Session catalogue in place of the more traditional photos of class, recreation, and cultural activities.

Response was "remarkable and gratifying," according to Dr. Phillips, who received praise for the product from faculty, staff and students from many colleges and universities.

This year, again working with Fleming Museum Director Richard Janson, Phillips and Van Benthuyssen enlisted the cooperation of officials of eight other Vermont museums, and the current catalogue features over 40 photos of paintings, sculpture, glass, china, quilts, and weathervanes from these museums in addition to a selection from the Fleming Museum.

Inside photographs are black and white.

"The nicest part of making our catalogue into a modest tribute to the arts," says Phillips, "is that it hasn't cost us any more than using photos of classroom, recreational, and cultural activities."

Museums featured in the current catalogue include the Bennington Museum, the Bundy Art Gallery at Waitsfield, the Fairbanks Museum in St. Johnsbury, the Fleming, the Miller Art Center at Springfield, the St. Johnsbury Athenaeum, the Shelburne Museum, the Sheldon Museum at Middlebury, and the Southern Vermont Art Center at Manchester.

Op Expands

By Puffer Wellman

Since the opening of the OP art exhibit at the Fleming Museum, there have been many new developments in the art world concerning OP art. The American Bible Society is opening an exhibit of OP art in good old New York on the 27th of April. Included in the selections on display will be works by two of the artists presently being shown here. The Society seems to agree with noted art critic Thomas Hess who tells us that, "OP art is bright, cheerful, . . . thrifty, reverent, and clean of body and mind."

We somehow wonder, however, just how religious OP art really is. Do all those circles, wavy lines, and large blocks of color really bring to mind religious ideas or, perhaps more likely are they the circles of a smiling co-ed's eyes, the wavy lines of (oh forget it), and solid blocks of something other than religious connotation. One can only speculate.

As a fitting climax to this exhibit, Scope and the John Dewey Club are presenting an Artists' Panel and Reception on April 27 at 8:00 P.M. at the Museum. Present will be the artists on display at this time, those being Marcel Barbeau, Yves Gaucher, Jean Goguen, Gino Loreini, Guido Molinari, and Claude Tousignant. Following this panel will be an artists' reception in the museum gallery. In conjunction with this panel meeting Scope will hold an informal coffee hour at Billings Student Center on the same day at 4:15 and the artists have also agreed to be present at certain open art classes on the following morning. Students are urged to attend.

Whether one is an art lover or not, this is an excellent opportunity to informally meet some of the up and coming artists of Canada along with some of the established greats. The evening should prove informative and enjoyable for artists, faculty, and students.

STUDY ABROAD, WHY NOT?

This fall a small group of UVM students will be leaving the confines of the "beautiful Green Mountains" to continue their studies abroad.

What! You wonder how anyone can leave behind the intellectual stimulation of UVM? To this I answer -- What intellectual stimulation? If you mean, by intellectual stimulation, the mad rush of exams and term papers at the end of a semester, and then a whole weekend to prepare for finals, then yes, I agree, this is a very stimulating University. But I digress.

At least five of our students will be traveling to Europe to complete their junior year. Perhaps not all of them will receive credit for their work. This is where a problem arises.

According to George V. Kidder, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the basic administrative attitude toward study abroad is set down in the new bulletin. He feels that the good students will profit from this experience. This accounts for the usual requirement of an 80 average. However, this requirement can be waived.

As far as the students getting their credit transferred back to UVM there arises a difficulty. Dean Kidder had a great deal to say about this. He feels there is a problem "in equating transfer credits from other countries -- as the educational policies vary from place to place." This problem is greatly eased if the student goes on a program sponsored by an accredited American university. In this case the program is run just as it would be in that University itself. If the student gets C or better in his work, his credits will probably be accepted.

In general, Dean Kidder felt that if the program the student takes is helpful towards his major at UVM, and if the student takes advantage of his opportunity to live and study in a foreign country, the year will be well spent.

Carolyn Seigel, Co-News Editor of the CYNIC, is one of those who will be studying in Europe next year. Studying with her, in Aix-En-Provence, France, will be Meg Pond and Marilyn Anderson.

Miss Siegel will be going on a program sponsored by the Institute for American Universities. While in France she will take 30 hours of credit -- all of which will be useful to her in her projected career in Journalism. Because she is going on an approved program she will receive credit for all work with a grade of C or better.

Misses Pond and Anderson may not be so lucky. They are going to France on their own and will be taking French courses. When they return they will have to pass achievement tests to determine whether or not they will receive credit.

All three girls are interested in learning the French language and will probably benefit greatly from this experience. It seems a shame that all those going may not receive complete credit for their work.

Perhaps Vermont should consider establishing a Junior Year in Europe Program. Many schools throughout the Nation have this and more are being added yearly. The trend of spending one year in Europe is becoming more and more popular and worthwhile. A program such as this at UVM would enable more of our students to travel abroad and assure that they would receive proper credit for their work.

When I asked the girls if they were glad to be leaving UVM for a year, they all said yes. But although the trip is something they are looking forward to, they can't wait to return to Vermont to complete their education.

Isn't it strange how loyal our students become when they know they are leaving? It is very comparable to the feeling which prevails every Spring, before and after final exams. Before exams there is the general disgust with the University, the professors, the unfair grading systems, etc. After exams there's a great feeling of friendliness and praise of the University and its "wise" Administration. Why this quick change? Because we no longer have to put up with the University, the professors. . .

What a difference a few days make.

Moody's Book Is Praised

A textbook by a University of Vermont professor has earned a world-wide acceptance according to a recent statement from the publishers of the book.

The second edition of "Introduction To Evolution," a text written by Dr. Paul A. Moody of the department of zoology in the College of Arts and Sciences, has been adopted by more than 72 colleges and universities in the United States.

The book is also used by the Van Schaik B. S. in Pretoria, South Africa, the Faculdade de Medicina de Ribeirão Preto, Universidade de São Paulo, Brazil, and it has been selected for use behind the Iron Curtain by the Ośrodek Rozpowszechniania in Warsaw, Poland.

Dr. Moody's book has been described as "the most generally adequate and up-to-date treatment . . . of the whole of evolution" by Science magazine.

I love a man in Van Heusen "417"

I'm real keen on his lean swingy physique and the spare, pared-down flattery that "V-Taper" fit adds to it. Can't get my eyes off the great way he looks, either in a traditional Button-Down or spiffy Snap-Tab. Area Studies Program

By Eloise Roberts

In February, 1962, there was established at the University of Vermont an extraordinary program that gives undergraduate students a rare opportunity for interdisciplinary study. This plan, the Area Studies Program, provides for the student, instead of concentrating within a particular department, to concentrate on a certain geographic area and approach the study of this area from various disciplines: history, geography, sociology, language, economics and political science. In addition to providing a truly liberal education, this program may likewise prepare you for a professional career in the international aspects of government, business, teaching or sociological research, to name only a few. (In fact many will find that they have a double major, in Area Studies plus some other field.)

Under this program there are now three areas in which you may concentrate: Russia and East Europe, Latin America, and Canada, and next fall it is hoped that the Far East may be added to this list. Through the wide range of courses that you take you learn more than historic or geographic facts about these places. You come to understand the people themselves, how they think and why they act the way they do. And you will find that a number of your instructors have not only studied that area of their interest - they have been there; in fact several are natives of these places. And even if you are not an Area Studies major, you will find these courses interesting and enlightening for they are open to all.

The Area Studies Program has a wide basis in the humanities and the social sciences. There are courses offered in ten different departments and the Program includes all the colleges. There are now forty faculty members representing these departments and colleges serving on the Area Studies Committee, appointed by the President, which coordinates teaching, research and academic planning. In its three year career, Area Studies has been very successful and the Committee has a number of proposals under consideration to expand its scope. One of these is an exchange program with some Latin American university so that you might learn about these people first hand. (The Canadian Studies has already made two field trips to Ottawa.) Another proposal that the Committee is looking into is the possibility of a Peace Corps training center.

In short, the Area Studies Program does not seek to make you an expert on some nation or culture. It does work for a clearer understanding of our neighbors on this shrinking globe, which is certainly a worthwhile goal. If you are interested in further information, you may contact Dr. Robert V. Daniels, head of the program.

Tourney At West Point - Good Luck Debaters

WEST POINT, N.Y. -- Miss Carmen Wessner of RFD Manchester Depot, Va., and Norman Snow of 90 South St., Burlington, will represent the University of Vermont in the 19th Annual National Debate Tournament to be held at the United States Military Academy April 21-24. Miss Wessner is a Senior and Mr. Snow is a Junior at the University.

The tournament is composed of 40 college teams, winners of regional contests in which over 600 schools were competitors for invitations to West Point.

Often referred to as the "World Series of Debating," the Tournament at the Military Academy focuses attention on national and international issues. The debate topic this year is "Resolved: That the Federal Government Should Establish a National Program of Public Work for the Unemployed."

Relevant to the debate subject, Mr. Patrick Healy, Director of Community Relations for the Job Corps in the Office of Economic Opportunity, will be guest speaker at the tournament banquet held Friday, April 23.

After registration on Wednesday, April 21, seeding rounds will take place the next two days, followed on Saturday by semi-final and final rounds.

The winning team will be awarded the Sigurd S. Larmon Trophy, symbol of the national collegiate championship.

Sigma Xi Meeting

The annual business meeting, initiation, and dinner of the Vermont Chapter of the Society of Sigma Xi will take place at the University of Vermont on April 29.

The business meeting will be held in the faculty lounge of the Waterman Building at 4:15 p.m. New members will be initiated at 5:30 p.m., following the business meeting.

After a 6:15 dinner in the Waterman faculty dining room, Dr. Robert H. Woodworth, professor of biology at Bennington College, will speak on "Time Lapse Cinephotographic Studies of Plant Growth."

The talk, open to members and guests, will be given at 8:00 p.m. in the Hills Building Auditorium.

A MESSAGE TO ROTC COLLEGE MEN

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE AN ARMY OFFICER,
STAY IN THE ROTC

Being an Army officer is a challenge. Officers must be leaders... able to take responsibility... get important jobs done.

It isn't easy to win a commission as an Army officer. But if you are taking the Basic Course in ROTC you're well on your way—provided you can measure up to the high standards required for admission to the Advanced Course.

As a student in one of the 247 colleges and universities offering senior ROTC training, you are in a privileged group. There's no better way for any college man to get the training and skills needed to be an Army officer than through the on-campus program created specifically for that purpose—ROTC.

Here you learn to be a leader... to develop the qualities that add a vital plus to your academic training... qualities that will pay off for the rest of your life in whatever career you choose to follow.

There are other advantages too. Pay, at the rate of $40 per month during the Advanced Course plus allowances for summer training and travel. Fellowship and social activity. The chance to work with modern Army equipment, and perhaps to qualify for Army flight training if it is offered at your school. And then gold bars and a commission as an Army officer.

Why not talk to your Professor of Military Science now. Let him know you're interested in signing up for the Advanced Course. Then if you are offered an opportunity to join, don't pass it up. It's the program that's best for you... and best for your country.

If you're good enough to be an Army officer, don't settle for less.

Scholarships And Loans Near Million Mark

The University of Vermont will award more than three quarters of a million dollars in scholarships and loans to its students during the 1965-66 academic year, principally from alumni and private gifts for that purpose and from federal loan funds.

Allen Walker, director of financial aid at the University, said a total of about $550,000 will be awarded to upperclassmen and around $225,000 to members of the freshman class.

"As usual, we had many more applications for scholarships and loans than we have dollars even though the amount of aid has tripled in the last four years," Walker said.

Walker, who assumed his new position in February, said about 750 freshmen applied for some form of financial help while about 700 upperclassmen sought aid.

March 1 was the deadline for incoming freshmen to apply for aid and Walker said that letters of notification will be mailed out around May 1. April 1 was the cutoff date for upperclassmen to apply. Recipients will be notified after the spring semester grades are known.

The largest single source of scholarship funds comes from the Wilbur Fund with the remainder coming from alumni, service clubs, local organizations and individual donors. Most of the money for loans comes from such sources as the federal government (National Defense Student Loans), nursing student loans, health professions student loans, and from alumni and private gifts setting up loan funds.

"More and more, colleges are recognizing the need of helping qualified students get to institutions of higher learning and as a result financial aid is playing a vital role in this area. Both state legislatures and the federal government have been active in establishing scholarship and loan funds for worthy and needy students. I think this growth will continue for some time to come," adds Walker.

Gilleland Is Named As New Marshall

There will be a new University of Vermont Marshall stepping out in front of the academic procession which will form in honor of the appearance here of Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson.

Ms. Pearson will be the University's Honor's Day speaker on Friday, (April 30) at Patrick Gymnasium in a ceremony open to the public.

Prof. Frederick C. Marston, Jr., who has headed academic processions at Vermont since 1958, has stepped down from the post; and Prof. Brady B. Gilleland has been named to carry forward the traditional duties which have been held by such colleagues as Acting President Lyman S. Rowell, former Dean of Administration Robert E. Kroepisch, Prof. Andrew E. Nuquist, and Emeritus Professor David Marvin.

The marshall presides at all academic affairs, has control over the faculty and student marshalls, presents guest to the president of the University on formal occasions and, in past years when Commencement was held outdoors whenever weather permitted, it was the marshall's responsibility to call for the scheduling in or out-of-doors on the morning of the event.

As marshall, Professor Gilleland will carry the University's silver mace which was the gift of the Class of 1927.

Lettermen Hold 25th Dinner

The University of Vermont will honor its athletes Thursday at the 25th annual lettermen's dinner at the Ethan Allen Club.

Dartmouth basketball coach Alvin (Doggie) Julian will be the featured speaker. Dr. Samuel Bogorad, former chairman of the University's athletic council and chairman of the English department, will be the toastmaster.

Various awards will be made in recognition of outstanding athletic and scholastic achievement. Highlight of the evening will be the presentation of the Letter in Life plaque to an alumnus who was a letterman as an undergraduate and for his superior accomplishments in life.

CAMPUS ON WHEELS

By Judi Weintraub

From Burlington, Vermont to Berkeley, California college campuses have been swamped with sports cars, motorcycles and scooters, and bicycles. Now, as the weather gets warmer, more and more students at UVM are seen riding or pedaling across the green. Many of them have their own opinions and reasons for owning one or more of these means of transportation.

Emil DiDonato possess a unique combination - an Austin

Healey and a bike. Why would anyone with a Healey want a bicycle? Well, Emil has his ideas on this. He calls his car a "useful necessity" - getting him places faster and when weather conditions do not permit the use of a bike. He feels, however, that there is too much rushing in the world, and that people don't have or take the time to notice the beauty of nature around them. Emil rides his bike to see this world - somewhat of a "romanticist," as he calls himself. He began to ride a bike at a summer resort where he worked, and developed his enjoyment of it. Now, whenever possible, he rides it, sometimes for miles and miles.

David St. John, on the other hand, also owns an Austin Healey but sticks to riding in that. He says there is "something about driving a sports car" and that is why he sold his Thunderbird and bought the Healey. His practical reasons for owning it are its performance on the road, as compared to big cars, style, and its power and six gear options as compared to other sports cars. Healeys have a tone all their own whether they are racing, climbing or idling. This tone represents a storm under control and in tune.

Steve Shulte, of Tau Epsilon Phi, represents the third preference - the motorcycle. About three weeks ago he sold his Corvette and bought a BSA cycle. The reason he gives for doing this is that he couldn't afford the car - the motorcycle gives him 55 miles per gallon while the "vette" only 11. It is, however, more than that. Steve admits that he got the "bug" for a motorcycle. It was something he "had to have." He is glad he followed this impulse; for now he "loves" it. While zooming along on his cycle he feels "free as a bird" without a care in the world.

Thus, the number of scooters, cycles, bikes and sports cars increases. They are more than just fads or crazes - they have become a part of college life.

Coming to Boston?

Here are four good reasons why you should stay at Franklin Square House:

- It is economical. Rates $17-$26 a week, with two meals a day.
- It is homelike. Management makes every effort to make it a "home away from home."
- It is convenient. Close to good public transportation.
- It has a 62-year record of safety and security.

CATS CLIP UNH; 6-1, 6-1

Trackmen To Face Bowdoin College Sat

The University of Vermont track and field forces make their spring debut Saturday by traveling to Brunswick, Maine to face a strong Bowdoin College squad. The Catamounts appear to be facing a long season on the cinders after a slow start in the indoor campaign. Veteran Coach Archie Post has a young squad with nine lettermen and only three of the nine are seniors.

Leading the pack for the Catamounts again this year is junior pole vaulter Don Mayland. Mayland, a Merrick, N.Y. native, is already the greatest vaulter in the University's history. He holds all University records plus four indoor records in other areas of New England. Mayland has twice won the New England Indoor AAU pole vault championship and has twice won the Yankee Conference Indoor crown. Mayland has been defeated in pole vault competition only once since his junior year in high school. This came in the opening meet of the indoor season this year against Bates when he had been away from vaulting for eight months. Now the junior ace is rounding into shape and has been clearing 14-feet consistently in recent workouts. Mayland will also enter the hurdles and the high jump.

Other veterans will also be counted on for key points. They include Captain Carl Frattini in the broad jump, Pete Stickney and Tom Whittaker in the weights, Larry Perlmuter and Dave Matthews in the sprints, Richard Ashton and Walt Stowell in the distances and Vin De-Cesaris in the 440.

Tuesday afternoon the UVM baseball team traveled to Durham, N.H., to initiate their 75th baseball season, the shortest in UVM history. The Cats will play 15 games in 19 days, which will prove to be a big league test for the Vermont team. This means that the Cats will have to go with at least 3 starters and will also have to rely on the bench for a great amount of support. Hitting and pitching slumps must be avoided because any one slump could prove to be disastrous.

The opening pitcher for Vermont will be Captain Charlie Foster. Opposing him for the Wildcats will be John Strobel. Sophomore John McCord will go to the hill for the Cats in the second game of the 2 game series against UNH. One more thing to plague the Cats is that Wayne Van Ham will miss action for at least these first 2 games due to a sprained ankle that he sustained during Saturday's practice.

The Cat's home opener will be Friday afternoon against the University of Mass., followed by another game Saturday afternoon.

Vermont experienced some problems on the left side of the infield during its southern jaunt (seven errors in five games) and as a result Lapointe has switched his personnel around.

Sophomore Bunky Morris, who has tried at short, has been switched to third while Foster, who when he wasn't pitching was in the outfield, will move to shortstop when not taking his turn on the mound. When he is pitching, junior Dick Whittier will play short. Rick Aldrich, the latest in a long line of outstanding Spaulding High of Barre athletes to perform at Vermont, is a catcher by trade but was tried at third during the Southern Trip. He hit at a .333 clip but had troubles affield so Lapointe has switched him to left field and moved Wayne Van Ham over to right. Pete MacDonald will control center. Veterans Mike Behan, Bob Cronin and John Tartara complete the lineup. Behan will be behind the plate while Cronin and Tartara will patrol second and first base, respectively. Tartara was an All Yankee Conference selection last season.

If the Cats can get off to a good start, they have the potential to carry home the Yankee Conference title. A little home support for the first home games would supply that extra needed punch, so let's see some home town spirit.

INTRAMURAL SCOREBOARD

In the Intramural championship volleyball game this Monday, Sigma Phi Epsilon defeated Delta Psi. This was the culmination of weeks of intramural play in which the winners in each of the two fraternity leagues played each other for the championship. The final results were as follows:

Catamounts Begin Spring Football Lose 14 Varsity Men At Graduation

The University of Vermont opened spring football drills with its "greenest squad" since Bob Clifford became head coach.

"In fact," says Clifford who has guided the Catamounts to a 16-8 record in his previous three seasons, "we are so green that we are making our first unit the green team this spring."

Graduation next month will riddle the ranks of last year's team that won seven of eight games, removing 14 members of the first two units. In fact, only three players who started in the final game against Middlebury last fall will still be around in September.

This trio includes Capt. Rusty Brink at center, Jack Schweberger at end, and Scott Fitz at quarterback. They spearhead a squad of 57 expected to report on Monday afternoon at Centennial Field.

Gone from the first two units are four tackles (Ed Fugit, Fred Boese, Tom Mongeon and Denis Black), two guards (George Oelze and Ron Hertel), two ends (Paul Giardi and Larry Rice), three halfbacks (Ken Andrade, UVM Football Coach Bob Clifford plans for this Spring's practice.

Frank Foerster and Deane Kent), two fullbacks (Richie Reynolds and Carl Ettlinger), and one quarterback (Jim Brennan).

Reynolds, Foerster, Kent and Andrade accounted for nearly 80 per cent of Vermont's total rushing yardage last fall while Kent, Giardi and Foerster were the Nos. 2, 3, and 4 pass receivers.

Vermont will work out only an hour and a half each day because of the tight academic calendar and will hold a total of 15 days of practice, concluding with the annual spring scrimmage game on May 1.

Frosh 9 Open At Home Mon.

The University of Vermont freshman baseball team opened its 12-game schedule at home on Wednesday against St. Lawrence.

Although playing 12 games, the Kittens will play on only six dates, all games being double-headers of seven innings each.

On Saturday, Vermont will be at Dartmouth. On April 26, Norwich comes to Centennial. The Frosh travel to St. Lawrence on May 1, Norwich on May 3, and round out the schedule at home against Dartmouth on May 8.

Coach John (Fuzzy) Evans has a squad of 20 players working out.

Squad members are:

Pitchers - Dave Cronin, Richmond; Ronald Gondek, Nashua, N.H.; Bruce Lombard, Windsor; John Packard, Shrewsbury, Mass.; Dave Salls, St. Albans; Don Schneider, Cedar Grove, N.J.

Catcher - Bob Schroeder, Wallingford, Conn.

Infielders - Denis Brochu, East Hardwick; Art DeLucia, West Haven, Conn.; Ron Izumi, Winsted, Conn.; Bob Neild, Montreal; Ken Newman, Eastchester, N.Y.; Bernard Villemarie, Winooski; Gondek, Lombard, and Packard.

Outfielders - Dean Bartholomew, Fair Haven; Francis Di-Cesare, Rutland; Dave Holton, Fair Haven; Bill Librera, East Paterson, N.J.; Dick Miles, Arlington; Irving Waldo, Randolph Center, and Darrell Woodward, Newport Center.

Hoopster Leads Nation?

In the somewhat dubious honor department, junior Milt Goggans ranked ninth in the country for most personal fouls committed. In 20 games, he was whistled down 82 times or an average of 4.1 per contest.

Nota Bene ROTC

By John H. Blackford

On April 27, 1965 the University Senate voted that:

- 1.) "Four credit hours be granted for each of the first two years of Military Science, and these shall be accepted to meet the requirements of three electives within (all the colleges)."
- 2.) "Not more than eight semester hours credit be permitted for advanced Military Science, the amount of credit to be determined by the respective faculties."

According to Col. Leonard G. Robinson, PhD at UVM, "Everyone participating in the discussion during the Senate meeting appreciated the importance of authorizing credit for Military Science on an equitable basis. I felt that they were quite objective, and even those who were opposed to the credit policy were sympathetic to the objectives of the ROTC program."

Of special concern to engineers is the reaction of the College of Technology. "Will they increase their course requirements as a result of the Senate actions?"

According to Warren O. Essler Dean of the College of Technology: "At the present time there will be no increased course requirements as a result of the Senate action in the College of Technology program, and courses taken in Military Science will be fully acceptable as free electives in the College of Technology course programs."

ANNOUNCEMENT

.. IMPORTANT ..

Deadline for schedule of events to be put in The 1965-66 Date Book is MAY 1ST.

Please submit your dates

IMMEDIATELY!!

Thank You.

Tomorrow marks the seventy-first annual Founders (Honors) Day at UVM. The Honorable Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada, will deliver the keynote address. Twenty to twenty-five members of the Canadian press are expected to be present. There are unconfirmed reports that Pearson may make a major address, however no advanced text or title of the address has been released to date.

The academic procession and convocation, this year to be held in the Patrick Gymnasium, will begin at 10:30 A.M. after which a luncheon will be held at Marsh Hall to honor the Prime Minister.

The purpose of Founders Day is to honor the Senior Class and those students who have achieved scholastic distinction or who have won prizes during the year. It will be the first occasion for seniors to march in their academic gowns. The new President of S.A. and the new Chief Justice of the Student Court will be inaugurated. Students on Honor Roll and members of the Honorary Societies will receive recognition.

Honors Day was begun in 1894 by a Professor Goodrich to "officially recognize the debt owed by Vermonters and this institution in particular to the Illinois, Minnesota and Southwest Missouri. They lost three ballots each to U. of Redlands, San Fernando Valley, and the University of Southern California. Moving on to the octi-finals, the team lost to U. of Miami by one point.

After regional elimination rounds in March, forty schools out of 200 qualified for Nationals. UVM emerged as one of the top five schools in the New York-New England region, with 26 schools in contention. At West Point were five teams from each of the eight regions. Following the elimination rounds were the octi-finals, quarter-finals, semi-finals, and the final round. Winning first place was Carson-Newman (Tennessee).

Monday, May 3rd, UVM will host Linfield College in two debates:

4 p.m. (Billings) - "Resolved that the Fed. Gov't should establish a National Program of public work for the unemployed."

8 p.m. (Billings) - "Resolved that the girl should stand half the cost of the date."

Graduation Day Nears

The Class of '65 will see its four years of work at UVM culminate in the graduation ceremonies on Sunday, May 23.

During the whole weekend parents and students, as well as a large number of alumni, will be on campus. To begin the weekend on Friday evening there will be four open houses given by former students. For Saturday, many things are scheduled: at 8:00 a.m. there is a Medical Class Breakfast; at 3:00 p.m. there is a dedication of Joseph E. Carrigan Hall (Dairy Science), Vermont Room, and the Bertha Terrill Building; between 4 and 6:00 p.m. four sororities are having open houses; at night various alumni groups are giving dinners.

Sunday, at 8:00 a.m. is a Mortar Board Breakfast and at 10:00 a.m. is the Baccalaureate Service in Patrick Gym. A dinner for all classes will take place at Waterman at 11:30 a.m. At last, at 2:30 p.m. Commencement Exercises begin at Patrick Gym.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Next week a complete list of Senior Week events, speakers, and Honorary Degrees will be printed.

Is a human being just one step above the wild beasts? Whether intended or not, this is essentially the question asked by Jerry Crawford in his play, The Look of Eagles. The author sets the play on a Mississippi River island in the early 19th century, the time of our glorious pioneers.

The pioneers are perhaps the most glorified but least known characters in American history. The play shows them to be a group of insecure, lustful, alcoholic, and violent creatures. They fear the natural elements and they cling tenuously to the spiritual aspect of life. Their chief concern is to have their own wants satisfied. Hamilton (Steve Stearns) is driven by sex. He is quite similar to the character of Crown in DuBose Heyward's Porgy and Bess. Both characters used the bed for a bible. Joanna (Suzanne Ek) is the apostle of God for this ragged bunch. Milo (Richard Donn) is completely saturated with alcohol throughout the entire play. Where he gets all his booze from, I don't know. Edmond (Tony Hall) is a chattering mass of spineless protoplasm.

The audience is not seeing a stage of actors, but a cage of animals at their basest behavior. They grovel about the stage, uttering the strangest of noises. Joanna, the "saint," falls in love with Hamilton's body and she savors the experience. Hamilton, in turn, succumbs to Milo's alcohol. The plot leads to a chaotic climax which leaves us with Milo's plea: "We're only human." This moment gives one the only piece of insight this play has to offer. A human is supposed to be the highest form of life on earth and yet he must make that time-honored excuse: "We're only human." What more can you be?

The action of the play is fast-moving, but excessively violent.

The opening question is answered by the author in the fact that these characters never do soar higher than the eagles. It seems as if Mr. Crawford is saying that this country was founded, not on religion, sacrifice, and heroism, but on the instinctive

OP From Montreal

On Saturday, April 10, the Fleming Museum of the University of Vermont opened an exhibit of optical or "OP" art by six Montreal artists of major importance on the contemporary scene. They are the painters Marcel Barbeau, Guido Molinari, Claude Tousignant, and Jean Goguen, the printmaker-painter Yves Gaucher, and the constructivist sculptor Gino Lorcini.

Titled "OP From Montreal," the exhibit will continue through May 10. It was organized as a contribution to the University's newly established Canadian Studies Program, to be climaxed by the appearance of Prime Minister Lester Pearson at the Founder's Day ceremonies, Friday, April 30.

human impulses to survive and to plod onward. I do not know whether he is correct or not in his assumption, but his method of stating this fact leaves much to be desired. The Look of Eagles leaves me unmoved and unimpressed.

Montreal looms large in the optical movement. Molinari and Tousignant are leading figures in "The Responsive Eye," the current international survey at the Museum of Modern Art. Barbeau, Gaucher and Goguen all have established reputations on both sides of the Atlantic. Lorcini is a rapidly rising figure.

Since the exhibit was assembled, Molinari and Lorcini have become prize winners in the annual Spring Exhibition of the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts. Barbeau has been awarded a fellowship to the International Artist's Seminar at Fairleigh Dickinson University, this year devoted to "OP" art.

Taken individually, the thirty-six works were chosen to reveal the diversity of "OP." Seen together they underline the distinctive unity of the movement in Montreal.

Optical painting is abstract painting based on odd phenomena of visual perception; "pulsating" color combinations, after images, linear patterns that seem to move — effects that may make the eye dizzy, and for some, the headache, but which for the artist are the means of mesmerizing intensity. The paintings begin on the canvas as simple geometric patterns of color in bands, circles, or squares to be completed as vibrant designs in the viewer's eye.

The prints and sculpture are less extreme. They depend more on optical play that is a part of the object itself. In Lorcini's constructions, light is made to splinter among polished aluminum blocks. Characteristic of "OP" art, the craftsmanship is impeccable.

What distinguishes this group from Montreal is a classic restraint that lends an unexpected serenity to their version of "OP." The initial impact of razzle dazzle quickly gives way to a pervading sense of formal, luminous beauty.

The six reflect a development that in Montreal dates from the 1950's, and grew out of a disinterest in the license of Abstract Expressionism in favor of a more disciplined, "hard-edge" art. To indicate the continuity of ideas, each artist is represented by at least one example of earlier, pre-optical work.

Tuesday evening, April 27, at 8 p.m. the artists will participate in a panel discussion of the exhibit and their work. Sponsoring the event with the Museum are two student groups, SCOPE, the cultural affairs committee, and the John Dewey Club. Following the discussion the artists will be honored at a gallery reception.

The works in the exhibition have been loaned by the East Hampton Gallery, New York, Galerie Agnes LeFort, and Galerie du Siecle, Montreal, and the Bundy Gallery, Waitsfield, Vermont, as well as from private collections.

VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE BARREL

As everyone knows, thirteen-twelfths of the earth's surface is water. Thus we can see how important it is to know and understand our oceans. Toward this end American colleges last year embarked on a program to increase enrollment in oceanography. I am pleased to report that results were nothing short of spectacular: In one single semester the number of students majoring in oceanography rose by 100%—from one student to two!

But more oceanographers are still needed, and so today this column, normally a vehicle for slapdash jocularity, will instead devote itself to a brief course in oceanography. In view of the solemnity of the subject matter, my sponsors, the Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blade Co., makers of Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades which give you more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other brand you can name—if, by chance, you don't agree, the makers of Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades will buy you a pack of whatever brand you think is better—my sponsors, I say, the Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blade Co. will today, because of the solemnity of this column, forego their usual commercial message.

We begin our study of oceans with that ever-popular favorite, the Pacific. Largest of all oceans, the Pacific was discovered by Balboa, a Spanish explorer of great vision. To give you an idea of Balboa's vision, he first saw the Pacific while standing on a peak in Darien, which is in Connecticut.

The Pacific is not only the largest ocean, but the deepest. The the Pacific was discovered by Balboa, a Spanish explorer of great vision.

Mindanao Trench, off the Philippine Islands, measures more than 5,000 fathoms in depth. (It should be pointed out here that ocean depths are measured in fathoms—lengths of six feet—after Sir Walter Fathom, a British nobleman of Elizabethan times who, upon his eighteenth birthday, was given a string six feet long. Many young men would have sunk in a funk if all they got for their birthday was a string six feet long, but not Sir Walter! String in hand, he scampered around the entire coast of England measuring seawater until he was arrested for loitering. Incidentally, a passion for measuring seems to have run in the family: Fathom's grandnephew, Sir John Furlong, spent all his waking hours measuring racetracks until Charles II had him beheaded in honor of the opening of the London School of Economics.)

But I digress. Let us, as the poet Masfield says, go down to the sea again. (The sea, incidentally, has ever been a favorite subject for poets and composers. Who does not know and love the many robust sea chantees that have enriched our folk music—songs like "Sailing Through Kansas" and "I'll Swab Your Deck If You'll Swab Mine" and "The Artificial Respiration Polka.")

My own favorite sea chanty goes like this: (I'm sure you all know it. Why don't you sing along as you read?)

O, carry me to the deep blue sea,
Where I can live with honor,
And every place I'll shave my face
With Stainless Steel Personna.
Sing hi, sing ho, sing mal-de-mer,
Sing hey and nonny-nonny,
Sing Jimmy crack corn and I don't care,
Sing Stainless Steel Personna.

I'll harpoon whales and jib my sails,
And read old Joseph Conrad,
And take my shaves upon the waves,
With Stainless Steel Personna.

Sing la, sing lo, sing o-lee-a-lay,
Sing night and noon and morning,
Sing salt and spray and curds and whey,
Sing Stainless Steel Personna.

Band Completes Spring Tour

The University of Vermont Band concluded its spring tour with its annual concert Sunday afternoon in the Ira Allen Chapel.

The band played at the World's Fair on Wednesday, at New Jersey and New York high schools on Thursday, and was in southern Vermont on Friday.

Sunday's concert started at 4 p.m. and was free and open to the public.

One of the feature numbers was performed by the 70-piece band in the special number the band premiered at the fair. The number is "Spectrum for Accordion and Band," commissioned by the music department for its fair appearance. Written by Richard Oliver, a New York high school music teacher, the number features Laureen Coutermarsh of Rutland playing the cordovox.

The cordovox has many of the tonal possibilities of the electronic organ and concert band.

New Exec. Appointed

Next year's Executive Committee of Vermont Conference was chosen Monday night by Bonnie Murray, Director, after a meeting of those interested in participating. Chosen were Lee Linde from Underhill, Vermont, to act as Coordinator; David Storti from Barrington, Rhode Island, as Director of Public Relations; Theo Russell from Glen Falls, New York, as Director of Arrangements; Ellen Montrose from Floral Park, New York, as Treasurer; and Jerilyn Jerry from Cornwall, New York, and Jane Karpich from Springfield, New Jersey, to act as Co-Secretaries. Those assisting the committee are Lois Senger, Wendy Wollish, Joseph Badgewick, Jon Durand, Lynn Householder, Jan Siegel, Errol Selsby, Linda Hilfman, Eve Rapport and Carl Lisman.

The topic for next year has not yet been chosen, and any suggestions would be most welcome. People who wish to help on Vermont Conference '66 should contact either Bonnie Murray or Lee Linde.

Parks anywhere

You can stand on your head to park on most campuses. And all you end up with is a headache. But not if you ride a Honda. It needs only as much elbow room as you with an armload of books. So you can squeeze in a little closer to that 8 o'clock class than your 4-wheel competition.

A Honda helps keep you solvent as well as sane. Prices start about $215*. You'll get up to 200 mpg, depending on the model. And practically never need service. The star performer above is the CB-160. Just one of the 15 Honda models. With its 4-stroke, twin cylinder engine and 16.5 HP, this showoff does better than 80 mph. Look into a Honda soon. No more headaches.

EDITORIAL...

About a month ago, a meeting was held to which the administration, faculty, and student organization leaders were invited. The purpose of such a gathering was to inform those present, in particular the students, who always seem to be the last to find anything out here, about the many new University decisions and to create some sort of mutual understanding and rapport among those in attendance. As was stated in an Editorial earlier this semester dealing with the same topic, the Administration, represented by Acting President Rowell, outlined basic policies and decisions concerning such aspects as the new calendar, new four point grading system, the renovation of certain buildings, and an increase in the number of athletic scholarships available. It's a shame that we cannot do so much for our scholars as we do for our athletes, but this is not the immediate point at hand. The student leaders at that time also had a chance to voice their opinion. Much was supposedly accomplished at this gathering. In truth, however, how much could have been done at one meeting held to represent an entire year's work?

Why not institute, starting next year with a new semester and a new President, a series of such gatherings during which administration, faculty, and students can get together to discuss university policy, etc., and to iron out differences. And why should it be restricted only to campus leaders, why not anyone in the Student Body interested enough to care and to voice his opinion about this school? Students are always complaining about not being able to express their ideas to the proper authorities. Well . . . this would be a golden opportunity.

With the inception of such a series, there would be less room for the idle gossip and rumors now pervading this campus concerning new policy and decision. The entire student body, or at least the interested part of it, would be able to learn first hand what is being planned and would have the chance to voice an opinion at the proper time.

L.M.

Editor's Note:

The quotation appearing at the bottom of page 5, column 2, was sent to us by newly appointed President Shamon McCune. Entitled "Spy," it sums up the attitude which should be taken by this, or any other, newspaper and which in future issues will hopefully be followed in reporting and reflecting on campus life.

Letters To The Editor

Freedom Deprived

To the Editor:

Mr. Johnson seems to have made an important point in his letter to The CYNIC (April 23) - namely, that the new marking system sacrifices the superior student to the mediocre one. However, since the majority of UVM students are mediocre, this may prove to be a happy change for us all.

More disturbing are the implications behind this change, which was not reported to the student body until it was too late for effective protest. The problem seems to lie with a sluggish administration which is more concerned with landscaping and with athletic facilities than with providing a stimulating intellectual climate by filling the terrible need for more books, better science facilities, and higher teaching salaries.

UVM's problem is similar to that of UCLA in that the administrator have taken over. Students and faculty have been subordinated to the point where we meekly accept all decisions imposed from above, while we meekly watch the departure of Mr. Penner, Mr. Torch, et. al. We are being deprived of our freedom, and we are going to have to take it back.

Sincerely,
Mary Ellen Nye, '66

Spring Cometh

Lines Recited in Dismay by Departure

Sing ho! for Spring in giddy measures -- what tough we sing
a hackneyed song?
Our season's pleasures have tasted long and well -- no dust
obscures their charms.
Sing ho! I say -- our theme is just,
our artful arms will win the day -- lo and Paean! Ho! Hurray!
Cast off that frowning, mourning black, loose a laugh and launch a cheer . . .
Spring, that cometh every year,
Spring, that cometh but once a year,
Spring is back!
Hey,
Spring is here!

Activities Ignored

To the Editor:

There is only a month between the date of writing this letter and the beginning of Senior Week and Commencement. Yet there has been no announcement, to our knowledge, of any of the times or activities connected with these functions.

We are not ever sure what campus organization has control over the functions but we must commend them on their secrecy. There isn't a senior I've talked to who has any knowledge what will happen Senior Week or Commencement.

We would like to request those in charge, be they students or bureaucrats, to get out the pertinent information to the Senior Class so that concrete plans can be made for this week.

THE SCEPTIC

ON POPPINS, PEARSON AND PEOPLE

Imagine, Lester Pearson and Mary Poppins - both of them in the same week. The magic of Canada and Walt Disney brings to the UVM campus so much enjoyment, it's hard to believe.

Floating out of the clouds this past week and into our dream world came Mary Poppins with her umbrella, bringing fun, jubilation and eternal happiness. Her Disney-made world of make-believe is so delightful it appeals to everyone. Dancing penguins, talking cows, and flying people: everyone is happy. All over the world, it seems, Mary Poppins made all cruel fathers into nice, wonderful loving Dads. It's just a Disney world.

Flying out of the clouds tomorrow and into our dream world comes Prime Minister Lester Pearson without his umbrella (which, as you might know, is out of fashion with Prime Ministers) bringing understanding and eternal happiness. We do not know what he will speak on but whatever it may be, the people in Patrick Gymnasium will listen. They will be happy and, when he leaves, the people will know that the leader of our northern neighbor is intelligent and good.

Falling out of the clouds, this past week, into the very real world of Vietnam come bombs, napalm and otherwise bringing death and destruction. The American-built bombs come from American-built planes. When these planes leave, the people will know that the United States is intelligent and good, and they shall be eternally happy.

On The Prowl

By Charlie Catamount

When I left you last week I was on my way to Valade's to meet an old girl friend of mine who was coming home by bus for the week. To make a long story short, all I got out of that deal was a free cup of coffee from her mother. C'est la vie.

Speaking of coffee, this is one of the things I enjoy most in your human world. One scant sugar, a little cream, a heaping teaspoon of fragrant, brown coffee (I'm sacreligious and use instant,) and voila—a wonderful, black, bubbling brew. It can be purchased almost anywhere, is inexpensive, and has no undesirable side effects.

While in Bailey yesterday I became bored with watching students play Hide with Me, Kick the Can, and Red Light. Stimulated by the humming lights and motivated to activity to keep from freezing (fur or no fur, it's cold in there), I decided to do a little research on coffee.

The stimulatory effects of coffee were first discovered about 1440 by an Abyssinian goatherder named Kaldi, who noticed how active his goats became after eating the red berries which contain the coffee beans. Kaldi mashed some of the berries, mixed them with butter, and ate the paste. Maybe this is where the saying, "coffee so thick you can cut it with a knife" originated. In any case, it sounds rather nauseous.

The Arabs were the first to brew liquid coffee, as well as the first to cultivate the trees. The use of coffee spread throughout Asia Minor and reached Europe in the mid-1500's. Wars, religious battles, and economic disagreements resulted from the introduction of "coffee arabica," named by Charles Linnaeus (or Ol' Charlie Linnaeus, according to Dr. Torch).

The red berries grow on low trees in tropical areas. The beans, obtained by squeezing the berries, are first roasted and then blended and ground. Directions for brewing are diverse and numerous. Though espresso is nice, I prefer coffee liquer and Irish coffee, being a rugged beast.

Each cup of coffee contains about 3.5 grains of 1, 3, 7- trimethylxanthine or C₈H₁₀N₄O₂. Didn't know that was floating around in your cup, did you? Never fear, it's only caffeine. Studies indicate that it enhances learning, but if you drink a great deal of coffee (like my 6 or 8 cups a day) the caffeine seems to have no effects. In 1682 a character called Chamberlayne said that great amounts of coffee caused impotency. (I would tend to disagree with this, though I would prefer not to say why.)

Have to stop before I get carried away. Besides, I feel a caffeine fit coming on.

Yours as ever,

Charlie Catamount, Robin Frost

Briggs And Daniels To Debate

Professor Robert Daniels and Mr. Horace Briggs highlight a panel which will debate the current war in Vietnam this coming Tuesday, May 4, at 8 p.m. in lower Waterman lounge. Professor Daniels of the History Department is a well known expert on Russian affairs and Mr. Briggs, of the Political Science Department, is a specialist in Asian affairs. Also participating will be Miles Wortman, a student who is currently doing work on Vietnamese Affairs. Mr. Molho of the History Department, and members of the Burlington community (whose names are not available at press time). The debate is being sponsored jointly by the History Honorary Society and the Joint Committee on Human Rights. A general question period will take place immediately following the debate.

"The purpose of the debate," said a spokesman for the two groups, "is to stimulate interest on campus, in an area which threatens to explode into an all-out war. This debate, along with the discussion that follows, will inform the UVM and Burlington communities of the issues at stake. Just this past week, Senator George Aiken came out in support of a less-active role for the United States in Southeast Asia." The evening promises to be both exciting as well as informative.

Administration Defended

To the Editor:

If you desire information concerning the running of the University, just refer to the CYNIC. They seem to have all the answers, or at least think they have all the answers.

This semester, ever since the new staff has taken the helm, there has been an exceeding number of criticisms and accusations made toward the administration's policies, both in the way they have been presented and carried out. There has never been a compliment given to the administration, but rather the criticism shines through by playing upon the weak points and never once giving credit to the good points of any actions.

One such criticism was in regard to the announcement of our new President and how sloppily this was handled. Another criticism that caused considerable turmoil was the calendar that is now in effect. The arguments here were the poorly designed Thanksgiving recess and the mal-thought on the part of the administration regarding the Easter-Passover weekend. But no one ever gave thought to the complexities of designing a calendar in the best interests of students AND the university. Finally, the four-point grading system that will be soon put into effect caused excitement in the CYNIC office as Richard Berk went right ahead and jumped on the administration (with good intentions) but only ended up in making them look bad again by accusing them of poor presentation and lack of student consultation.

The most ironic situation, however, this semester is the realization by Laura Schidhaus that the administration is really trying to help and consider the students and not to spite them. My Goodness! That IS what the administration is for.

I am not condemning criticism by the CYNIC - or by any student for that matter, but I am condemning your attitude. I believe that it is the responsibility of the CYNIC to bring out the highlights of these policies put forth by the administration and treat the weaknesses (and there are some) of policy or presentation with respect - thereby reciprocal respect by the administration might be expected and received. However, your present attitude - only concentrates on unfortunate mistakes made by the administration in a very childish manner.

Spy

"Furthermore the true Cynic must know that he is sent as a Messenger from God to men, to show unto them that as touching good and evil they are in error; looking for these where they are not to be found, nor ever bethinking themselves where they are. And like Diogenes when brought before Philip after the battle of Chaeronea, the Cynic must remember that he is a Spy. For a Spy he really is - to bring back word what things are on Man's side, and what against him. And when he has diligently observed all, he must come back with a true report, not terrified into announcing them to be foes who are no foes, nor otherwise perturbed or confounded by the things of sense."

EPICETUS

Perception

By David St. John

NOTICE -- Do not attempt to cross Bailey Swamp without life preservers and schmo shoes. These may be purchased at the University's Muk & Mud Headquarters below the old gym. Recently students have been asked not to go out alone after dark. One good reason is that you can't see at night and if you should attempt to cross the Swamp you could well become another vacuum victim. Many chewed pencils, girls' sailor hats, empty books, and cuds of bubblegum have been found floating along the perimeter of the Swamp.

CAUTION -- To all motorists. There is a tree on Redstone Campus which is located on the right of the road, just past Redstone Hall. This tree was planted by Murray Allen, the first of the everlasting Rent-A-Cops for the purpose of slowing horse-drawn carriages. It is now watched over by tree surgeons who are supported by the local auto-body repair shops. The cuts and bruises on the road side of the tree have been mended and are now ready for the next corner cutter. (Wouldn't it be wonderful mischief for our "water tower decorators" to sneak over and borrow UVM saws and cut down the nice tree?)

FOILED -- Buildings and Grounds have been foiled in their sincerely severe attempt to keep the girls off Coolidge lawn. A ten-foot tall, hard wire fence with barbed wire along the top, was recently erected from the corner of Coolidge Hall to a tree at the sidewalk. At the time of construction it was unknown to Buildings and Grounds that the Women's Phys-Ed Department had just formed a girls' pole-vault team and was looking for a place to practice.

REMEMBER -- B.S. Degrees obtained at the University still stand for Bachelor of Science, regardless of how you obtain them. One young lady (J. R.) recently stated that she was here to get a bachelor. She may stay longer and go for her master or even a doctor.

Book Review

Introducing Korea

By Miles Wortman

KOREA'S HERITAGE By Shannon McCune. Illustrated 250 pages, Charles Tuttle, $5.75

In 1950, the armies of Communist North Korea invaded South Korea and began a conflict which was to last for three years and involve the United States. Many Americans were to lose lives fighting in a land they knew nothing about while others, in the United States learned for the first time that a country called Korea existed. There was a great need for information on this country and, as a result, Shannon McCune wrote Korea's Heritage, A Regional and Social Geography in 1955. This book is an overall review of Korea and is an attempt to cover all aspects of life in that Asiatic country. Shannon McCune is well qualified to write such a book. He was born in Korea of an American missionary family and wrote his doctoral thesis on Korea. He has written many articles in his major field, geography.

If there is one fault in this book, it is in its purpose which this reviewer surmises to be to inform the American public of Korea. The book is written to the American public. Because of this, the book is both narrow and easily dated. More than once Dr. McCune refers to the "American G.I. who served with the occupation troops in Korean cities" who found "little to admire in all the devastation wrought by bombs and shells." Similarly, the book, being an overall review of Korea is, in some places superficial. Thus, Korea's Heritage, as a reference work, is lacking.

But Korea's Heritage, as an informal introduction to the country serves its purpose well. The book covers all segments of northern and southern Korean culture in an easy manner. Dr. McCune's style is very fluent and the plentiful charts and maps which he supplies is of great help to the uninitiated. In addition, photographs are plentiful and are a delight. It is rare when one can describe an informative book such as this one as an enjoyment. Although it is by no means a perfect scholastic work, Korea's Heritage is, for a casual, interested reader, a good book.

Test Analysis Column

T. A. C. will stand for Test Analysis Column and will appear in bold face letters from time to time on the editorial page of this newspaper. In answer to some students' screams about unjust testing procedures, bearing in mind that some faculty members have recently and publicly admitted that they were amateurs at making up tests, the news editor, after consultation with the faculty advisor, decided to start this column.

A committee has been established to begin the ground work necessary in such an undertaking. Joan Clark, Mary Ellen Anderson and Diane Duley, working under the direction of David St. John, have set up interview schedules for the remainder of the semester. The girls are presently members of the news and feature staff. Other students will be considered for the committee if they show interest and will work.

In this and subsequent Test Analysis Columns, we will attempt to discover the established criteria for testing at the University of Vermont. The criteria will then be compared to those of other eastern universities. We will accomplish this through interviews with administrators and faculty members of the schools with which we are concerned. We intend to interview noted psychologists in the field of education. The criteria involved and reasoning behind certain methods of testing will be made available to everyone through this news media.

Next week, Dr. Cook, Dean of Faculty, Dr. Bogorad, Chairman of the English Department, and Dr. Daniels, Chairman of the History Department, will be interviewed in regard to their ideas on testing.

Cadets Recieve National Awards

Previewing National Awards to be presented at UVM's 97th Military Review on Friday, April 30th, are Colonel L.G. Robinson, PMS, and Cadets J.D. Gallo, R.S. Severance, and J.F. Munn.

Colonel L.G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, recently announced that three ROTC Cadets have been singled out for receipt of national awards as a result of their distinguished service during the current academic year. Since there were but four types of award for which UVM Cadets competed, the brigade is justly proud of Cadet Lt. Col. R. Scott Severance, Class of '65, son of Mr. and Mrs.

R.J. Severance, Granville, N.Y., winner of the National Defense Transportation Award; Cadet 1st Lt. James D. Gallo, Class of '65, son of Mr. and Mrs. J.J. Gallo, Rutland, Vermont, winner of the Society of American Military Engineers Medal and Key for Senior ROTC Cadets; and Cadet 2nd Lt. John F. Munn, Class of '66, son of Mr. and Mrs. J.F. Munn, Bradford, Vermont, winner of the Society of American Military Engineers Medal and Key for Junior ROTC Cadets. Each of the young men has been selected as one of twenty winning cadets in the competition which spanned the nation and the hundreds of colleges and universities which participate in the Army ROTC program.

Presentations of the awards will take place at the 97th Annual Military Review at the University's Centennial Field on April 30th at 4:30 P.M.

Marksmanship Medals Awared To Bellino

Colonel L.G. Robinson, University of Vermont Professor of Military Science, presents five outstanding marksmanship awards to Cadet S/Sgt James C. Bellino.

ROTC Cadet S/Sgt James C. Bellino, Class of '67, son of Mr. & Mrs. John C. Bellino, 974 Pine Street, Burlington, Vermont, was recently awarded five medals for outstanding marksmanship by Colonel L. G. Robinson, UVM Professor of Military Science. Cadet Bellino is a two-year veteran of the Army ROTC marksmanship program at the University.

High average, high offhand, and high kneeling honors from UVM were added to a high ROTC score in the NRA Regional Invitational Tournament at Nasson College, Springvale, Me., and a 9th place out of 240 shooters in the Yankee Conference. Jim's high score for the season, 274 on the international target, was fired at Nasson. He also has been awarded two ribbons for his service as a marksman as a freshman and a sophomore.

Members of the junior ROTC class at the University of Vermont got a preview of coming summer attractions last weekend when they engaged in a two-day field exercise at Camp Johnson.

The weekend's activities helped to equip the cadets for the six-week summer camp they will attend at Fort Devens.

About 70 juniors participated in the field trip which found the cadets departing from campus on foot at 10 a.m. on Saturday and marching to Camp Johnson where they bivouaced. About 10 to 15 seniors assisted in the exercise while an additional 20 to 25 members of the Pershing Rifles acted as a guerilla unit.

The PRs functioned as an aggressor designed to harass the main body while in the field. This was the first full-scale commitment of the Pershing Rifle special unit since its formation earlier this semester.

The junior cadets were organized into a company headquarters of an executive officer and first sergeant and two platoons consisting of a platoon headquarters and three rifle squads.

They engaged in a number of exercises including night problems.

There was no late sleeping on Sunday with reveille at 6 a.m. The exercise ended on Sunday afternoon.

GRADUATION AWARD

Graduation day... a big day for academic and extracurricular awards. That hard-earned college degree... and for the man who has taken full advantage of his college years, a special award from the President of the United States—a commission as an officer in the United States Army... the gold bars of a Second Lieutenant. That's an award you can earn by taking Army ROTC.

Those gold bars mark you as a man apart from other men—a man able to work with others—to inspire them. They mark you a leader.

An Army officer's commission is proof to the world that your country places its trust and confidence in your judgment and ability—proof that you have what it takes to make a decision and then act on it.

These are qualities built by Army ROTC training... qualities that will pay off for the rest of your life, no matter what your career—military or civilian.

If you're good enough to be an Army officer, don't settle for less. Stay in ROTC.

UVM Wins Four-Loses one In Five Day Series

Base hit for the Cats! UVM lost his game 3-1 to UMass but came back to beat the Redmen 4-2 on Saturday.

By Al Rico and Al Rosenstein

On Tuesday, April 21, Vermont successfully opened its Yankee Conference season by defeating the Univ. of N.H. at Durham, N.H. Vermont scored 4 times in the first 2 innings and eventually coasted to a 6-1 opening victory.

Vermont quickly took a one run advantage when Pete MacDonald walked to open the game, stole 3rd, after being sacrificed to 2nd by Bobby Cronin, and then scored on Richie Aldrich's sacrifice fly. In the 2nd inning, Foster singled, Bucky Morris reached 1st on an error, and Steve Morse drove home Foster with the 2nd Catamount run on a blast to left field. MacDonald then walked for the 2nd time to load the bases. Cronin then reached 1st safely on another U.N.H. error, scoring both Morris and Morse. Two more runs were scored in the 6th and 7th innings on sacrifice flies by MacDonald and Tartara. Captain Foster deserves a lot of credit as he went the entire route to chalk up his 1st Yankee Conference Victory this year in a solid effort.

On Wednesday with a 1-0 season record, the Cats again defeated the Univ. of W.H. 6-1, to sweep their 2 game series.

The game was deadlocked at a 1-1 tie until the 8th inning when Vermont suddenly began to open up its ominous power. Foster walked, Bobby Cronin quickly followed with a smashing double, followed by Rich Aldrich and Mike Behan who both singled in some runs. Then John Tartara successfully squeezed home Al Foster with a beautiful bunt to give the Cats a 3 run edge going into the 9th inning. Although ahead by a 4-1 margin, the Cats didn't slacken their pace in the 9th inning. Morse opened the 9th with a single and sacrificed to 2nd by Christie. Then, with 2 out, Cronin got his 2nd hit of the day by scoring Foster (who replaced Morse as a pinch runner) with a single. Then Cronin, after moving to 2nd at the plate, stole 3rd and then eventually stole home on a delayed double steal with Aldrich sliding into 2nd. (Cronin compiled a total of 4 stolen bases for the Cats). Credit goes to Pitcher John McLeod who pitched a very strong game until the 7th inning when he tired and was replaced by Bill Christie who registered the victory for Vermont.

from third and the other 2 runners moved up. Mass. scored its second run of the inning on a block by Sheflott, which scored Babcock from third. Sheflott got out of further trouble in the inning when with runners on first and second and one out, Jim Lucynshi struck out and Mike Dells Pinna was cut down trying to steal second on the third strike.

Vermont got back into the game in the last of the first. Peter MacDonald led off with a bunt hit; Bobby Cronin then walked. Both runners were moved up on a sacrifice bunt by Rich Aldrich. Then MacDonald scored on a long flyball to center by John Tartara. Cronin also tried to score when the relay went through the infield but was thrown out at home plate.

Both teams were held scoreless until the 8th inning when Mass. added a run. In the inning when Dells Pinna hit a sharp grounder that third baseman Billy Copp couldn't handle. In trying to throw out the runner Copp threw the ball by first baseman John Tartara. Sheflott then struck out Jim Lucynshi and Carl Hamene, but Dells Pinna scored when shortstop Dick Whittier booted Paul Carsses grounder. Bill Christie finished up for Vermont, pitching the ninth inning. He gave up a hit and a walk but didn't allow a run in his one inning start on the mound.

Sheflott pitched well enough to win most games but the Cats had problems on the left side of their infield again, and gave up 2 unearned runs, the margin of difference in the game.

On Saturday afternoon the Cats were determined to bounce back from their first loss of the season. Coach Lapointe moved Bucky Morris to shortstop and installed Dave McKinnan at third base. Vermont's ace right hander Capt. Charlie Foster took the mound against Carl Boteze, and the results were very favorable, as Vermont topped Mass. 4-2. The Catamounts jumped out in front in the first inning with 2 runs. Pete MacDonald and Bobby Cronin walked on eight straight pitches. Then Wayne Van Ham reached first on an error by third baseman Jim Kuczynski to load the bases. John Tartara then rapped a sharp hit to center field to score 2 runs.

Mass. tied the game in the third, as poor fielding once again plagued Vermont. Paul Carsses led off the inning with a single, Carl Boteze then reached first as John Tartara was unable to handle Boteze's bunt. John Peacock then moved the runners up on a sacrifice bunt. Then after Jim Babcock struck out, Terry Swanson smashed a triple over centerfielder Pete MacDonald's head to score the runs.

Vermont scored its two winning runs in the last of the third, when with 2 outs catcher Mike Behan hit a high fly so high that Terry Swanson lost in the sun and Vermont scored 2 runs while the baffled right fielder covered his head from the illusive baseball.

From there it was Foster's game all the way as he pitched brilliantly. He struck out 9 men and didn't walk a batter, while going up 7 hits. After the third inning the Cat's defense tightened up considerably. Whittier and Morris showed they could handle the left side of the infield very capably which was a great lift for Coach Lapointe.

MICHAELMEN

On Sunday the Cats rolled all over St. Mike's, beating the Knights 13-2. Vermont showed its best hitting performance in some time. John Tartara went 3 for 3, driving in a run, Rich Aldrich drove in 2 runs on 2 hits and pitcher John McLeod drove in a pair of runs. McLeod pitched 8 innings giving up 2 runs on five base hits, striking at 5 while walking just one batter. Jim Brennan pitched one inning, retiring the side in order. Vermont made just one error and thus showed that their infield is definitely settling down.

Monday's game with Middlebury was rained out; and Bruce Bevinizer who was scheduled to pitch that game will go against St. Michael's, here, on Wednesday.

The Cats now lead the Yankee Conference by a half a game with a 3-1 record (4-1 overall) and are determined to stay on top now that most of their difficulties have been straightened out.

scorers on the University of Vermont freshman basketball team this winter.

Librera, a 6-3 forward, scored 15.5 points a game to lead the club while Lombard a 6-0 guard, tallied 12.6 points a game.

Other Vermonsters who stood out on the club were Hugh McLeod of Rutland and Don Fitts of Spaulding High in Barre.

The Kittens, under the direction of Ralph Lapointe, finished the season with a 4-7 mark.

Two In One Club

By Ted Rowen

The girl's swimming team, the Catalina Club, is really two in one. It is composed of a synchronized swimming show and a competitive club. The synchronized branch is related to dance patterns and movements performed in the water. The girls are supplied with music and to this they improvise and create a stunt. Earlier in the year, the synchronized team put on a demonstration for the Burlington Education Committee. Next week the girls will perform five numbers for a show.

The other half of the Catalina Club competes in competition. They defeated Middlebury earlier in the year. The team has steadily been improving. Last year the team finished fourth at Skidmore and this year they finished third. The star of the team is Georgia Walsch. This talented girl took two firsts this year in stiff competition. She is by far the best swimmer and has had the most experience. The Catalina Club has been in the capable hands of Miss Farrell for three years.

ARDELL CATAMOUNT PROSPECT

Paul Ardell is a 220-pound freshman at the University of Vermont.

Next fall he hopes to push people around while playing football for the Catamounts. Right now, the Fairfield, Conn. resident is seeing double duty and is keeping two coaches happy in the process -- football coach Bob Clifford and freshman track coach Norm Strassburg.

Clifford hopes Ardell is going to fill one of the graduation-riddled tackle berths and is giving Paul a long look during spring drills currently under way.

On Saturday, Ardell had the track officials at the Vermont Freshman-Brattleboro Union track meet taking a long look at the tape measure and what they saw was a record. The beefy 6-1 operator tossed the 12-pound shot 50-9 3/4 to establish a frosh mark. He also took a first in the discus with a toss of 137-4. Teammate (both in track and football) Jim Dedman of Orange, Conn., also got into the dual role Saturday by winning the 100-yard dash. Also notching first places were Jack Farley of Hartford, Conn., in the hurdles and broad jump, Dick Route of Burlington in the pole vault, Sandy MacLeod of Rutland in the javelin, Ed Childs of South Burlington in the high jump, Bruce LaPointe of Cuttingsville in the 220, and Pete Jones of Basking Ridge, N.J., in the mile and two miles.

All Will Fall Before The Cats Big Four

The Catamount Tennis team continues to set record after record. So far the brilliant playing of our tennis team under the expert coaching of Fred Marston has defeated Union, 7-2; Rhode Island, 6-3 and Middlebury 6-3. This was our first victory over Middlebury in years. Coach Marston was there, leading his team on to victory. The coach said, "I feel like I'm in the driver's seat." The Cats are the team which must be beaten by the other teams if they wish to have a fighting chance of winning the Yankee Conference. Our team is rated as number one by just about everyone. The Cats top four, John Adler, Win Marston, Rich Holden, and Paul Ryan continue to reign undefeated. These four superb athletes will continue to knock off opponent after opponent. This reporter asked John Adler what the chance was of going undefeated in the Yankee Conference this year. The E.C.A.C. champion replied, "I feel confident that this team will not be beaten by any Yankee Conference team this year." John further felt that we would not lose a dual meet this season.

The team has the opportunity of participating in the New England Conference, and they have a good chance of copping the crown. In order for the team to go, the UVM athletic council will have to give its approval. Knowing the administration, the team's efforts to try and win the crown will be sabotaged.

Extraordinary circumstances brought the top four players together. John Adler is a transfer student from the University of Florida. Win Marston is a transfer student from Wesleyan University, who like Adler came to Vermont two years ago. Rich Holden, the Catamount captain, previously played number one and was undefeated at UVM. Paul Ryan plays the number four position and is considered a top collegiate player in any league. The CYNIC spotlight will continue to follow the tennis team on their climb to winning the Yankee Conference. In parting, let's hope the Athletic Council will have a rare moment of benevolence. Next week I'll discuss UVM's romp of Clarkson and St. Lawrence.

UMASS REDMEN

Vermont came home sporting a 2 and 0 record to play undefeated Massachusetts. The Cats sent sophomore Len Sheflott against Bill Smith. Sheflott pitched a great game but the Catamounts fielding collapsed and Vermont fell to the Redmen 3-1. Sheflott got in trouble quickly in the first inning when John Peacock tripled, and Jim Babcock walked. Then Terry Swanson hit a grounder to short stop Dick Whittier dribbled, trying to flip to second, and then threw the ball away trying to get the runner at first. Peacock scored

D'Altilla Honored

The University of Vermont's Ralph D'Altilla has been named to the third team of the 1965 Academic All America basketball team.

D'Altilla, who paced Vermont in both scoring and rebounding this past season, is the only New England player named on any of the first three teams. Connecticut's sophomore standout Wes Bialosuknia received honorable mention.

The team is selected by the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA) and a player must have at least a "B" average to be nominated.

Lane Series To Offer Greater Diversity

Al Hirt

The 1965-66 University of Vermont Lane Series will feature 14 concerts rather than 12 as in the recently completed season and in addition will also have a special event.

Jack Trevithick, executive secretary of the University's cultural series, announced that 11 of the 14 events have been booked for the new season with the three other attractions in the process of negotiation.

The Lane "extra" will be The Royal Marines Tattoo, a British military spectacle, direct from the Edinburgh Festival, supported by the pipes, drums and dancers of the Scots Guard and Royal Scots Greys Regiments and including two Royal Marines Bands and the British Columbia Highland Lassies. The entire company numbers 200.

Regular attractions for the Red and Blue series include the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra with violinist Igor Oistrakh as soloist; Al Hirt and His Sextet; "Barefoot in the Park," directed by Mike Nichols; Soprano Anna Moffo of the Metropolitan Opera Company; the Rumanian Folk Ballet; the Cincinnati Symphony; the New York City Opera; Pianist Leon Fleisher; Mezzo Soprano Shirley Verrett; I Solisti Veneti, a string ensemble from Italy; and the National Ballet.

A musical comedy and two popular attractions will round out the series.

The division of events into the Red and Blue Series will be announced in August.

The Moscow Philharmonic will be making its first American tour next winter and will perform only 12 concerts outside of New York City.

Al Hirt is regarded by critics as one of the greatest exponents of jazz. The Rumanian Folk Ballet is also making its American debut. The New York City Opera will be making its tenth appearance on the Lane Series.

Miss Verrett is the first Lane artist to be returned for a second successive season. She performed in the Chamber Arts Series this past winter.

Trevithick also announced that a new method of ticket sales will be used for next season and that prices will be increased. In the past, only University students have been granted ticket priority but all members of the University family — students, faculty and staff — will be considered as a unit and allowed first choice of tickets. After the cutoff date, remaining tickets will be allotted to alumni and townspeople on a 50-50 basis.

Ticket prices will be increased as follows for each series: $6.50 to $8; $10 to $12; $13 to $15; and $16 seats to $18. Increases were "absolutely necessary due to increasing costs of both artists and production and promotion" said Trevithick.

In another change for next season, raised platforms will be installed in the back of Memorial Auditorium in order to afford better visibility to Lane patrons in the last eight rows.

Two youth concerts are also planned for 1965-66, one in the fall by the National Ballet, the other in the spring by the Cincinnati Orchestra.

Beginning next season the Lane Series will allocate tickets on a new basis. In past years only UVM students were granted ticket priority, but next September all members of the University family on campus — students, faculty and staff — will be considered as a unit and allowed first choice tickets.

After a cut-off date next September (when students and faculty and staff have returned to the campus) the remaining tickets will be allotted to UVM alumni and townspeople on a 50-50 basis. 75% of the remaining tickets will be set aside for UVM alumni, and 50% for townspeople.

BELL, GASTER AMONG SEVEN TO RECEIVE HONORARY DEGREES

Two graduates of the University will be among the seven recipients of honorary degrees at the 161st commencement on May 23.

Receiving honorary degrees will be David E. Bell, director of the Agency for International Development; Theodor Gaster, a religion professor at Columbia University and Fairleigh Dickinson University; H. Ward Bedford, chairman, Board of Trustees of the Vermont State Colleges; Major General Ernest N. Harmon, president of Norwich; W. Arthur Simpson, a member of the Vermont House of Representatives; John E. Lovely, director and consultant to Jones and Lamson Machine Co. of Springfield, and Henry C. Torrey, a physics professor at Rutgers.

Lovely and Torrey are both graduates of the University. Both have earned distinction in their respective fields, the machine tool industry and physics.

Lovely was responsible for the standardization of spindle noses for the machine tool industry which made possible universal-size adoption. He also played a key role in developing, on a world-wide basis, interchangeable thread standards.

Dr. Torrey collaborated with Drs. E. M. Purcell and R. V. Pound of Harvard in research which led to the first successful attempt to observe nuclear magnetic resonance. This work laid the foundation for a vast and new field of activity in both physics and chemistry and earned Dr. Purcell, as principal investigator, the 1952 Nobel Prize in Physics.

General Harmon has had 31 years experience as a professional soldier and is rounding out his final year as chief executive of the oldest private military college in the nation. He already holds honorary degrees from Norwich, Middlebury and St. Mi-

Bedford also serves on a joint committee to coordinate state-supported higher education. He taught at Middlebury College for 17 years before entering the retail business. He was appointed to the Board of Trustees of the Vermont State Colleges in 1961.

Simpson is one of the most widely quoted individuals in Vermont on agriculture, social welfare, education, taxation, and highways and has spent more than 50 years in public service. He has been moderator for the town of Lyndon since 1924 and has served in both the Vermont House and Senate.

Bell and Gaster are the commencement and baccalaureate speakers respectively.

Senior Week Brings Billy May Orchestra

SENIORS! PUT ON YOUR HEELED SNEAKERS! It looks like the Class of '65 is in store for the biggest and best Senior Week to be held at UVM. This possibility became apparent when it was announced by the capable class president and director of Senior Week, Skip Laufer, that the Billy May Orchestra starring Frankie Lester is to play at the Class Banquet and Ball.

"A tidal wave of fresh musical expression!" is the way one leading musical critic spoke of the Billy May Band. When asked to account for his arranging and orchestral style, May has the amazingly casual answer that he just picked it up himself. He used his talents to play the trumpet and arrange selections for the Glenn Miller Band and also arranged for such television shows as Red Skelton and Bob Crosby. The big break for the Band came in 1951 when Capitol records decided to release an album in which four dance bands were to perform. The recording sessions for the Billy May Band were the "most exciting Capitol had held since Stan Kenton's big band. . . ." Billy May became a virtual overnight success but he is an artist who has been in the business many years, perfecting his skills, and not just a newcomer who "got lucky." The combination of the great Billy May Orchestra and the famous big band voice of Frankie Lester presents as potent a combination as ever came across the musical horizon.

The Class of '65 is also in store for the special treat of the entertaining KENNY HAMILTON. This fresh, exciting new star achieved his initial success in the Burlington region but received professional acclaim in the Montreal area. His talents have been enjoyed in the Stowe area and has obtained a rich height of popularity there. Following his performance for the Class of '65 he is leaving for a European Tour to advance his young, but already prosperous, entertainment career.

All in all, the Senior Class should be prepared for a most exciting list of activities for their week. (See list on P. 6)

UVM HOLDS BOOK DRIVE FOR SNCC

From May 7 to May 18 the Joint Committee on Human Rights will sponsor a book drive on behalf of the Freedom Schools and libraries established by the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee in Mississippi.

Any type of book will be a worthwhile contribution. Those books which cannot be used by the Freedom Schools will be sold in order to raise funds for the support of various SNCC projects now underway. Conceivably a student from the University of Vermont will participate in the voter registration drives to be held this summer. Funds raised through the sale of some of these books will contribute to the food and lodging for this student. It would be a great pity indeed to have a student volunteer for this voter registration drive and be unable to participate because of lack of funds.

All books, therefore, are welcome.

The actual organization of this book drive involves the entire University community. Students on most floors of almost every dormitory and at least one student in each sorority and fraternity will take care of a collection box, emptying it when necessary. These students may also be consulted for further information. There are exceptions, however, and on those floors, particularly in the freshmen men's dorms, and in sororities and fraternities where there is no one in charge we hope someone will volunteer to put out a collection box.

Also one student has been assigned to each academic department to ask professors for any books which they may care to contribute.

Miss Vermont Pageant To Be Held June 5

By Mary Ellen Anderson

This year's Miss Vermont Pageant is rapidly approaching. On June 5th at Memorial Auditorium, the successor to Miss Jeannie Conner, our current Miss Vermont, will be chosen. The entries thus far include Deborah Anne Deeble, 19, of Middlebury, Dian Rotunda, 20, of Essex Junction, Earlene Orvis, 19, of Bristol, and Lois Dodge, 20, a junior at UVM from Grand Isle.

The contest is patterned exactly after the Miss America Contest. It involves three major areas of competition: the swimsuit and evening gown areas in which the girls are judged on poise, grace and appearance, and the talent area in which a three minute performance is given utilizing any type of talent. Miss Vermont receives a $1000 scholarship, a brand new Oldsmobile for her use during her reign, $500 worth of Judy-Lee jewelry, jewelry from Sarah Coventry, and clothes and gifts from Burlington stores.

The contest itself is not, by far, the end of Miss Vermont's reign. It is just the beginning of an exciting year. Jeannie, a senior at UVM and a sister of Alpha Delta Pi, has given us a few personal glimpses of the excitement of being Miss Vermont. Her activities extend over a wide range — everywhere — from awarding trophies at drag strip races to representing Vermont at the World's Fair in the Governor's party. When asked what she thought of Atlantic City and the Miss America Pageant, Jeannie replied, "Atlantic City is fantastic!" She was also awed by the size of the convention hall for the pageant which holds 25,000 people. And, of course, Jeannie became quite friendly with the other contestants especially with Miss New Jersey and Miss Nevada to whom she now writes.

Being Miss Vermont on campus is sometimes trying though. Her new Oldsmobile has the words "Jean Conner Miss Vermont Official Car" written on the side. Being unaccustomed to the stares and comments which her new car brought, she at one time refused to drive it for over a week. "Sometimes I'm dying to throw on my sweat shirt and blue jeans and go for a drive, but the letters on the side of the car always make me think twice." Also, being on display as Miss Vermont, of course, she must keep a neat appearance, which we girls know is not always easy. But we can certainly see that Jeannie has succeeded in her efforts. How does Jeannie feel about relinquishing her crown? "It was a worthwhile experience, but it will be good to get back to normal."

So how about it, girls, why not give it a try! And fellas, why not give them a little encouragement!

SA Selects 7 Assistants

By Mike Fay

From a number of applications submitted to the Student Association, seven students have been selected to serve as student assistants for freshman orientation this summer. The seven are:

Beverly Beagle
Barbara Giddings
Dina Hackett
Victoria Norton
Lucene Pike
Richard Flogg and Arthur Fournier.

Some of their duties will include planning activities, and guiding freshmen around campus. These students participating in the program will live here at UVM and will have their expenses paid by the university. The new freshman orientation program extends from June 18 through June 29. This new program will eliminate crowding freshman orientation into the beginning of an already crowded semester.

The Student Association's Freshmen Orientation Committee is working full swing on their activities to welcome UVM's new freshmen class this fall. The program will include the Freshmen Mixer, Club Carnival and Variety Show. In addition, there are tentative plans to hold an afternoon of games and contests followed by a picnic on Saturday, September 11.

A SUMMER CURRICULUM IN THEATRE

JULY 5 - AUGUST 21

On a 70-acre summer campus near Sebago Lake, the Emerson College Center for the Performing Arts offers students in theatre the opportunity to pursue academic studies in their field. Students at the Center will form a resident company which will present a summer series of plays at Deertrees Theatre in Harrison, Maine.

- Introduction to Acting
- Advanced Acting
- Principles of Play Directing
- Introduction to Stage Lighting
- Introduction to Theatrical Design
- Technical Theatre Workshop

These courses offer three credits each; the student is limited to a maximum of six credits for the term. Courses meet six hours per week for seven weeks.

Rowell Recovers From Post Skiing Accident

Everybody knows one of the fine old college traditions involves the knitting of socks and sweaters by industrious coeds for their luckily chosen swain.

But it's doubtful any college man ever received quite the treatment accorded Acting University of Vermont President Lyman S. Rowell since the fateful moment six weeks ago when he fractured an ankle in a fall.

It all began when he returned to work conspicuously attired with a clean white cast on the afflicted right ankle and foot. Most business thereafter was begun with the prelude about "a funny thing happened to me on the way to my driveway..."

This state of affairs was given initial attention by Mrs. Levi Smith, Jr., of Burlington, who knitted President Rowell a handsome "tee cone" to cover the cast.

Shortly thereafter, Mrs. Lucille Bolvin, housekeeper at the President's House, contributed a dignified black knitted "shoe." In fact, Mrs. Bolvin provided two of them, and one has already been worn out.

A second shoe, this one in stunning green with a bright yellow "U.V.M." across the front, was contributed by Mrs. Basil Walsh of Brandon, wife of a former trustee of the University who did likewise for her husband earlier this year when Mr. Walsh suffered a similar break.

Now conversations in the President's office still begin with "a funny thing happened on the way etc..." but high point of the conversation always comes when President Rowell gets to waxing poetic about the knitted footwear which came his way when three gracious ladies decided, as ladies will, that his attire and his life might be brightened with a bit of personalized knitting.

Oh yes, unlike some of those things the better half knits for us, these fit perfectly.

Prospects are they will be retired to early mothballs, however, since President Rowell hopes to be out of his cast this week.

Sadler Goes To Japan

A University of Vermont religion professor has been awarded a $10,000 fellowship for a year's study in Japan.

Dr. Albert Sadler is one of four recipients of a fellowship from the Society for Religion in Higher Education. He will spend the 1965-66 academic year in Japan studying the Shinto religion and making a study of the economic ethics of Buddhism.

Competition for a fellowship is keen. From a total of 420 applications from religion professors at American colleges and universities, the field was narrowed to 168, then to 10 and finally four were selected.

The Fellow is pretty much on his own in his pursuit for new knowledge and ideas. The purpose of the Society grants is to help strengthen the teaching of Asian religions and to give fellowship recipients the opportunity to do field work.

Dr. Sadler expects to spend the bulk of his time in Tokyo engaged in independent research although he will spend some time at Kyoto, the center of traditional religion in Japan.

As to his interest in the economic ethics of Buddhism, Dr. Sadler said he has noticed in the post World War II era that Buddhist temples have been attempting to establish more contact with the business community.

"They are becoming more involved in developing leadership programs through programs of meditation for the business man but little is known about the whole area and I would like to delve into it."

Dr. Sadler was awarded a Fulbright Act U.S. Exchange Grant in 1961 for a summer seminar in India. Under that grant he was unable to take his family with him but this time the entire Sadler family will be able to travel to the Far East.

A graduate of Hobart College, Dr. Sadler received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia University. He joined the Vermont faculty in 1956.

Parks anywhere

You can stand on your head looking for a place to park on most campuses. And all you end up with is a headache. But not if you ride a Honda. It needs only as much elbow room as you with an armload of books. So you can squeeze in a little closer to that 8 o'clock class than your 4-wheel competition.

A Honda helps keep you solvent as well as sane. Prices start about $215*. You'll get up to 200 mpg, depending on the model. And practically never need service. The star performer above is the CB-160. Just one of the 15 Honda models. With its 4-stroke, twin cylinder engine and 16.5 HP, this showoff does better than 80 mph. Look into a Honda soon. No more headaches.

See the Honda representative on your campus or write: American Honda Motor Co., Inc., Department C3, 100 West Alondra Blvd., Gardena, California 90247.

VOL. 83 THE VERMONT CYNIC NO. 8

As the academic year draws to a close and the university community prepares to lookback on the year's scholastic progress (commonly called finals), the CYNIC too is about to take a long, hard look at itself and its progress. Just as there have been many changes in school policy (such as the change of compulsory ROTC to an elective-type course and the additions of a 4.0 pt. grading system, a new semester schedule, and a new President), there have also been changes in CYNIC policy. We have tried to objectively cover campus news, to present short articles, and to produce good pictures. We now would like the opinion of the student body, since this paper supposedly represents the entire UVM community and not just the few students on the CYNIC staff. In an effort to improve the CYNIC beyond present limits, please fill out the accompanying questionnaire and put it in the messenger service mailbox.

Letters To The Editor

Approval Of U.S. Tactics In Vietnam

To the Editor:

I read the column about the bombing of North Vietnam with disgust. It sounds as if it were written by a Communist propaganda agent instead of someone who had studied the situation thoroughly, which the author of this article has obviously not done. What does he know about strategy? These raids are necessary to destroy strategic routes of supply and communication. If this is not done, the Viet-Cong and the North Vietnamese will be able to build up their strength and overwhelm another free nation.

The nation of South Vietnam asked for our help against aggression, and we gave it. If we pull out of Vietnam now, the rest of Southeast Asia will probably be overrun by the Reds.

The author of this article obviously abhors the deaths the bombing of North Vietnam is causing. But we did exactly the same thing during World War II. Was the author against that? The bombings cause many deaths, but if we ceased, many, many more would die. It sounds as though the writer of this article is of the "Peace in our time" school of thought, which enabled Hitler to conquer the Sudetenland, and later the rest of Europe.

Sincerely,

Charles V. Wall

Book Drive Starts Today

To the Faculty and Students:

In response to requests for books made by various community centers, colleges, and high schools in the South, the Joint Committee on Human Rights will sponsor a book drive from May 7 to 18.

Below I have listed who some of the recipients will be:

Ted Seaver, co-ordinator of the biracial community center in Jackson, Mississippi (to be financed for the first year largely by Vermont in Mississippi) has written: "most needed are: good encyclopedias, dictionaries, good modern fiction, books by Negroes, good imaginative children's books and Dr. Spock."

In the latest Civil Rights S.O.S. Report of immediate needs in Mississippi gathered on a field trip April 22, 1965 by Virginia Naev, Jamaica, Vermont, the following items appeared:

"Teacher Mrs. E.M. Collins of Temple High School, Vicksburg, Miss., asked for the following kinds of books to supplement the studies and let the children take home for use: economics, government, social studies subjects.

"Mother home with broken leg, father disabled from accident. Would like books (mother can read) have none."

The National Parent-Teacher Association is conducting a nation-wide book drive for Appalachia. Since the PTA in Burlington is not conducting a book drive the Committee on Human Rights was given a collection of over 700 grade school textbooks. These books will be sent to Appalachia.

Since, as the above list indicates, books for all age groups and on all sorts of topics have been requested, any type of book will be a worthwhile contribution.

"Cependant, j'ai quelques convictions, dans un sens plus élevé, et qui ne peut pas être compris par les gens de mon temps." - Baudelaire

"Sois sage, ô ma Douleur et tiens-toi plus tranquille.

Tu réclamais le Soir; il descend; le voici!

Une atmosphère obscure enveloppe la ville.

Aux uns portant la paix, aux autres le soul.

Last week we were introduced to a UVM co-ed as the author of the "Sceptic."

"Do you really mean what you write?" she asked.

"Of course," we replied.

"Well then, I hate you," she said.

We have been gloating over this sincere expression of affection ever since it was made. The girl represented many on campus who had expressed a similar feeling for ourselves. The "hate" this girl feels for us, is, of course, not really hate, but it is symptomatic of the growing uninitiated group of campus - that group which rates everything on surface values, without examination; the real, honest-to-goodness collegian. But, even though the statement was misdirected, and undoubtedly unintentional, we were very happy that we had received some response from our columns, for response has been, in the past, very meagre.

Sociologists tell us that the individual has a basic need for "positive affect," for every act by the individual there must be a corresponding response from others. We have often had the feeling that we had been kicking, for the last four months, a dead corpse. During this period we have dealt with many topics from the bookstore to the phenomena which we like to call "faculty dropout." It is a most frustrating feeling when, after a column is published, people tell us how much they liked (or disliked) the piece and then do nothing about it. In the last four months we have talked about the ridiculous situation at the bookstore, the thievery at the library, and the faculty dropout at UVM. All these columns were generally complimented, and yet the evils described still exist and will continue to exist because of the inaction of those who agree with us. The bookstore will continue to sell books at exorbitant prices, books will continue to be stolen from the library, and this school will continue to sink into intellectual stagnation. Those who complimented the column on faculty dropout are as much at fault for this dropout because of their silence as the administration. Those who are aware realize the danger but they refuse to do anything. With the current deteriorating state of this university, it will someday become a truth that those who remain silent now, will, in the end, suffer the most.

LET US NOW PRAISE FAMOUS MEN

"Sans cess a mes cotés s'agit le Demon;

Il page autour de moi comme un air impalpable;

Je l'avale et le sens qui brûle mon poupon

Et l'emplit d'un désir éternel et coupable." - Baudelaire.

"Why are you always criticizing?" friends keep asking us, "Why don't you ever write something constructive instead of destructive?" While we see some wonderful things on campus, we have always thought the function of this column is not to criticize, but to correct. Although we feel we have been a failure in this endeavor, the attempt was not without some effects. We have always had the philosophy that those things that merit praise already know their excellence. Thus, such organizations as SCOPE and VERMONT CONFERENCE, although they have never been praised in this space, realize their excellence in their success. An institution such as the FLEMING MUSEUM knows that it is an oasis in a barren desert. Last week, we opened the Summer School catalog and found the Fleming Museum virtually transposed to the paper in the beautiful paintings shown. Praise is certainly merited and deserved. But the function of this column is not to render praise for we are constantly aware that the deficiencies of this University, as an intellectual community, certainly outweigh the assets. Repeatedly, we are reminded of this barrenness. Last year, Student Association was petitioned for funds by a group who wished to revive a literary magazine. The funds were denied, as a S.A. asked, "Why can't the literary magazine appear in the CYNIC. The uncompromising, anti-intellectual mentality of S.A. made any attempt at a literary magazine last year impossible.

THE SCEPTIC

"Une Idée, une Forme, un Etage

Parti de l'azur et tombe

Dans un Styx bourbeux et plombe

Où nul oeil du Ciel ne pénètre." - Baudelaire

This is the last column to be written under the present authorship. Originally we had planned a column which was to be "subtle and witty," but we have found subtlety does not work quite as well as batancy. Next year, someone else will assume the above title and shall try to both educate and amuse the readership of this newspaper.

A few months ago, a letter to this paper questioned the right of this column to appear opposite the main editorial of the CYNIC (although we often thought what right the editorial has to....) We do not possess a god-given right to this space but a right granted to us because of our ability to produce a literate column of from five hundred to a thousand words every week for the last year and a half, because of our ability to withstand criticism and, because of our ability to withstand, many times, insult.

The right to this space is now open.

"Le Poète est semblable au prince des nuées

Qui hante la tempête et se rit de l'archer;

Exilé sur le sol au milieu des huées,

Ses ailes de géant l'empêchent de marcher." -- Baudelaire

On The Prowl

As a loyal member of the BCA (Benevolent Catamounts of America), I give you my word not to mention those nasty things for which you are now studying, for which you will soon study, or for which you are seriously thinking about studying sometime within the next month.

It took me quite a while to think of a subject for this week's column. Then a friend came into my room to ask for a dime to get a Coke. He said he had been in his convertible all day riding up and down the road behind the Hamilton-Simpson-Mason complex watching the girls on UVM's own Skin Hill and had become rather warm in the process. I didn't have any change, since I find it easier to run on all fours with bills rather than heavy change in my pockets. The Coke machine demanded "correct change only" and the poor guy looked for a dime for half an hour.

Right then and there, I decided on my subject - how difficult it is to get the dimes and nickels so vital for life here and a very simple thing UVM can do to alleviate the problem. I'll be logical for a change (excuse the poor pun) and talk about the problem before presenting my solution.

Did you ever do a large load of wash and then have to decide between leaving it in a damp pile to mildew or hanging it around your room because you couldn't find a dime for the dryer? Then there's the story about the two girls who washed their yellow bedspreads last semester and for lack of a dime they had to hang them over the closet doors for two days to dry (and to shed piles of yellow fuzzy lint).

Did you ever offer a girl a candy bar and then have to settle on bubble gum because the only small change you had was pennies? This offends my Catamount sense of chivalry.

Maybe you're one of those people who smokes constantly and almost had a fatal nicotine fit because there were no nickels or dimes anywhere to buy a pack. I'm not too familiar with this problem since I only tried to smoke once. After singeing my whiskers I decided that this was one habit that I was simply not equipped for.

The solution for all of these problems is a little machine. You put a dollar bill in it (George Washington's side up) and out comes change. Who could ask for more? Therefore - I make the proposal that one of these little gadgets be installed in each dorm with one of two in Waterman and Billings. This is about twenty of them. Anyone second the motion. Soon after their installation I guarantee that the all too common cries like "A dime! A dime! My chem notes for a dime!" will no longer be heard.

This is the last issue of the CYNIC and yours truly is a little sad not to have had the opportunity to write more often. Maybe the nice people at the CYNIC office will let me write again next year. So - I'll just shed a few catamount tears, pack up my typewriter, and retreat to the Jolly Green Mountains for the summer.

I hate to be trite, but I'll wish you good luck on finals (there goes my promise), good luck to those who are graduating, and the very best of summer vacations to you all.

Wistfully yours,
Charlie Catamount

Who Needs Thoreau?

By Lynn Householder

In the year's longest and least attended meetings, Student Association has nearly finished distributing its funds. The number of organizations, or at least the number wanting money, seems to be growing (witness the new Psychology Club), so that S.A. is finding itself in the position of needing to cut expenditures that seem worthwhile or justifiable.

This predicament is a difficult one for a Senate which habitually grants any request that sounds on the face of it, reasonable. Attempts from the Senate floor to make cuts which must be, admittedly, arbitrary, are taken as personal insults by the clubs.

The question of the validity of a principle which has not been traditionally questioned is always deferred. I have serious doubts as to whether Pershing Rifles deserves $117 of our money for just publicity and office supplies. This is a sizeable increase, the explanation resting in the change next year to voluntary ROTC. To his own regret, the crutling' and, although he then denied such a purpose, clearly the group will have difficulty keeping the present membership size. But is it right to support any club's activities--such as their photographing of alltrips--which are designed to persuade students to join?

Another idea I somehow acquired regarding clubs is that if they wish to do something special (particularly in buying expensive equipment not directly for a service function, as IEEE's $245 voltmeter) they should try to raise some money themselves; those hated "money-making projects" again.

A problem not yet immediate is judging the comparative worth of speakers, especially political. The Y.A.F. is now a recognized student group-- and the only such political group on campus. Are we to violate the cherished principle of equal time? Will the Senate be able to say "We think more than one conservative speaker would be superfluous for informing the student body?"

One structural change made through budgets: cheerleaders are now part of Pep Committee; perhaps someone will know why, when they are not at games. For the future, S.A. is hoping to have graduate students pay something for the privileges for which undergraduates pay the activities fee.

The question of keeping the University phone exchange open at least till after curfew has been brought up. I, personally, would like to see a bulletin board for baby-sitting jobs, also, a more widely known and influenced method of selection of Billings Governing Board representatives. Now we can say again, "We have all year." But S.A. must use all its time.

The Arts

by Ken Klonsky

The Student Art Exhibit held in Billings Lounge this past week was both interesting and diversified. There were a few individual exhibits that caught this reviewer's eye, but in no way indicate their true artistic merits. The only way to judge a painting is to see it and to measure its effect upon you, the viewer.

The pottery and jewelry, created under the able guidance of Mrs. Isabel Mills, was the first exhibit to catch my eye. These remnants of ancient civilizations were fascinating from an archeological standpoint. Prof. Colburn's artistic inspirations were intensely absorbed by his students. The paintings were unusual and multi-colored. John Senning's subway entrance and city park attracted much admiration. Bob Katz's human form in contemplation and his forest scene were silent and splendid. The abstract and the concrete were portrayed respectively in two of Joa Lovell's paintings. The abstracts of Andy Hay were eye-popping. Donald Coscina, who displays much talent in all of the arts, demonstrated his versatility with a painting that borrowed from both impressionism and cubism. One of the best paintings was a beach scene by Brown.

I did not understand the sculpture, but there were a few pieces that I liked. Some of the contributors were Godsill, Waterbury, Tolk, Divoll and Stone, all who worked under Prof. Aschenbach.

The Student Art Exhibit proved to be one of the most successful ventures of the year. It brought the world of art to many students who had had a minimal exposure previously.

Perception

By David St. John

He is easy to get along with. She is good company. They are people. The most important people, in any given field (BMOG) are the ones who are easy to get along with. They complain, but not every time they are irritated. They cry, but not each time they're hurt. They have enemies, but few of any significance. They have friends, but few who are close. They have duties; many, many, many, and they know how to make people work with them. People enjoy working with and for them because they are easy to work with and give credit where credit is due.

Credit motivation, whether money or a pat on the back, is important. When the newspaper is breaking in new writers, and their friends praise their work, their motivation increases and they work even harder. Credit motivation is a key in our society and this key is responsible for much of the good in the world today. Don't be a "typical New Englander" who walks around with a drawn face and grumbles and rations out his hellos to a certain few. Smile if it hurts and motivate people. Boost just a little ego a day but help someone out of a slump. This is a subtle thanks to the many who have helped me out of various slumps by that one sincere smile or pat on the back.

CONFESSIONS OF A FISH-EATER

"Something's got to be done about them. There are just too many of them." "Well, you know, that organization is just run by them." "Look at all those out-of-staters. That's where those Jews are coming from." "I want this organization to show them, well... that Christians can do these things, too." "I like her too, but you just can't go out with anyone you want to. My father would probably disown me."

Sometimes I get mad, not angry, mad. That's when I start seeing some things more clearly. To have the emotion of being mad, the stomach turning sensation of being so mad you want to stand up and say what you're thinking, if for no other reason than to put emotion into words and try to make it comprehensible to yourself.

Lucky Negroes have Their Color

Prejudice in this age has become a dirty word. With the Negro emerging from the secure bondage held for him and taking the chance of getting his head pushed in. When prejudice does center upon a group as easily distinguishable as the Negro, it's hard to hide prejudicial feeling. The Negro can, most times, see and face an overt bigot, and in return the bigot must make his stand and face the shame of his convictions. Now other forms of prejudice are being identified with the Negro experience, such as the "kikes, wops, micks and apics" have encountered. On this campus it's the Jews and now the Negro. "You know why the house took him, I think it's called reaction-formation; something to hang on their door and say to everyone, 'Look, see we're not prejudiced. He's in our house.'"

Greeny Type

I was told when I was joining my house that because of my name the brothers thought I was Jewish, but they decided to take me anyway. When I heard this, I thought it was pretty "green" of them to let me in even though I was one of "those." It appeared to be the thing to do since the house was all fish-eaters.

The Negro is finding out what this sort of sub-sneaky "greeny type" prejudice is, if he hasn't already been exposed to it. Greeny type is the type you can't fight or march on; it's the type you can't see and sometimes can't feel. "After a while you don't ask why you didn't get what you deserve. You just learn to take it in stride."

Greeny-Yellow

One time in a filled Manhattan subway station, a train roared in and the crowds pushed me against the not-yet-opened doors. As the doors slid open, a grayed lady of about fifty-five, next to me, was oozed through the doors and tossed down on the feet filling the browned-black floor. When she got to her feet (unassisted), she looked around and stared at all of us, and you knew that she wanted to strike someone. But you also knew you didn't push her - they did. She knew she couldn't blame any one of us, because everyone pushed just that little bit that they could say wasn't really to be considered pushing. Most of us have confronted this sort of rationale, too. This is greeny type: when you say to yourself "I'm not really prejudiced, I just don't like him, and he happens to be Jewish (or Negro)."

Well, let's stop fooling ourselves at least. We don't have to make a stand for them to anyone else. But we should know what they are to ourselves. Let's know our own convictions. If we can do this one thing, this shame of the age can have some effect on us, and we can start taking things personally again. When we know our own prejudice with the correct labelling enough to say it out loud, then and only then will we understand how greeny type can be conquered. And if you're opposed to people saying "That Jew is full of it" or "Here's that Nigger again," start taking it personally.

For every Jewish or Negro person we call our friend or we are involved with, this makes us part of them. Try, I don't like you using that word, and watch the greeny-yellow set in. In this attitude of personal responsibility, perhaps we can regain some of the intrinsic fire and pride which we assume started this country.

Pearson Addresses 2500 At Patrick Gym

(Credit: Felder, SPS)

By Miles Wortman

Canadian Prime Minister Lester Pearson spoke before an Honor's Day assemblage of an estimated 2,500 people last Friday, April 30, at UVM's Patrick Gymnasium. The speech dealt with Canadian-American friendship and its effect upon each country's foreign affairs. The address generally believed to have been a follow-up to a speech given by Mr. Pearson at Temple University in Philadelphia which, according to informed sources, resulted in friction between the Canadian Prime Minister and President Johnson. The Philadelphia speech suggested an American withdrawal from Vietnam. Pearson stressed Canadian sovereignty.

"The better we live together on this continent, the better both of us can play our part in relation to the other countries and other peoples. This does not mean the Canadian views on specific issues will always be the same as those of the United States," he said.

At the same time Pearson stressed his respect for American problems.

"Yet in doing so we should never ignore the heavy world responsibilities of the United States which are so much greater than our own," he said.

Prime Minister Pearson, throughout his speech, praised many times Senator George Aiken. Pearson described Senator Aiken as "an old and good friend of mine and of Canada" who "has earned the deep respect of Canadians for his wise and fairminded approach to relations between our two countries." (Senator Aiken has recently come out in support of a retrenchment policy in Vietnam which is similar to the Prime Minister's.) The Canadian Prime Minister also paid tribute to the University of Vermont which he called "respected and renowned."

"I am grateful for such an honour from this University, which is among the most effective forces in the American intellectual community for the encouragement and provision of wider American knowledge and understanding of my country," he said.

Mr. Pearson also made mention of the UVM Program of Canadian Studies.

The speech was a disappointment to many who hoped for a major address from the Canadian Prime Minister. Included among those disappointed was an entourage of thirty Canadian journalists who made the trip from Ottawa in anticipation of a major foreign policy pronouncement.

The Canadian Prime Minister arrived in Burlington at 9 A.M. and was met at the airport by Governor Hoff. The intricate planning for the visit was disrupted when Senator Aiken and President Rowell arrived late at the airport and missed their renowned guest. Also at the airport were six UVM students who were picketing in protest to the United States position in Vietnam. As one demonstrator said, "We are picketing to protect American policy and support the views of Senator Aiken and Prime Minister Aiken on this matter."

Mr. Pearson's speech at Patrick Gymnasium was marred by a faulty public address system which caused some spectators to complain that the address was inaudible. The attendance of 2,500 persons at the Honor's Day Ceremony was an obvious disappointment to UVM officials who had expressed a hope that 5,000 people would attend.

After the address, the Canadian Prime Minister was given an honorary "Doctor of Laws" degree from the university. The presentation was made by Senator Aiken. The Senior Senator of Vermont said that "Mr. Pearson's distinguished eminence as a bold and imaginative world leader, and as leader of one of his country's major political parties, seems a logical outgrowth of the energy and dedication with which he has made a service of life." The citation, as given by President Rowell said, "Because of your eminent contribution, as world statesman, to the well being of all men; your distinguished singular demonstration of service to the principles of democracy as leader of your nation; your regard for and contribution to the service of education, and as a token of the continuing warm regard and admiration which has distinguished relations between your country and ours, which you have so notably fostered, we delight to honor you."

After the Honor's Day ceremony, Prime Minister Pearson proceeded to President Rowell's house for a brief rest and from there to the Marsh dining hall for a luncheon (see accompanying article).

The Canadian Prime Minister departed from Burlington Airport at 2:45 P.M. with Senator Aiken, Governor Hoff and President Rowell there to see him off.

Honors Bestowed Upon ROTC Cadets

After a two year absence chalked up to rainy skies, the Annual Military Review returned to the University of Vermont campus last Friday. Some 1100 Cadets participated in the formation conducted at Centennial Field at 4:30 p.m. Cadet Col. Herbert Safford, Burlington, Vt., was commander of troops. Governor Philip Hoff was the reviewing officer. Other members of the reviewing party were University President Lyman Rowell, Colonel L.G. Robinson, PMS, and Col. Maurice Stratta, Deputy Commander of XIII U.S.A. Corps.

Closing out this year's drill activities, the Review capped a busy day which began in mid-morning with a ceremonial honor guard for Prime Minister Lester Pearson of Canada, extended through an afternoon inspection by representatives of the XIII U.S.A. Corps Annual General Inspection Team, and culminated in Safford's command to "Pass in Review" shortly after 5:00 p.m.

During the Review, the presentation of colors saw Miss Joyce Herlihy, honorary cadet colonel and 1965 Military Ball Queen reintroduced to the Brigade. Queen Joyce presented the ROTC Color to the cadet color guard. The cadets reciprocated with a bouquet of three dozen red roses presented by Cadet Col. Safford. Each of the honorary battalion commanders also received a bouquet from their cadet counterparts.

Twenty-two cadets received recognition in the form of national, regional, and local awards. Leading the list was Cadet Col. Safford of Burlington with a third consecutive award of the Department of the Army Superior Cadet Award presented by Governor Hoff. Other recipients of the award were Boyd J. Tomasetti, Northampton, Mass., Class of '66; John S. Smiarowski, Whately, Mass., Class of '67; and William G. Conrad, Rochester, N.H., Class of '68.

Other key awards included the General MacArthur Award of the Retired Officers Association to Hugh C. Maddocks, South Burlington, Vt., Class of '67; the National Defense Transportation Association Medal to R. Scott Severance, Granville, N.Y., Class of '65; the Society of American Military Engineers Award for Senior Cadets to James D. Gallo, Rutland, Vt., and a like award for Junior cadets to James F. Munn, Bradford, Vt.

The UVM ROTC Band provided appropriate calls and music for the Review. Fort Devens Army Security Agency Training Regiment provided two vehicles to accommodate President Rowell who remains on crutches after an accident of a month ago. The vehicles added the finishing touch to "trooping the line" and provided an excellent demonstration of Army cooperation.

The column of twelve companies passed the reviewing party to the strains of "The Army Goes Rolling Along."

Senior cadets immediately breathed a sigh of relief after an outstanding effort and began to think of May 23rd, the day some three weeks hence on which they don the gold bars of Second Lieutenants. The Juniors, however, started to tense noticeably for now the 1965 Fort Devens ROTC Summer Camp is just around the corner and, following that, they will take their place next year in the key command slots in Vermont's "Green Line."

Inspecting the Troops.

The Corps of Cadets.

ROTC Cadet Colonel Herbert Safford has a big day coming up on May 23rd when he'll receive his bachelor's degree from UVM and a commission as a Second Lieutenant from the U.S. Army. But it will be difficult to exceed the experiences he had on April 30th even with such a key day yet to come.

Last Friday, Herb started the day commanding an ROTC Honor Guard for Prime Minister Lester Pearson of Canada as a part of UVM's Honors Day ceremony. Minutes later he rose in front of the packed audience as a new member of Phi Beta Kappa, the nation's famed honor society. A hurried lunch was followed by an inspection of one of his cadet companies (he's UVM's Cadet Brigade Commander) by the XIII U.S. Army Corps inspection team of Colonel Maurice Stratta as a part of the Annual General Inspection of the UVM ROTC Instructor Group.

Late afternoon and the 97th Annual Military Review provided a climax to the day's activities. He was decorated by Governor Philip Hoff with the Department of the Army Superior Cadet Award (for the third consecutive year) for being the outstanding cadet in his class. He thereafter "trooped the line" (in specially modified "jeeps") with Governor Hoff, acting UVM President Lyman Rowell, Colonel Stratta, and Colonel L.G. Robinson, UVM PMS. At his command to "Pass in Review," over one thousand cadets moved past the reviewing stand and their Cadet Colonel. As they moved off the field, Herb was left to visit with the many visitors to the Review and to contemplate the time when the Cadet Colonel becomes a Second Lieutenant. Winner of a fellowship to Yale University for graduate study in philosophy, Herb will have his active duty deferred until his graduate education has been completed.

Comes To Vermont

It has been officially announced that a cooperative, composed of the area's leading merchants, will offer to students and faculty of the four Burlington colleges, a discount of 10%. Merchants in all phases of business have joined together to form The Collegiate Club. This club is designed to stimulate collegiate sales by offering a discount at stores where collegians have always bought and new areas which would like to encourage college business.

As outlined by Mrs. Barbara Wick of the Ski Shop, Chairman of the Participating Merchants, The Collegiate Club has a diverse and exciting list of merchants who are Participating Merchants. It is reported that seventy five merchants will be Participating Merchants including restaurants, drug stores, clothing stores, gas stations ($.02 off per gallon), motels, barber shops, beauty salons, florists, record stores, laundries, photographers, movie theaters, bakeries, and a major ski area. Every need of a collegian will be met by a Collegiate Club store.

A membership card costs five dollars and can be used for one entire year starting Sept. 1. To receive a discount a student must present both his Collegiate Club membership card and his student I.D. card. Applications for membership will be mailed during the summer along with a complete list of the Collegiate Club merchants.

This club is similar to the Harvard Cooperative and other college cooperatives. It differs in that Burlington's Collegiate Club will encompass a much wider selection of benefits for both the student and the faculty.

Student Law

On Thursday evening, April 22, 1965, the newly formed Student Law Association held its second meeting. In addition to its regular business the Association was honored by an informal discussion by James M. Jeffords, a Rutland lawyer.

Mr. Jeffords did his undergraduate work at Yale, and received his L.L.B. from Harvard Law School. He is presently associated with the Rutland firm of Bishop Crowley and Jeffords, 27 South Main Street, Rutland, Vermont. Mr. Jeffords spoke on the subjects of a "Pre-Law Preparation" and the "Average Day of a Lawyer." In regard to Law School Preparation Mr. Jeffords stressed the importance of courses in the fields of Psychology, Sociology, and Philosophy. Commenting on the Student Law Association, Mr. Jeffords said: "such organizations can help to condition pre-law students to what the true conception of the lawyer should be..."

The Student Law Association will begin its first full year next fall and it is open to any interested individuals. An active program of films, speakers, and other activities has already been planned.

Newport Jazz

The 12th annual Newport Jazz Festival will be held in its new home at Festival Field, Newport, Rhode Island on July 1, 2, 3, and 4, 1965. In announcing details of this year's event, George Wein, producer and director of the Festival, said, "Festival Field, on Connell Highway, less than one mile from the exact center of Newport, may be very possibly the permanent Festival site so long sought after in Newport. It is an ideal location for our festival activities."

Talent set for this year's Festival includes Count Basie, Dave Brubeck, Miles Davis, Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Stan Getz, Carmen McRae, Joe Williams, The Modern Jazz Quartet, John Coltrane, Thelonious Monk, Herbie Mann, Buddy Rich, Art Blakey, Les McCann, Louis Bellson, Billy Taylor, Bud Freeman, Wes Montgomery, Wynton Kelly, and many others.

A new figure at the Newport Jazz Festival will be that of Pete Seeger who will appear on the opening night program, July 1, entitled "The Family of Jazz." Also on this program will be blues wingers, Muddy Waters, Memphis Slim, Willie Dixon, and the aforementioned Joe Williams, Dizzy Gillespie, and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

This year there will be four evening concerts all starting at 8:00 P.M. and three afternoon concerts starting at 2:00 P.M.

Ticket prices $3.50, $4.50, $5.50, $6.00, all seats reserved. Afternoons $2.00 general admission. For further program information write to Newport Jazz Festival, Newport, Rhode Island. For housing information contact the Newport Chamber of Commerce.

SA Honors "Fuzzy" Evans

By Mike Fay

At the Student Association Senate meeting last Wednesday, the University of Vermont Student Association honored basketball coach John "Fuzzy" Evans. Coach Evans, who is retiring this year after guiding his teams to a winning record during his 28 years as head basketball coach at UVM, was presented with an inscribed trophy commending him for his fine service to the University of Vermont and its athletic program. Mr. Evans stated that his best basketball teams were those with the best academic records. This speaks well for Mr. Evans' ability to develop his players in the athletic realm, as well as in the realm of character and scholastics. UVM will sorely miss the services of coach Evans as head basketball coach.

A.I.D. Chief Speaks May 23 Gaster Is Baccalaureate Speaker

David E. Bell, the chief administrator of the Agency for International Development, will deliver the University's commencement address on May 23.

The baccalaureate speaker will be Theodor H. Gaster, Adjunct Professor of Religion at Columbia University and Professor of Ancient Civilization and Religion at Fairleigh Dickinson University.

Bell has been serving as director of AID since 1962. He was director of the Bureau of Budget in 1961-62.

A graduate of Pomona College, he received his M.A. degree from Harvard and the LL.D. from Pomona.

During the 1940s, Bell was a staff member, Bureau of Budget, and a special White House Assistant. From 1951-53 he was administrative assistant to President Truman.

From 1954-57, he was an advisor in general economics for the Government of Pakistan's Planning Board, and was project field supervisor for the Harvard Advisory Group.

Bell was an economics lecturer in the Harvard Graduate School of Arts and Sciences from 1957-61.

He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the American Economic Association and the American Society of Public Administration. He is the author of "Allocating Development Resources: Some Observations Based on Pakistan Experience."

Dr. Gaster is considered one of the outstanding scholars in the field of Judaic studies and was formerly chief of the Hebraic section of the Library of Congress.

A MESSAGE TO ROTC COLLEGE MEN

IF YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO BE AN ARMY OFFICER,
STAY IN THE ROTC

Being an Army officer is a challenge. Officers must be leaders... able to take responsibility... get important jobs done.

It isn't easy to win a commission as an Army officer. But if you are taking the Basic Course in ROTC you're well on your way—provided you can measure up to the high standards required for admission to the Advanced Course.

As a student in one of the 247 colleges and universities offering senior ROTC training, you are in a privileged group. There's no better way for any college man to get the training and skills needed to be an Army officer than through the on-campus program created specifically for that purpose—ROTC. Here you learn to be a leader... to develop the qualities that add a vital plus to your academic training... qualities that will pay off for the rest of your life in whatever career you choose to follow.

There are other advantages too. Pay, at the rate of $40 per month during the Advanced Course plus allowances for summer training and travel. Fellowship and social activity. The chance to work with modern Army equipment, and perhaps to qualify for Army flight training if it is offered at your school. And then gold bars and a commission as an Army officer.

Why not talk to your Professor of Military Science now. Let him know you're interested in signing up for the Advanced Course. Then if you are offered an opportunity to join, don't pass it up. It's the program that's best for you... and best for your country.

If you're good enough to be an Army officer, don't settle for less.

CATS LEAD STATE SERIES PLAY

3d In Tight Yankon Race Situation Presents Possibility Of 4-Way Tie For First

By Al Rice and Al Rosenstein

St. Michael's

While sporting a prominent 4-1 record, and a good shot at the Yankee Conference title, the Cats anxiously awaited their second game against the Knights at St. Michael's. After having blasted the Knights 13-2 last Sunday, the Cats once again, quickly jumped into the lead in the early innings of play and compiled a 7-1 advantage in the first 4 innings behind the strong pitching of Bruce Bovenizer. However, the late stages of the game proved to be a different story, and almost a disastrous one. After the 4th inning, Knights' pitcher Joe Banes began to settle down as his teammates started to give him solid support from the plate. St. Mike's managed to push across one run in the 5th inning and three more runs in the 6th inning before Bovenizer had to be replaced by Christie at the end of six innings of play. There was a new ball game with the score 7-5 with the Cats maintaining a slight advantage. Christie seemed to have everything under control, retiring the first 8 men to face him. However, the Knights refused to quit and with 2 outs remaining in the game, the Knights managed to push across 2 more runs in the 9th to tie the score at 7-7. Now in the bottom of the 11th, Banes allowed Christie and Cronin to reach base, and was replaced by Carcich. After striking out Foerster, Tartara, who was so far 5-7 against the Knights, was intentionally walked to load the bases. Foster immediately followed and the Knights' strategy backfired as Foster singled home the winning run with a blast to Center Field.

With a 3-1 Yankee Conference record, next in line to the mound veteran Charlie Foster, who managed to prevent the Huskies from scoring for the first 5 innings of play, began to tire, and allowed the Huskies to take the lead in the 6th inning with a 3-2 advantage. Foster was soon relieved by relief ace Bill Christie, however, he too proved to be ineffective against halting the Conn attack, as they managed to score 2 more runs and take the lead 5-2 before they could finally be subdued. However, the Cats refused to quit and in the 7th inning they managed to push across 2 runs when sophomore Rich Aldrich's double was followed by a 400 ft. blast by veteran Mike Behan. In the 9th inning the Cats managed to put 2 men on base with only one out, but Conn, successfully dwindled the game and went on to secure a 5-4 victory.

With a 3-2 Y.C. record, the Cats knew they had to win this next game against the University of Conn, in order to remain in contention for the Y.C. title. The opening pace was slow as Len Shefflott and Conn, pitcher Lee Bravakis were involved in a severe pitching duel up until the 7th inning when the Cat's power finally began to come through. Supporting a thin 2-1 margin, Captain Charlie Foster began what was to be a climactic 4 run rally as he started the 7th with a double to right center field. Aldrich reached 1st on an error as he sacrificed Foster to 3rd. Then powerful John Tartara unloaded a 375 blast which sent the ball out of the park and provided the Cats with a 5-1 lead. Then Bobby Cronin continued the rally as he was sacrificed to 2nd after singling to right and was then singled home on a drive to right by Pete MacDonald. A lot of credit goes to Vermont starter Len Shefflott as he held the Huskies scoreless after the opening inning, and only gave up 3 hits while striking out 7 and walking only 2.

So with this 7-1 victory, the Cats once again are in high contention for the Y.C. crown and next face Maine for a doubleheader at Centennial Field.

Cats split in Big Pair with Maine.

The Catamounts returned from UConn, Monday to play a doubleheader with the University of Maine Bears. If the Cats wanted to win the Conference title they had to beat Maine twice. However, Vermont was only able to split the doubleheader and remain in 3rd place in the Yankee Conference. In the first game Joe Ferris, the most valuable player in the National College world series in Omaha last year, opposed UVM Captain Charlie Foster. Ferris shut out the Cats 4-0, but certainly did not look like the brilliant pitcher he was last year. He walked 9 batters and was continuously in trouble. Unfortunately, Vermont was never able to come up with the big hit and thus enabled Ferris to get out of trouble time and again. Vermont loaded the bases in the sixth and seventh, but was prevented from scoring by a tight Maine defense and clutch pitching by Ferris. Maine scored 2 runs in the second, the runs scoring on an error, a single, a fielders choice, a run producing single by Steve Sones and a sacrifice fly by Paul Hearney driving in a run. Maine added runs in the 3rd and the 7th. Providing the slugging pair for Maine was Larry Coughlin, who had 3 hits including triples in the 3rd and 7th; he scored 2 runs. Charlie Foster, once again, pitched a good game, going all the way while allowing only 2 earned runs and striking out 8. However, poor fielding and lack of the big hit at the right time prevented Foster from gaining the victory.

The second game was a completely different story, as the Cats slugged Maine pitching for 13 hits and waited to a 10-3 victory. John McCord pitched 8 strong innings for Vermont, and then was replaced in the ninth by Bill Christie. With Maine leading 1-0 Vermont went to work in the bottom of the second. Maine replaced starter Glen Renco with the bases loaded and one out in the inning. Dave Ames came on to face John McCord, the Catamount pitcher, who quickly singled to right to score Mike Behan. Bobby Cronin scored the 2nd run when the right fielder bobbled the base hit by McCord. Pete MacDonald then singled in Frank Forester and McCord scored the forth run of the inning on a sacrifice fly by Wayne Van Ham. The Cats continued their scoring barrage in the fourth, when Pete MacDonald drove in Frank Forester. Vermont added another run in the 7th and 4 more in the eighth. McCord was in command all the way, and pitched brilliantly after the 3rd inning until the 9th, when he began to tire and was given poor fielding support. Bill Christie was called on to stop the fire and the Cats won 10-3. Vermont collected 10 hits, including 3 each by Pete MacDonald and pitcher John McCord.

Tuesday afternoon the Cats played host to Norwich and topped the Cadets in a squeaker 2-1. The Cadets went out in front in the second, but Vermont tied it in the 4th when pitcher Bruce Bovenizer squeezed Bobby Cronin in from third. The Cats went ahead in the sixth 2-1. However, in the eighth inning Norwich loaded the bases with one out. At this point, Coach Lapointe brought in his bull pen ace Bill Christie, who did exactly what was asked of him. He forced the next batter to hit the ball on the ground to 2nd basemen Bobby Cronin, who turned it into a nifty 4-6-3 double play. In the ninth Norwich had runners on 1st and 2nd with one down, when the next batter lifted a long fly that centerfielder Pete MacDonald caught on the run and threw to 2nd doubling up the Norwich pitcher and ending the game.

Bovenizer pitched very well until the eighth when he ran into trouble but was bailed out by Bill Christie who saved the game for him. This was the Cats most exciting game of the season and gave them an 8-3 overall record.

Lapointe Suffers From Writer's Cramp

University of Vermont baseball coach Ralph Lapointe may become the only college coach in the country to get a sore arm from writing so many lineup cards.

Lapointe was busy enough penciling in lineups when the schedule had 15 games in 19 days but an additional game in a makeup contest may be the straw that forced Lapointe to become ambidextrous.

Maine and Vermont were scheduled to meet only once this spring but because both clubs are involved in the thick of the Yankee Conference pennant race the two clubs will play a doubleheader at Centennial Field on Monday (May 3) with the first game starting at 1 p.m.

In addition, the Cats have a lineup date with Middlebury still to be set. Monday's game was washed out.

With the addition of the Maine doubleheader, Lapointe's pitching staff will now face the task of playing seven games in six days, something that would tax even a major league staff. Complicating the issue is the loss of Mike Shea, lone southpaw on the team. Shea suffered a fractured leg sliding into second base in last Friday's game against Massachusetts and is out for the rest of the year.

Maybe Shea can "pinch hit" for Lapointe and write out the lineup cards.

White Defeats Green 7-6

With the University of Vermont entering its final week of spring football drills, Coach Bob Clifford is "relatively happy with the results thus far."

Vermont winds up drills Saturday afternoon with the annual Green vs. White game at 2:30 p.m. at Centennial Field.

Clifford sent the Cats through a heavy scrimmage Saturday and was particularly pleased with the performances of several newcomers and non-letter winners.

Earning praise from the coaching staff were guards Pete Ambrose and Dan Nelson, tackles John Gurrieri and Dave Lucaroni, quarterback Dave Shumate of St. Johnsbury and fullback Terry Lynn. Shumate completed a touchdown pass to open end Dave Busick. Ambrose is a sophomore, Lynn a junior. The rest are freshmen.

"We are somewhat behind our total accomplishments of the last two springs but that is mainly because we had a veteran squad then," says Clifford who guided Vermont to a 7-1 season last fall. The annual cap and gown path next month will remove 14 players from last year's first two units.

Clifford has been stressing a passing attack in spring drills as Vermont was primarily a running club last fall but four of the top five rushers will be absent via graduation.

ONE OF THE CATS BIG FOUR STUMBLES

UVM Captain Rich Holden, Holden is among the Cats' leading players.

By Ted Rowen

The Catamount's big four are no longer undefeated. Team Captain Rich Holden lost two straight sets to Redman of New Hampshire 6-4 and 8-6. Holden was defeated by Redman for the second time in two years. It seems that chance brought Holden up against Redmen for the second time. Coach Marston had been alternating Adler, Holden and Ryan in the number one slot, and unfortunately Holden's turn came up during the New Hampshire match. E.C.A.C. Champion John Adler, and now the undisputed number one tennis player at UVM, defeated his opponent 6-0 and 6-0 by playing his usual brand of ball with lightning forehand and a strong backhand.

Paul Ryan eliminated his competition by winning the first two sets 6-4 and 7-5. Paul accomplished this task with the aid of his strong and consistent serve. Win Marston kept his brilliant undefeated record alive by winning his match 6-3 and 6-2. The Cats then took the number one, two and three doubles match. Adler and Holden played number one doubles. Marston and Ryan teamed up for the number two doubles and Sax and Curtis copped the number three doubles. The final score of the match was 9-0 for a brilliant Catamount victory. UVM knocked off St. Lawrence 6-3 with John Adler winning his two sets 6-0 and 6-3. Clarkson was slaughtered by the Catamounts, 9-0, with Adler winning both sets 6-0. On Tuesday May 4th, the second series of challenge matches were held to see who would be rated as number one. John Adler who proved to be so capable under pressure won the number one berth. Tomorrow the Catamounts play Middlebury. Middlebury should give the CATS the practice they need to be in shape for the Yankee Conference, which will be held this weekend. Once again the administration of UVM surprised some of the students at the University. This time not by changing the compact semester, nor by changing the grading system, but by allowing the tennis team to participate in the New England Conference which will be held the weekend of the 14th-16th. We will all be awaiting the outcome of this week and next week's engagements eagerly. Good luck CATAMOUNTS.

Parking Plan Modified

Students and staff will find some modification of last year's parking policies shortly after classes open at the University of Vermont.

First, all parking stickers will be designed to be affixed to the right rear bumper of the car. Previously, UVM's stickers were designed to be affixed to the inner windows. Trouble with that was that different states prescribed different locations, and several states barred stickers on any inside windows.

The bumper sticker will not only permit students at Vermont to abide by UVM's parking sticker requirement, and their State law, too, it will also make it easier for the University's security force to spot at a glance any parking violators.

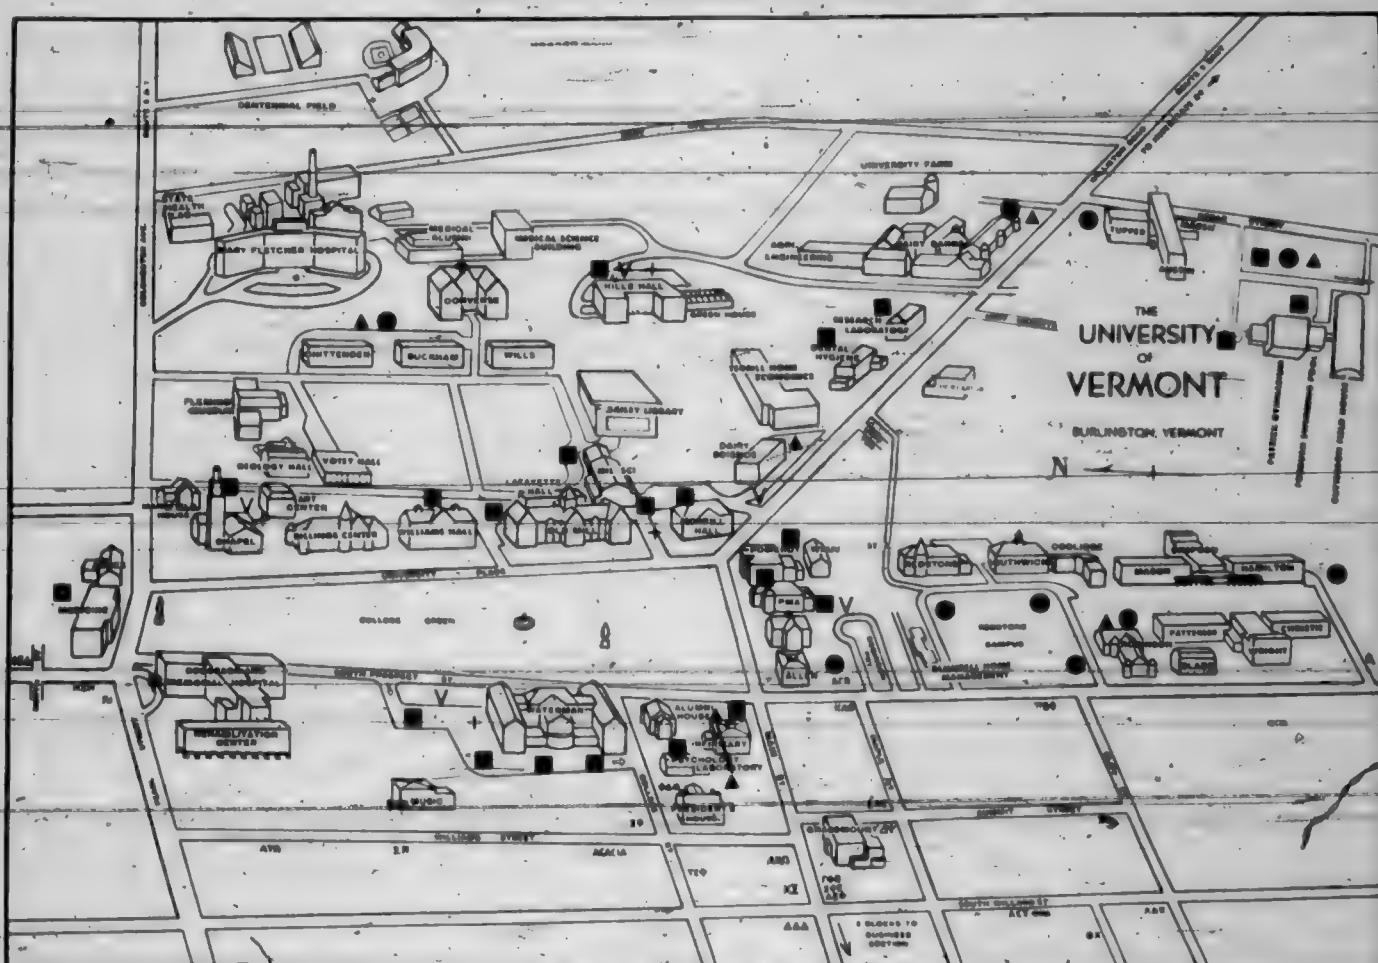

As in the past, staff members will be issued a sticker which will permit them to park in areas reserved solely for staff. Students living on campus will be issued stickers entitling them to park in areas reserved solely for campus residents; students commuting to the campus will be issued stickers entitling them to park in areas reserved solely for commuters.

A number of visitors' and 10-minute parking areas have also been reserved in several key campus locations.

Signs will indicate restrictions for each of the areas, and cars parking in restricted areas for which they do not have an appropriate sticker will be ticketed by security.

"A FRESHMAN'S VIEWS AND HOPES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT"

President Shannon McCune

President McCune

President Buckingham noted further that not all in his audience in 1907 were "The Very Elect," there were also some "Unaccountables" (to quote) "Those who assume the role of matriculates for no good and sufficient reasons — for no better reason, perhaps, than to escape hard work elsewhere, or to have a jolly good time, or to play ball, or to get into a fraternity, or because their parents did not know what else to do with them." (End quote) I trust that in 1965 there are no "Unaccountables" in this audience, but that you all are "The Very Elect."

At the opening ceremonies the next year, 1908, President Buckingham addressed himself cogently to the topic: "The Love of Difficulty." He said, among other things, that a paraphrase of a line from Plato would make a good motto for a university: "Let no one enter here who does not love difficulty."

AN ADDRESS TO THE FRESHMEN

In choosing the group to which I would address myself in this my first address at this University, I have purposely settled upon my fellow freshmen and have chosen for my topic "A Freshman's Views and Hopes of the University of Vermont." Next spring, at my formal inauguration on April 16, I will have better occasion to speak more formally and to a wider audience to give my thoughts on the University of Vermont's role in higher education. Tonight I am speaking personally, informally, and directly.

I could, of course, have addressed myself not to the students in the audience but to the Trustees, including Governor Hoff, to the faculty and staff, to the alumni, and to the friends of the University here assembled. I might have taken as my theme: "The Need for Tolerance to Newcomers." They might be interested to know that few college presidents die in office. The current fad among them is to resign after about ten years in office.

Sometimes resignations are the result of frustrations caused by intolerance. Sometimes they say — they are figuratively and almost literally stoned to death by their faculty! Fortunately,

It is my privilege this evening to open officially the 1965-66 academic year of the University of Vermont. Vermont is a place of strong tradition. Yet since the days of the Green Mountain Boys, formal ceremonies have not been the common custom but have been reserved for particular occasions. This is one of these particular occasions and the wearing of our academic robes does it honor. In deference to another Vermont tradition, however, of informality, I shall free myself from part of my costume, my mortar board.

This convocation marks the opening of a new life for me, the eighteenth president of this University, and a new life for many of the students here assembled.

As a consequence, there are many topics on which I might speak this evening and many groups in this audience to which I might address my remarks. President Buckingham, at the opening ceremony of the University in 1907, addressed himself to those whom he termed "The Very Elect" (quote) "those who are to receive, and to use for the good of all, the potencies which are conferred by a liberal education." I like that word "potencies" — not actualities — but "the potencies" of a liberally educated person.

Inauguration To Be April 16

April 16 has been set as the date for the formal inauguration of Dr. Shannon McCune as the 18th president of the University of Vermont.

The University's ceremonies committee will have responsibility for planning the inauguration. Members of the committee include Roy Whitmore, department of forestry, chairman; Rose Forgiione, nursing; Frank Lidral, music; Donald Moser, mathematics; Hans Murbe, English; Heath

Riggs, mathematics; John Tampas, radiology; and Jack Little, director of resident instruction in the College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Ex officio members of the committee include the University Marshal, Brady Gilleland of the department of classics; past Marshal, Frederic Marston, English; Albert Sadler, consultant on religious programs; and Mrs. Constance Zolotas, director of alumni activities.

CORRECTION

The following is a correction in the "Privileges and Regulations for Students." Paragraph b, under 2, of Parking Regulations on Page 7 should read "Parking restrictions are enforced between the hours of 7:30 a.m. — 2:30 p.m. Monday through Friday..."

THE VERMONT CYNIC NO. 9

EDITORIAL...

A GENERAL WELCOME

With this ninth issue of Volume 83 of the Vermont CYNIC, we want to welcome you all to our UVM community. For some of you this will be your first encounter with our campus. We hope that it will be an enjoyable and successful one.

For some of you this is just a year of beginning, for most it will be a year of decisions - major and minor, and for others it will be a year of termination.

For you, Freshmen, it is just the beginning. You have your full college life ahead of you. Make the most of your four years here at UVM. They could prove to be the most important and also the happiest of your life. Make a good start. Now that you are away from home, the responsibilities of work and play lie solely with you. Study diligently and be enthusiastic in whatever you pursue. Never lose your zest for life. Many of us, we fear, are too complacent and lethargic. UVM will afford you a good education if you will just reach out and take hold of it. The decisions are yours. Good luck!

For the Sophomores and Juniors, no longer newcomers to our surroundings, this will be a year of important decisions - what major to undertake, what career to pursue. Many say that the junior year is the most important one. Perhaps this will also be the year to join that club you just did not have time for last year. Now is your chance to make the time. Use it wisely!

For the Seniors, this is the year of termination and commencement - the termination of the sheltered, care-free days at UVM and the commencement of a lifetime career. May your last year here be a memorable one.

As it is an important year for most of us in our own special ways, it is also an important one for the CYNIC. We, like Freshmen, shall try to bring enthusiasm to our positions. We plan to report news as it happens and to represent the campus well. As with any newspaper, our editorials and columns will criticize, but we hope that it will be in a constructive manner. Idle harping and bitter sarcasm never solved any problems.

There is, however, one important element that we of the staff cannot provide - that is student support. We are a student newspaper; without you behind us we are an empty shell. We encourage you all to take part in your newspaper's activities, either actively as a staff member or letter writer, or passively as a solid, but silent, supporter.

Join us, won't you?

A SPECIFIC WELCOME

We wish to take this opportunity to welcome heartily our new President, Dr. Shannon McCune. Through his wis-

A Freshman's Views

other college presidents work in situations where toleration prevails and are able to perform their roles in a manner which Clark Kerr, of the University of California, somewhat with tongue in cheek, describes in the following manner: (to quote)

THE DEFINITION OF A COLLEGE PRESIDENT

"The American university president is expected to be a friend of the students, a colleague of the faculty, a good fellow with the alumni, a sound administrator with the trustees, a good speaker with the public, an astute bargainer with the foundations and the federal agencies, a politician with the state legislature, a friend of industry, labor, and agriculture, a persuasive diplomat with honors, a champion of liberal education, a vigorous supporter of the professions, a skillful spokesman with the press, a scholar in his own right, a public servant at the state and national levels, a devotee of opera and football equally, a decent human being, a good husband and father, an active church member, and (to paraphrase for Vermont), a lover of skiing and of Morgan horses. Above all, he must enjoy traveling in airplanes, eating his meals in public, and taking part in academic ceremonies." I hope that I may rely on the tolerance of the Trustees, faculty, alumni and friends as I strive to live up to these expectations.

I could address myself to the upperclassmen in this audience, to ask from them forbearance in addition to tolerance. The last academic year has been termed by some the year of the Campus Revolt.

They say that this marks the beginning of an attempt on the part of students to take over the management of the campus, thus relegating the faculty to a secondary role and keeping the administration in the lowly role to which it had already been placed by the faculty. To me, this is an overdrawn picture of last year's campus events.

COMMUNICATIONS WITHIN THE COMMUNITY

What was often at fault was a lack of conversation -- to use a jargon phrase -- the communication process had broken down. Dean Rowell, in addition to the many other responsibilities he carried so effectively last year as Acting President, kept open on this campus the lines of communication between the various elements of the University community and in particular those of the students. This is certainly something which we will continue to do, for this is a student-centered campus and the voice of the student will be heard and heeded. But the art of listening to each other takes time. I ask as a freshman, the tolerance and forbearance of the upperclassmen on this campus.

Tonight, however, out of regard for that special feeling of affinity I have with my fellow freshmen, I am addressing my remarks primarily to them. The rest of you may listen to these "views and hopes" of one of the newcomers to your University community.

dom and foresight, as witnessed by reading his address, he realizes that lack of communication and intolerance hamper our relationships here at UVM. He asks us to have understanding for and patience with him and we expect the same from him. Working hand in hand we feel that all of his hopes and ours can soon be realizations. Good luck in your new capacity!

We freshmen have come to this new place, the University of Vermont, for varied reasons. I came because I was asked to come by a Faculty-Trustee committee of which Mr. Partridge was a member. More important, I wanted to come. (My parents did not send me because they did not know what else they could do with me, as with President's Buckham's "Unaccountables.")

I wanted to come, for the University of Vermont appealed to me as the kind of an educational institution of high quality with which I wished to be associated in this day and age, in this present stage of my life. There are few of you, my fellow freshmen, who do not share with me a feeling that this is your kind of school. According to a profile study of the present junior class, Vermont was the only or the first choice of 81% of the Vermont group and 58% of the out-of-state group; of the present sophomore class, the percentages were 75% and 64% respectively; these percentages are probably higher for you.

STATISTICS ON THE CLASS OF 1969

Harold Collins, our able Director of Admissions, who had a lot to do with your being here, assures me that not a single freshman is enrolled who does not have the intellectual capability of graduating from this University. Now, I hasten to add, there are a number of you who will not graduate, though 7 out of 8 of you will return for your sophomore year and more than four out of five will graduate, if you measure up to our previous classes. Some will have to withdraw because of economic circumstances, though the University is doing what it can through scholarships, grants, loans and work-study programs to make it possible for qualified students to overcome the financial barriers that exist. Some will withdraw to enter upon training in special fields which are not offered at this University. Others will withdraw for marriage and economic demands of a family; yet this is regrettable, for there is great need for college graduates in the home and society. Others will withdraw, hopefully only temporarily, for military service. Let us trust that the tensions of events in far distant parts of this world will not be the cause of a mass exodus. Obviously, though, Vermonters would not be derelict in their assumption of military duty for, as George Washington described Vermonters, "The inhabitants are a hardy race, composed of that kind of people who are best calculated for soldiers; in truth are soldiers."

Then there are some freshmen who, despite their intellectual capability will, to use hard words, flunk out because they are in the wrong curriculum, or are not strongly motivated personally, or are thrown off balance by the new freedoms which University life affords them.

Freshmen, as the name implies, are persons who view the world and the people about them with a fresh look. And I am certainly, by this definition, a freshman, for I look at the University of Vermont and the members of this University community with a fresh view. We freshmen are not inhibited by the dead past, we want to innovate, to try new ways of doing things, new ways of learning and of thinking. We wish to acquire a fresh view of life and of our place in society. We may be, and usually are, naive, but we are eager for the new.

UVM - A COMPLEX PLACE WITH UNIFYING FORCES

In looking at the University of Vermont, we freshmen recognize it as a University made up of a series of colleges. It is not a "multiversity," though it has great diversity in its parts. Its programs range from a nursery school for observation purposes to a medical college with post-doctoral programs. The University of Vermont certainly appears to a freshman, be he a president or a member of the Class of 1969, as a complex place. But we recognize that as a consequence, the University is rich in its educational programs and resources for learning. One of the corollaries of its complexity is that varying purposes are held by the many different individuals and groups in the University community. But there are unifying forces: the pursuit of excellence in all endeavors, the primary importance of learning and teaching in a free atmosphere, the excitement of the quest for knowledge through research and scholarly study, and the value of sharing this knowledge through the extension and public service activities of the University.

We freshmen recognize this as a University, not a college. We chose to be here in these unsheltered surroundings because we want to be in a larger community of scholars. These are values that can be found in a college also, as I who graduated from one can testify, but there are values unique to a university, especially in these times of explosions of knowledge and of widespread diversity of opportunities. We have adventurously chosen the large rather than the small. We like to be where faculty are engaged in a diversity of activities, where they are engaging in research and scholarly study on the fringes of knowledge that will strengthen and make lively and pertinent their teaching.

We know that there are dangers for us in this choice. It will be easy for us as freshmen to become lost, but we agree with President Buckham when he said in 1908 that "the love of difficulty is essential to high attainment." We have set our goals high. We recognize as he did that hitching one's wagon (or in modern paraphrase one's capsule) to a star is difficult, that "astronomical harnessing" will cost us "infinite climbing and struggle." We have come with purpose not to a quiet intimate college, but to a growing, expanding University.

We have come specifically to the University of Vermont, for it has a character which we appreciate. Part of this reflects the state in which it is located, where the University is the apex of the state's educational system. The State of Vermont has been defined as "a state of mind." Henry C. Taylor, a professor at the University and Director of the Vermont Commission in Country Life, wrote these words thirty-five years ago:

"While Vermonters are strongly individualistic -- independent in thought and action -- yet, as a people, they are coherent and capable of working together. They live their own lives, knowing that others prize and choose a different course. They are a spirited people. They meet the challenge when obstacles stand in their pathway, but they do not let others mark the goals toward which they strive. The motto of the State, Freedom and Unity, is exemplified to a marked degree in the life of the people.

The University of Vermont, we freshmen will likely learn, is made up of spirited individualists who value their freedom and yet are willing to work together in unity.

BASIC TRADITION AT UVM

There are many other characteristics of this University and those of value we will learn to appreciate. Some of the traditions may be meaningless, like the stairway outside one of the University buildings that leads up to a solid wall. Don't ask me why. We shall wonder what all the excitement is about when two students link arms and do a Kake Walk -- but we are assured that this excitement is catching. We shall congregate noisily in Billings and quietly, I trust, in the Library, the academic heart of the University. Above all, we shall be studying, for the basic tradition of UVM is learning, not just from books and lecture notes, but from the people around us. Through study and contemplation we shall try to make sense of our lives -- of our little campus world and of the large world around us. We shall be guided by tradition, but we will make some of our own.

For we are freshmen -- we look at things in fresh ways and in addition we have high hopes. It is of some of these hopes that I have, that I would speak most directly tonight. Each of these hopes is related to a specific group within our University community.

HOPES AND VIEWS

I hope, firstly, that the citizens of this state, the alumni and the friends of the University will continue to take pride in the University of Vermont and treat it generously as it deserves; that they will not seek to circumscribe it but will encourage its logical growth in numbers and in diversity. I hope in particular that they will trust the University to search for knowledge and teach that knowledge in a free atmosphere. For example, if a person, be he a teacher or an invited visitor, espouses an unpopular cause in a class or in a speech on this campus, the citizens, alumni and friends should not be horror struck. They should recognize that one way our certain truths are made secure is through listening to and discarding the false, out in the open, in the full play of academic freedom.

Secondly, I hope that the Board of Trustees -- the elected and appointed members of the public constituency of the University -- will move wisely in matters of policy, recognizing the trust that is placed on them to preserve this institution free and dynamic and financially solvent. They have responsibilities which they must exercise, for authority has been placed upon them. Their crucial role is not often recognized and yet it is a significant characteristic of our American system, our belief that boards of lay citizens representing the public should exercise the ultimate authority in our universities and colleges.

ALCOHOL AND UVM

The Board of Trustees of UVM has recognized its proper role. Let me illustrate with one example. There is a state law in Vermont that persons under the age of 21 may not be sold or be served alcoholic beverages. The Board wisely does not wish to turn over the exercise of law enforcement within the University campus and community to others nor does it condone the mitted the use or possession of alcoholic beverages:

- A. At any University social function.
- B. On University property.
- C. In any housing which accommodates students in residence; i.e., those living with parents or spouse.

All students, regardless of age, will be held responsible for appropriate conduct with reference to the use of alcoholic beverages.

The Board delegates to the University community the responsibility of abiding by and en-will value the fact that education is not just acquired in the classroom, nor through the formally ranked teacher. The pleasant secretary in a department office, the vigilant night watchman on a beat, the long-suffering security officer plagued with parking violators (who seem born with four wheels instead of walking legs), and the good natured groundsman trimming shrubs, each has his or her share in the educational enterprise of UVM.

And then, fourthly, I hope that the faculty, as they are engaged in formal instruction, will treasure their freedom and the free-individual freedom, but freedom on the part of the entire academic community to pursue truth, no matter where it may take us, for truth is the essence of learning.

"There are some who scoff at academic freedom as a meaningless abstraction, but I think that the specifics have been realistically enumerated in the following four freedoms: Freedom of inquiry, freedom of belief, freedom of dissent, and freedom of access to learning. When these freedoms are absent, the educational structure becomes a system of indoctrination and a vehicle of propaganda.

"Education requires thought and an exchange of ideas -- popular and unpopular -- by students and teacher. If our civilization is to advance, new ideas and new knowledge must arise from our universities. This function of the university cannot succeed if the university must live in fear of oppression."

We freshmen recognize the need of the faculty for academic freedom and also their desire to keep up in their field through research and scholarly work and in their teaching through trying out new ways of presenting scholarly material. I hope that they will be patient and tolerant with us learners, but I also hope that they will share with us their love of freedom, their enthusiasm for learning and give us insight and new vision which will stretch our minds.

The faculty in shaping the curricula and developing the total learning programs have a special responsibility to help us learn to live with science in these tumultuous days. I hope that they will plan with imagination and wisdom their educational programs. John Dewey, one of the most illustrious graduates of this University many years ago, noted that: "We have displayed enough intelligence in the physical field to create the new and powerful instrument of science and technology. We have not had enough intelligence to use this instrument deliberately and systematically to control its social operations and consequences." As Emmanuel G. Messtene has pointed out in a recent thought-provoking article in The Saturday Review, John Dewey "saw early the problems that would arise when man learned to do anything he wanted before he learned what he wanted." (I like that phrase, let me repeat it.) Certainly the faculty must give us leads in developing our courses of study and in conducting them so that in this age when "we have recovered our nerve" we may learn what we want in this world. This is an awesome responsibility.

Fifthly, I hope that the upperclassmen, the graduate students, and the medical college students (I am grouping all of them together for it is a mark of a university that the former rigid class demarcations are becoming blurred and of little consequence), that all these students, will feel a responsibility for sharing with us freshmen their vigorous enthusiasm for things of learning and their zest for living a full life -- not warped, not opinionated, but dedicated to worthy goals.

Specifically, they can do much to help us freshmen learn, for much of the learning on a university campus is and should be from our fellow students. In Lyman Allen's history of the Medical College, he makes note of the fact that the primary role of the fraternities in the early days of the college was to serve as student-led quiz sections where the didactic utterances of the professors were discussed and analyzed, where students taught each other. One of the new trends in American higher education is to develop student-led seminars evasion of state laws. Moreover, it recognizes the difficulty in making distinctions between undergraduate students above and below the ages of 21. Therefore, it has adopted a simple set of regulations which are printed in the University rules and the Date Book. Copies of these rules are given to every student and available to their parents. These rules are:

"Undergraduate students, regardless of age, are not per-forcing these sensible simple rules. I trust that every group and every individual within this University community will exercise its and his responsibilities and not put the administration or the Board into a position of taking arbitrary action in seeking to preserve the good of the total University society.

Relating my hopes to a third group, I hope that the administrative staff of this University dom of their students to pursue the truth vigorously and responsibly. President Fay in his convocation address in 1963 said:

A TOTAL RANGE OF FREEDOM

"True education requires the existence of the total range of freedom within our colleges and universities, not only general

associated with each course. Have you ever experimented with organizing on your own such seminars where five or six students taking a lecture course meet weekly at a specified time and place in a fraternity or sorority or residence hall to have a student-led discussion session over the lectures of the week? You would be surprised at how much you would profit from such programs -- for you will be truly learning and not involved solely in passive listening, in hopefully remembering, and weekly regurgitating on examination papers your new and insecure knowledge. As Mrs. Frank Boyden, who has taught for over sixty years at Deerfield Academy, said recently to one of her classes: "Boys, when will you stop remembering and start thinking?" We freshmen, and I suspect many of us teachers, would enjoy partaking in such educational processes as student-led seminars.

But leadership in these, as in all the important aspects of student life which will enrich our learning, must come from upper-class students. We count on you to give us freshmen sound leadership. On some later occasion, I hope to elaborate to student leaders my hopes on the significant roles which they can play in a University community.

STUDHS AND REBUS HONESTIIS

And lastly, I have my hopes as a freshman for my fellow freshmen. I hope that we may grow in our "love of difficulty," in our enjoyment of freedom, in our appreciation for responsibility, and in our love of learning. I hope that we may give priority to "Integrity in Theoretical and Practical Pursuits," the motto of this University. This is put in Latin on our seal; though there are varied translations, the common one is "Integrity in Theoretical and Practical Pursuits." The key word is Integrity, a virtue too often discounted in our present world, but I trust valued on this campus. Above all, I hope that we may constantly learn to know ourselves more fully. We each have our individual bent and skills and desires and ambitions. As Vermonters, we respect the fact that others "prize and choose a different course." But with integrity, we pursue our own course.

With changing times and changing environments, our commitments may change. But we should not discard the old because it is old, but only because it is not relevant to our times. The faith of our fathers is a precious faith that should not be denied without firm reason. Only a firm new faith should replace it, a faith to which we can commit ourselves with sincerity and can hold with integrity. It is easy to be indifferent in this day and age, but this world needs committed, focused individuals -- "The Very Elect" -- not indifferent drifters not "Unaccountables". I hope that this University will be a place where freedom and responsibility are joined together and where we, committed individualistic Vermonters, may "grow in wisdom, and in stature and in favor with God and man."

I now declare the 1965-66 academic year of the University of Vermont officially opened by the authority vested in me by the Board of Trustees. And so to our practical and theoretical pursuits, pursuing them with integrity. Thank You.

ROTC Outlook

Is Excellent

With final tallies not to be completed until next week, preliminary indications are that the new voluntary Reserve Officers Training Corps Program will be a real success at the University of Vermont.

Although the Cadet Brigade will probably shrink to 600 students from its former level of 1100 students, officer output prospects are excellent. As an example of how this can happen, consider the experience of the past year. Some 170 incoming Junior students applied for the Advanced Course. Some 95 were found fully acceptable after grades, physicals, and leadership evaluations took their toll. Now, looking to the future, approximately 175 students volunteered in the incoming Sophomore class and some 250 volunteered in the incoming Freshman class. Officer output therefore, should continue to climb in the years to come even though overall enrollment has dropped.

Since the mission of providing broad military training to all qualified Freshman and Sophomore male students was eliminated with elimination of mandatory ROTC, the Military Science Department will henceforth concentrate on officer output. The objectives of that program can clearly be met without difficulty.

SEATING AT

CENTENNIAL FIELD

It has been decided that freshmen will be invited to sit in Section 4 of the north stands, and sophomores, juniors, seniors and graduate students are to sit in those areas of Sections 9, 10 and 11 south stands that are to be assigned to students. It was decided that 9, 10 and 11 would be reserved for students and staff with the exception of the top one-half of Section 9. However, this arrangement may be subject to slight changes relative to the

IFC Announces Rush Policy

The 1965-66 IFC Rush Committee believes that the Fall Rush should be devoted to selling the Fraternity System. It also believes that the individual houses should be subsequently emphasized during the second semester. Lastly, in order not to penalize those houses which strictly observe the following rushing rules, these rules will be strictly enforced by the Rushing Committee and the IFC Judiciary.

This new system is slated toward giving a true picture of fraternities with a minimum amount of pressure upon the Freshmen. This plan is the product of investigation into the previous rushing policies at the University of Vermont and those of several other campuses.

Specific Rushing Rules

1. All fraternity houses will be closed to Freshmen on all Fridays and Saturdays until the official date of pledging, with the exception of Homecoming (Saturday night).

2. Fraternity men shall engage in no form of rushing, with regard to Freshmen, on any Friday or Saturday until the official date of pledging, with the exception of Homecoming (Saturday night).

3. Fraternity men shall not enter the Freshmen dormitories from the beginning of second semester until the official date of pledging. (This rule does not apply to fraternity men living in the Freshman dormitories.)

4. No freshman may pledge a fraternity without a minimum, overall average of 70% for his first semester.

Penalty for Infraction of these Rules

The penalty for the infraction of any of these Rushing Rules will be decided by the discretion of the IFC Judiciary Committee and may include, as such, warning, postponement of pledging, fine, or social probation. The Freshmen involved in such infraction shall be considered equally responsible and may be prohibited from pledging a fraternity until the second semester of his sophomore year, upon the discretion of the IFC Judiciary Committee.

Scientist Speaks On Space

The UVM Episcopal Center, Newman Center, Hillel House and the Protestant Association on Campus will co-sponsor the first big lecture of the new semester.

Dr. John A. O'Keefe, high-ranked NASA scientist, will speak in Billings North Lounge, Thursday, Sept. 16, at 7:30 p.m. on "The Origin of the Universe."

Dr. O'Keefe is assistant chief, theoretical division, NASA, at the Goddard Space Flight Center, Greenbelt, Maryland. The unique Cyrillide meteor procession owes its name to him. Designated by President Johnson as his representative to greet the Presidential scholars, Dr. O'Keefe feels that the Hoyle theory of continuous creation is size of the President's party, sale of season tickets and other contingencies.

no longer acceptable, but that the theory of an oscillating universe needs to be examined.

The religious groups on campus plan to co-sponsor other lectures, forums and seminars in the future. "We have a duty to the university to demonstrate the relevance of religion not only to personal moral and ethical decision, but to the great problems of the day," says Prof. Harry Kahn, Director of Hillel, His Catholic and Protestant colleagues agree that this duty can be discharged ecumenically.

"We are leading off with Dr. O'Keefe because many tend to see a conflict between science and religion, especially about creation," says Fr. Beary, Newman co-chaplain. "We'll give them a chance to ask an expert."

On Sept. 30, the religious groups will sponsor a forum on Vietnam.

Marine Tattoo Opens 1965 Lane Season

By Buddy Beeber

Lane Series, which for the past eleven years has been one of Vermont's major cultural attractions, promises to be even better in the 1965-66 season. For those who are not acquainted with its history, The George Bishop Lane Artists Series was made possible by the generous gift donated in 1954 by Mrs. George B. Lane, in memory of her husband, George B. Lane of the Class of 1883. The Lane Series was widely acclaimed in Burlington and in 1961 another program was inaugurated, The Lane Chamber Arts Series. Both series with its dance, music and theater have culturally enriched its audience since its start.

Red Series

This year, there are seven concerts on both the Red and Blue Series. For its first attraction on October 25, the Red Series will present the folk-pop singing group, "The New Christy Minstrels." The group consists of nine singers and instrumentalists who have been hailed throughout the country for their musical abilities. On October 29, the smash Broadway musical "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off" will appear with a most talented cast of actors. On November 29, for the classically oriented audience, the big attraction will be the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra, one of the best symphonies in its field. This is the symphony's first debut in the U.S., under the expert management of S. Hurok. Kiril Kondrashin is Chief conductor of the symphony and virtuoso violinist Igor Oistrakh is guest soloist. The group will give twelve concerts in New York City and twelve outside N.Y.C. Including Burlington. Appearing on January 21 will be Leon Fleisher, the major international concert artist, who has performed with every leading orchestra in the U.S. His outstanding achievement is the recording with George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra of all five Beethoven Piano Concerti. On February 8, the Red Series will present one of the most extraordinary ensembles in the world, I Soisti Veneti, which is composed of twelve instrumentalists under the direction of Claudio Scimone. For concert lovers, on March 9, the beautiful and musically gifted leading soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Anna Moffo, will display her talents. On April 4, the spine-tingling Rumanian Folk Ballet will make their mark in Memorial Auditorium. This is their first appearance in America and under the direction of S. Hurok will present Bucharest's version of the Russian Moiseyev dancers.

The company consists of over one hundred with dancers, gypsy orchestra and singers.

Blue Series

The Blue Series has an equally exciting program planned for this year. For ballet admirers, on October 15, the Blue Series will present the National Ballet from Washington D.C. under the direction of Frederic Franklin. The company consists sixty with scenery and costumes, accompanied by a symphony orchestra. Al Hirt who is one of the greatest exponents of jazz and the finest trumpet man of this time will give his performance on November 16. December 8 will usher in the New York City Opera in Rossini's comic opera, "The Barber of Seville." The opera will be accompanied by a full symphony orchestra conducted by Julius Rudel. More beautiful folk music will be heard on January 24 when Pete Seeger, who has

BULLETIN

Last Sunday evening two men claiming and appearing to be thirsty visiting delegates to the Vermont-New Hampshire School of Vanking Convention held in Burlington this week, went out in search of some sort of hard liquid refreshment. Since liquor stores are closed Sunday evenings these alleged bankers, apparently remembering their undergraduate days, thought that a fraternity house would be a good place to find some beer at UVM.

Much to their dismay, there was no beer or any other sort of alcoholic beverage to be bought or consumed at Lambda Iota, Kappa Sigma, or Sigma Phi Epsilon.

This somewhat mysterious event has been the subject of UVM's hottest and most recent rumor. Following closely upon President McCune's opening convocation, in which he made some general remarks on the drinking situation, it was the cause of some concern and speculation on the part of students that this might be the first step in an administration crackdown on drinking at UVM. When confronted with this possibility, the administration denied any connection with these two men.

While evidence points to the veracity of their story, certain points are still unclear and the identity of these two men and their specific purpose in visiting the three fraternities remains something of a mystery as we go to press.

just completed a ten month tour of Asia, Africa and Europe will perform. On February 14, reappearing for a second time in Memorial Auditorium will be the famous mezzo soprano, Miss Shirley Verett. Making a stop in Burlington to perform on March 3 while on tour to the New York Philharmonic Hall will be the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished musical director, Max Rudolf. GREEKS APPEAR PUBLICLY SEPT. 29

By Buddy Mandell

The time is rapidly approaching for the fraternities and sororities of the University of Vermont to make their first planned public appearance. Beginning Wednesday, September 29, through the joint cooperation of the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council, the exciting annual activities of GREEK WEEK will get under way.

The Greek Week activities will be ignited on Wednesday night at the Opening Convocation, which will be held at the Ira Allen Chapel at 7:00 P.M. Guest speakers will be Mr. Robert W. Krovitz of the National Interfraternity Conference and Mrs. Holden, a national representative of the Panhellenic Council. Following the Convocation there will be an Informal Coffee and Self-evaluation Period. On Thursday there will be a Queen Judging, Exchange Dinners and Workshops, which will be limited to house presidents and guests, and therefore not open to the student body. On Friday night at 8:00 P.M. in the Memorial Auditorium, the various fraternities and sororities will participate in the Greek Sing. Greek Week activities will be culminated by the Greek Games from 1:00-5:00 P.M. on Saturday and the Greek House Parties on Saturday night. It is important to note that at all activities (Opening Convocation, Greek Sing, Greek Games) which are open to the entire college community there is NO admission fee.

The concept of Greek Week has two main purposes. First of all, to help the Greek System improve itself in order to become a more beneficial part of the University Community and secondly to demonstrate to the University Community the true value of the Greek System on this campus. But this is not the whole picture, basically because Greek Week is not only designed for the members of fraternities and sororities, but rather for the entire University community. Fred Brown, the Vice President of the IFC, has recently stated that "I would like to see the entire College community get out and participate in the events of Greek Week, for the success of this function rests on wholehearted support."

FROSH HOP TO TRADEWINDS AT MIXER

By Marvin J. Bellovin

Freshman Mixer 1965 - generally: disliked by Freshmen males, loved by freshmen girls, favorable to upperclassmen, and entirely unfavorable to upper-class women, took place on this Saturday past. The starting time for the mixer was 8 p.m. Only freshmen men and women, accompanied by their beanies were permitted to enter the gym at 8. (Charlie Catamount, however, was permitted in early since no one is quite sure what class, if any, he is in.) Music for dancing was provided by the Tradewinds. The band did a remarkable job of keeping everyone hopping, jumping, stomping, kicking and even some people dancing for the duration of the dance. It was highly advisable that anyone daring enough to walk through the middle of the dance floor arm him or herself with a suit of armor. As a double protection for these highly sensitive young males who inhabit UVM, a pair of dark sunglasses might have been recommended. Their purpose would have been to protect one's eyes from the glaring effects of the body movements made by some of our coeds while doing some of our modern dances. At about nine-thirty p.m. noises were heard from outside the gym. One quickly discovered that it was the anxious and somewhat cold upperclassmen who were waiting to enter the gym at the announced time of 10 o'clock, with the announced sum of fifty cents. They quickly entered with the poise and confidence of an upperclassman. Many dangling their fraternity pins, others their strength and brawn. A freshman boy hearing the onslaught of the mighty upperclassmen was faced with a momentous decision. He could either quickly grab the girl he was with and leave, or he could stick around and (even on his trembling feet) stand up to the challenge flung at him by the oncoming upperclassmen. Many a freshman, with a girl close by his side, decided to get out quickly. Others, either because they didn't have a girl by their side or they didn't know where the exit was, waited in awe for the entrance of the upperclassmen. At 10 p.m. they entered and quickly sized up the situation. One freshman suddenly felt a large hand enveloping his waist and the next thing he realized was that he was without a partner. This unusual occurrence was not limited to freshmen. It was being practiced between sophomores and juniors, and juniors and seniors, which disproves any notion that upperclassmen only pick on freshmen. As the dance progressed the dance floor took on the shape of a large circle with the perimeter composed mainly of eager males contemplating their next move. After each dance they decided one of two things. They either daringly plunged into the center of the dance floor and tried situation. While indulging in this to find some girl worthy of their calling or they just struck it out on the sidelines waiting for some miracle to happen, which I'm afraid never did. If one didn't care to dance he could go out into the lobby and jockey for position around some pretty girl. He most likely soon found himself attracting many of his fellow comrades who sought to play the game also. I believe the record for the night was 12 boys around one poor freshman girl. For the unsociable participant who didn't care to indulge in dancing or mingling there was still left the walk around the gym. This walk was designed to give someone a quick appraisal of the girl or boy walk (or hike, since it took about an hour to get around the gym) one heard such strange and bizarre phrases as: "Hey, let's get out of here, this place is a drag," or "Man, what a bunch of pigs," or "Boy, what a piece I just danced with," or "I've heard about you fraternity men!" or finally "I wonder why no one has asked me to dance?" Luckily, after having heard these unusual phrases, one suddenly realized that the last song of the Tradewinds, which brought the 1965 Freshmen Mixer to a close was being played. However, this was only the beginning of this year's rush on our coeds. Many left the dance with their first kill of the season; many others got killed. But as a wise old Chinese philosopher once said, "He who rushes too fast, often TRIPS."

Homecoming Takes Shape

All across campus preparations are under way for the biggest all-school weekend of the fall semester. Fraternities are planning parties and posters; alumni are preparing to invade Burlington; the Catamounts are preparing for a victory over URI, and the Homecoming Committee is just plain preparing. Homecoming is on its way. On Friday night, October 8, the Homecoming Ball opens the festivities which conclude Saturday night with Fraternity parties, which, this year, are open to Freshman males. Considering all, Homecoming is shaping up as a wonderful weekend that can be enjoyed by all. The Homecoming Committee, now arranging entertainment for the Ball, is in contact with top name groups which will assure the best in entertainment. The committee's selection will soon be announced in the CYNIC. So watch and prepare, for Homecoming cometh.

wonderful season, on April 19, the long running musical comedy about young love "Barefoot in the Park," will hold its audience in hysterics.

Special Lane Series Attraction

One of the greatest eye spectacles to be seen this year will be the "Royal Marines Tattoo," appearing as a lane extra at Patrick Gymnasium on October 11. With the cooperation of the British Ministry of Defense, arrangements have been completed to present the most elaborate and spectacular military review. The Tattoo includes two marching bands of the Royal Marines; the Massed Pipes Drums and Dancers of the Scots Guards and the Royal Scots Greys; and the British Columbia Highland Lassie Dancers. The company of 160 will be the largest and most varied of any comparable company presented on this continent. The Tattoo is now on tour of the U.S. and Canada but their presentation will formally be seen as part of the Military Tattoo at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland next summer.

A preview has been given of the upcoming performances, but only by seeing the different performances in person can one gain full appreciation for the time and effort devoted to the planning of such a wonderful array of talent. Tickets are on sale in the Lane Series office in Room 54 Waterman.

Anyone interested in part-time work as a lifeguard at the University pool, contact Todd Fischer at Sigma Nu, 863-9862. Those applying should have an up-to-date Senior Red Cross Life Saving. There will be a meeting of all those interested Sunday, September 19 at 7:00 at the pool. Be ready to take a short swimming test. Those who worked last year should also come.

ROTC Juniors Are Tops At Summer Camp

Continuing a trend of recent years, the Reserve Officer Training Corps Cadets from the University of Vermont established an outstanding record during their six-week Summer Camp at Fort Devens, Massachusetts during the months of June and July. The Camp is attended by Cadets between their Junior and Senior years at the University in order to be eligible for commissioning upon graduation or, at their option, after their Senior year with commissioning being deferred until completion of the Camp.

The current group of Cadets set the enviable record of being tops among large universities with 50 or more cadets at camp, tops among Yankee Conference universities, and tops among colleges and universities within the State of Vermont. The standings were based on scores achieved in a comprehensive written examination, rifle marksmanship scores, physical combat proficiency test scores, map reading test scores, and the leadership reaction test scores. There were 47 colleges and universities from five of the six Army areas in the United States represented at the Fort Devens Camp, with honors for distance from campus going to cadets from Texas A&M. Cadets attend the camp nearest their university or, at their option, the one closest to their permanent home.

University of Vermont cadets did extremely well in the competition within platoons for top spots in ratings formulated by Regular Army tactical officers. UVM cadets finished in the top four positions in the forty-eight man platoons at a rate twice that which would be expected on a statistical basis. Cadets recommended for appointment as Distinguished Military Students, the honor which qualifies an ROTC Cadet for appointment as a Regular Army officer on the same basis as West Point graduates, exceeded the expected number by two-thirds.

Individual stand-outs were many, but of particular note were the accomplishments of Milt Gog-gins who received the number one rating within his platoon and who was number two man in the entire camp in rifle marksmanship. Milt is a member of the varsity basketball team, student court, and Tau Epsilon Pi fraternity. The number one marksman at camp was UVM Cadet Jim McKinnon who topped 1905 other cadets in camp-wide competition to bring the trophy back to UVM. Jim is a member of the varsity baseball team, the Newman Club, and Kappa Sigma fraternity. He is also a Student Association Senator. Not to be outdone, Jim Fox was the man who captured the hand grenade competition held at the end of camp. Jim is a member of Delta Psi fraternity.

Commissioned as Second Lieutenants at the conclusion of camp were: Roderick Carnie, James Gallo, Robert McCarty, John McMurtrie, Francis O'Brien, George Oelze, Richard Pouch, Richard Reynolds, Lawrence Rice, Jeffrey Sockol, Keith Stone and Martin Wolf.

Training Program Under Way

The University of Vermont ski coach Bob Stone traveled to Hanover, N.H., Thursday, Sept. 2, to spend five days helping establish a "pre-snow training program" for the U.S. National Nordic Ski Team.

About 20 of the best nordic skiers in the United States are scheduled to be at Hanover for the program which is under the direction of Al Merrill who is also the Dartmouth ski coach.

Stone is serving as an assistant to Merrill as is another Vermonter, John Caldwell of the Putney School. Caldwell is in charge of the cross country portion of the program.

The program is designed to establish a fall training schedule so that once snow arrives, team members will be able to move directly on to the slopes with a minimum of time spent on basic fundamentals.

The team is sponsored by the U.S. Ski Association and consists of the best cross country, jumpers and combined skiers in the country.

EDITORIAL

Well, UVM is back in business again after a long hot summer and along with the usual cries of outrage and discontent which accompany this event each year comes an increasingly desperate plea from the UVM car owner. You see, they've been robbed, and as they cry out in the night for justice it becomes increasingly apparent to us that their situation is worthy of the administration's reconsideration -- reconsideration because it seems that during the summer some changes were made, and this is where the "swindle" comes in. UVM has had a serious parking problem in recent years and the prime bone of contention among students has been that restricted faculty parking areas usually appear relatively empty while student areas are always overcrowded. Students returned this semester to find the situation intolerably worsened by the changes resulting from the administration's considerations of the problem. All parking on main campus, with the exception of two lots, has been taken from resident students and given to faculty and staff and a very limited number of commuting students. The shame of it all! That such unjust proceedings should be foisted upon an unsuspecting student-motorist-public is indeed a matter of grave concern to us all. But, seriously, the situation has become unbearable. We will agree that top priority should be given to faculty and commuting students, those who must drive to the campus. But do they need all the space that has been afforded them? The security office insists that they do. We cannot refute this statistically. We only know what we see in this case, and we see plenty of empty spaces in restricted areas. As it stands now there are 600 parking spaces for faculty and staff and approximately 1375 for students. But 750 of these student spaces are up at the Patrick Gym, and this is where the Security Police have suggested students park their cars. The assinineity of such a suggestion will be particularly obvious to students living in the upperclassmen's dorms or someplace of comparable distance from main campus.

We think, therefore, that we are beginning to get the hint. The suggestion as subtly implied by the administration's recent action is that all students who live within walking distance of main campus (including places like Redstone campus) should speed up to classes every day on their 1966 Feet and leave their cars parked at residence halls, fraternities, etc. This is a suggestion of questionable merit and it becomes increasingly so as Fall turns into Winter and it appears that every frozen step saved is a worthwhile investment.

So where does this leave us? It leaves us with the same serious parking problem we had at the beginning of this editorial. NO one is really at fault. Unfortunately the problem is not that simple and we can't pin it on anyone. The Security Police are not to blame. They are given the situation as it stands and they cope with it as best they can. In effect, they just work here. And so it is that the administration must answer for a seemingly insurmountable problem which they did not really create. We realize the complexity of the problem and that there are more considerations than we can foresee. But, meanwhile the student public clamors for a solution. Like any public they are not very un-

Foreign Films Scored

To the Editor:

I feel that a protestation is in order in reference to the selection of films in the Foreign Film Festival shown this summer at Claustrophobic Hall. The price, seats and films were intolerable. Although no critic of scatology, I feel a line must be drawn in spite of a university being the last bastion of true thinking; the films shown very often purposefully titilating in many instances with no dramatic purpose. The optic and auditory aspects were unbelievable. I've seen home movies shown with better facilities.

The more familiar of the films have been shown on minor TV stations, elsewhere gratis and the less familiar, deservedly so. The "shorts" with their commonality of obscurity were pretentious. One favorite (a silver ball with free floating anxiety) was shown in black and white one week and color, the next. It had the distinction of becoming more obscure. I won't go into the nude-orgy exercise which because of poor film quality was unobservable. The emphasis on Japanese films gave us all the opportunity to do penance for the atomic bomb. No one could have previewed these films!

Myopically yours,
H.E. Ellis

Attention Readers

During the Autumn Semester the Reading Center will offer reading improvement seminars designed to help students in the improvement and refinement of reading and study skills. These non-credit seminars will meet three times weekly in hourly sessions. All seminars will begin MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 27th. THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR THESE SEMINARS FOR FULL-TIME STUDENTS.

All reading improvement seminars in the Reading Center are designed to improve and refine those skills necessary for academic success at the college level. Emphasis will be upon vocabulary development and comprehension skills as well as increasing individual reading rates. Attention will also be given to such study skills as note-taking, outlining and preparing for exams. All of the latest mechanical aids will be utilized.

TO REGISTER, complete a registration form which is available in either 46 WATERMAN, or 143 WATERMAN. DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS IS THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23. Seminars are limited to fifteen students and registration is on a first-come-first-served basis.

Fraternity Row

Wednesday, Freshmen men, eagerly searching for bills, care packages, and letters from their girls, found in their mail boxes an interesting bulletin entitled "The IFC Rush Booklet." For many of these undergraduates, it will become the basis of their stay at the University, for it contains the basic information of the fraternity system here at UVM. And since, with the advent of a new year, a new rushing program has been initiated, it may be valuable to reiterate some of the rules and policies contained in the manual.

Basic to this year's rushing program is the philosophy upon which it was based - namely, that the entire first semester will be given over to the exploration of the system - not one specific fraternity. Events have been planned so that both the Freshmen and the brothers of the fraternities will be given ample opportunity to meet and form friendships. Yet it must be stressed again that from now until December each and every prospective pledge should attempt to visit every fraternity and meet as many brothers as is possible. The reasoning behind this should be obvious; one cannot tell from a first or casual visit that "this is the house for me." Choosing a fraternity is an important choice - one that should not be regarded lightly.

With this in mind, it is recommended that all Freshmen take the time to participate in the events this semester. Fraternity houses are open during the week and the brothers urge you to stop for a few moments to get acquainted. Don't be shy - friendliness and cordiality can be found with little effort.

Upperclassmen should also remember that they too are eligible to join a fraternity, regardless of their academic year. Because you have been on the campus and understand its actions, you have the advantage of knowing the houses in which you are interested. Contact the rushing chairmen or Presidents of these houses. It must be remembered that you cannot be rushed until you have shown some desire on your part.

Enough with the rushing rules. Suffice it to say that fraternal life at UVM is a rewarding and exciting experience. Friendships will be made throughout the years and cherished after graduation. The IFC's fundamental purpose is to insure the success of the member fraternities. This success cannot be reached until each and every rusher has been satisfied and rewarded. If you have any trouble, don't hesitate to call us at Extension 551 during the day.

Fleming Fall Program Starts Wednesday

The Fleming Museum Fall events begin next Wednesday evening, Sept. 22, with the first program in the film series, "Knife in the Water." The Polish "new wave" film was scheduled at popular request.

Following this are two old classics, W.C. Fields' "My Little Chickadee" on October 20, and W.D. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," from the film library of the Museum of Modern Art, on November 10. A second recent film of note, "Hallelujah the Hills," avant garde with a Vermont setting, is set for December 15th.

"Chickadee," where Fields encounters Mae West as a Belle of the West, everybody knows, but Griffith's "Blossoms" has always been a sleeper. Most movie enthusiasts know Griffith only through his spectaculars, "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," but he did other things of value. "Blossoms" stands high on the critics' lists.

The whole film series includes eight programs. Plans for the four Spring programs include Humphrey Bogart in "The Big Sleep" and Ingrid Bergman's "The Silence."

All films are shown at 8 p.m. in the Arena Theater except for "My Little Chickadee," which is shown at 7:15. Admission is by Museum membership. No singles are sold. Dues are modest: $2 for students, $3 for all others. (Faculty can get their whole family in for $7.) Membership also puts you on the Museum mailing list and gives you a discount on Museum rentals.

The Museum special Fall exhibitions start Thursday evening, September 23, with "Woodcuts By Clem Hurd." The woodcuts were done for a children's book, "The So-So Cat," written by Mrs. Hurd. The exhibit traces the project from initial concept to final layout. Mr. Hurd, who winters in California and summers in Vermont, will be honored at an opening reception the evening of September 23.

IBM's traveling exhibit of Leonardo da Vinci's inventions, featuring working mock-ups and models follows October 16 to November 7. Charles Louis Heyde, a nineteenth century Burlington artist and brother-in-law of Walt Whitman will be revisited in a loan exhibition November 13 to December 1. A photographic show of Historic Annapolis architecture is set for November 27 to December 19.

The Spring schedule is in the process of being hammered out but will include something in contemporary art to follow in the footsteps of the "OP" art show last Spring, with its invasion of six Montreal artists. "Spring," says Museum director, Janson, "is when you need a little fresh air."

Students missed the Museum's summer breeze, a show of abstractions by Irwin Tuttle of Fayston, but signed two versions of the exhibit poster based on a painting called "The Bathers" and suitable for framing, are on sale at the Museum and the bookstore. Price? Modest.

There will be a meeting of all students interested in working on any of the CYNIC staffs (news, sports, production, art) on Wednesday, September 22 at 4:00 P.M. in the Marsh Room in Billings. An informal coffee hour will follow the general meeting. All freshmen are especially invited to attend.

CATS OPEN vs. A.I.C. TOMORROW

Inexperience Is Team's Chief Stumbling Block

FROM THE CATS MOUTH

On September 18th, the UVM football season will swing into action. This year's team has lost 17 lettermen, and consequently many sophomores will be asked to play key roles. The Cats have won 13 wins in their last 16 games. With practice only two and one half weeks old, several first year players have received praise from head coach Bob Clifford. The boys include Kim Gallipo of Rutland, Dave Shumate of St. Johnsbury, Bob Mitchell of Bridport, Bill Wolff of Stamford, Connecticut, Dan Martin of Ansonia, Connecticut, Dave Lucaroni of Dalton, Massachusetts, and Don Nelson of Dunellen, New Jersey. All but Shumate and Mitchell are linemen and that's where the Cats were hurt most last year by graduation. Laurel Husband is the only tackle letter winner who is returning this fall. Coach Clifford has converted both John Sullivan and Bill Dorozenski from guards to tackle in order to strengthen the team.

Dave Shumate joins the ranks of quarterbacks Scott Fitz and Bill Leete. He performed quite credibly in the Colby scrimmage last weekend, and is considered a bright start for the Cats. Shumate was voted the outstanding player in the Vermont-New Hampshire Shrine Game last year, and he is bound to be of valuable assistance.

Terry Lynn and Leo Pfeiffer are presently battling it out for the position of fullback, a job which Richie Reynolds held for three years. Joe Soldano and Dennis Blanck look good for former Cat Captain Ron Hertel's position. Harvey Bazarian and Billy Wolf are both vying for George Oelze's former position. Mike Burke will be Ken Andrade's replacement at halfback.

The Catamounts picked up Don Giles, a junior from Short Hills, New Jersey. This will be the first time Giles has been out for football at Vermont.

We have lost the services of John Gurrieri for the rest of the season as the result of a knee injury which he encountered in an early scrimmage. Vermont also lost Jim Krause when he broke his right thumb in a defense drill. He is expected to be lost for at least a month. Prior to his injury he had already won a slot on the first defensive unit and was also fighting for the second flanker spot on offense.

This year we will use the flop-over offense which is the same strategy as was employed last year. The team will be piloted by Scott Fitz with halfback Mike Burke and fullback Terry Lynn. However, when the Cats go on the defense, Clifford will replace them with Bill Van Bennekum and Don Nelson at the corners and Bill Dorozenski in the line. Of course Captain Rusty Brink and Harvey Bazarian will play in the number 1 line-backing spot.

According to Coach Clifford, the Yankee Conference has grown in strength and most everyone will give us trouble this year. However, our opponents have more respect for UVM than in previous years. Coach Clifford is also well aware that it will be very difficult for the team to equal the record of the last two years. What Clifford hopes will happen is that his young squad can learn by their mistakes and improve in stature as the season progresses. The team has gone through more pre-season contact than ever before in order to get the team into better shape.

Coach Bob Clifford graduated from Western State College in 1940 where he earned eight letters (three in football, two in golf and two in basketball.) He coached in high school for two years after graduation. After he got out of the navy, Clifford served as offensive line coach and head scout until 1953 when he switched to Williams for two years as assistant coach. In 1956 he coached for Colby and won two state crowns and tied for another. In 1962, he became head coach of UVM's Catamounts.

T.R.

Redmen Conference Choice

The University of Massachusetts will again win Yankee Conference football honors -- according to the sports information directors of the league.

The Conference directors were polled by George Hall, sports director of WABI AM-FM-TV.

Bangor, and Massachusetts received five first-place votes, the sixth going to the University of Maine.

Connecticut was tabbed for third, Vermont fourth, Rhode Island fifth and New Hampshire sixth.

Two bright stars for the Cats -- All Conference Center Rusty Brink and QB Scott Fitz.

UVM II OVERWHELM COLBY

By Bob Bloomenthal

The University of Vermont football squad had a chance to show the progress of its sophomores Saturday as the Cats romped to an easy 46-0 triumph over the undermanned Colby Mules.

Vermont had no trouble at all opening big holes in Colby's line and were able to score almost at will against the Mules. With the Cats scoring so freely, Coach Bob Clifford took a long look at the newcomers to his sophomore-laden team. Not much information, however, could be gained about the Cats' ability to face competition the likes of U. Mass, Maine, or Norwich as Colby simply does not have the horses that these teams have.

UVM got into the scoring column even before running their first play from scrimmage when halfback Dick Hebert, a junior, returned Colby's first punt 75 yards for a touchdown. Hebert also set up the second touchdown by snaring a Scott Fitz pass near the goal line. Terry Lynn lugged the ball in for the score from two yards out.

The sophomores got into the scoring action in the second period when Jim Culhane tallied from the two. The touchdown was set up by Soph quarterback Dave Shumate's long option run. Joe Soldano kicked the extra point to make the halftime score 19-0.

By the second half the harder-hitting Catamounts had completely demoralized their opposition from Maine and the flood gates broke open. Quarterback Scott Fitz opened the deluge by going 57 yards around end and got some beautiful blocking along the way.

Senior Mike Burke added to the touchdown spree by going 28 yards with a screen pass from Fitz. Another kick by Soldano made the score 32-0.

Junior quarterback Bill Leete got into the act with a two yard run and soph Paul Malone rounded out the scoring just before the close of the third period with a ten yard jaunt. Soldano converted on both TD's to make the final score 46-0.

One of the bright spots in the game was the overall performance of the teams no. 1 signal caller Fitz. Scott looked good gaining yardage both on the ground and through the air as he hopes to bounce back from his rather mediocre performance of last season. In all he completed eight out of nine passes and ended up the leading ground gainer for the day with 78 yards. Fullback Terry Lynn was second with 42 yards in eight attempts. Also looking good in the back field were senior halfback Ed Kiniry and sophomores Dave Shumate, Bob Mitchell, and Paul Malone. Dick Hebert, a back on both offense and defense also put in an outstanding performance. Coach Clifford was also pleasantly surprised with the work of sophomore open end Andy Schuyler.

The UVM line had little opposition from the Mules. Although Colby has 23 returning lettermen, the team won but only one game last year and the defense surrendered 238 points in the process. Thus the Cats do not miss the services of All New-England Capt. Rusty Brink and starting tackle John Sullivan. Brink will receive no contact until this Saturday's opener at A.I.C. and Sullivan and guard John Brisbois, along with fullback Leo Pfeiffer are still recovering from injuries.

Tomorrow Vermont opens the season at Springfield against the A.I.C. Aces. If the Cats can keep up their offensive prowess and tighten up their pass defense against the strong A.I.C. passing attack, UVM should be sporting a 1-0 record by Saturday night.

SOCCER TEAM LOOKS TO PROSPEROUS SEASON

The 1965-66 edition of the UVM soccer team has recently begun practicing at the varsity fields behind the Gutterson Field House. In its second year since organization, Coach Gregg has assembled a squad of vast depth, speed, maneuverability, and high scoring potential. Great strides have been made by Coach Gregg and his boys in an effort to capture championship crowns in both the Yankee Conference and New England Intercollegiate Soccer Leagues. As in the past, our toughest rivals seem likely to be the University of Conn. and the University of Mass. However, our state rivals, Norwich and St. Michael's, promise to provide many surprises as well as well as formidable opponents. With regard to the team itself, we are loaded with sophomore talent and rich with experienced veterans, having not lost a single player to graduation.

The team will be led by Bill Willey of Essex Junction, Vt. Bill was voted last year's MVP and will be returning at center fullback. At the outside left position, UVM's high scorer of the past season, Dennis Linnehan, will again be available. As far as the remaining positions go, this is how they stack up: At halfback John Metzgar and Brad Sumner will start, with Bob Schroeder and Peter Giroux expected to see a lot of action as the season progresses. The front line will be lead by Dennis Linnehan with Don Carleson playing inside right and Bill Burling at the outside right position. Possible breakthroughs as the season progresses will be Curt Tobey and Jeff Hyman. Peter Baldwin will replace Bobby Cronin at the inside left slot with Jeff Taft at center forward. At fullback, Bill Lansing, Ted Manning, Bill Woodward, and Tom Landmen will compete for a starting berth. Evidence of UVM's depth is exemplified by a close look at the position of goalie. Competing for this vital position are Tom Madison, John Rutledge, and Jerry Abbott.

In accordance with the material at hand, Coach Gregg expects to platoon quite a bit, while utilizing an aggressive, short, and passing type of offense. Hoping to improve over last year's three wins in seven decisions, Coach Gregg sees success dependant on his "young" stars of the future as well as defense. At present his only concern lies in defense. "If our defense can jell, we should improve on last year's performance."

A final look at the potential of this year's squad, shows sound basis for optimism. However, in actuality two motives were intended. The initial motive being to acquaint you with one of your up and coming teams on campus. While the second motive is that of team support. These athletes are giving their time and energy to represent you in the most favorable way possible. All that is asked in return is a little interest on your part. The team practices daily from 4-6 P.M. at Varsity field and will play its first home game of the new season Oct. 2nd vs. U Conn.

S A Elections Draw Near

Anyone interested in running for Student Association Senator must submit a petition with name, place of residence, and 25 signatures of members of his own residence hall to the S.A. office in the Billings Center by 4:15 P.M. on Monday, September 27.

The voting schedule is as follows: FRESHMAN MEN - September 30 between 7:00 and 11:00 P.M. in "counselor on duty" room in respective dormitories; M-A-T complex - 7:00-10:30 P.M. at main desk in Marsh; WOMEN'S DORMS - in an all-dorm meeting after curfew Thursday, September 30; OTHER RESIDENCES - will be informed individually as to electing or appointing their S.A. representatives.

Any questions concerning the S.A. elections may be directed to Bob Lampke at the S.A. office - extension 343 or at UN 3-9855.

Everyone interested in the progress of the school and student body is strongly urged to take part in the coming elections.

The Student Association of UVM (of which every full-time student is a member) will hold elections for new Senators on Thursday evening, September 30. S.A. Senate is the body through which student opinion can be most effective. It consists of one representative from each living unit on campus, and also representatives for students who either commute or live in the Burlington area. S.A. Senate operates with six standing committees - Finance, Activities, Club Evaluation, Elections, Orientation, and an executive committee, which consists of a representative from each committee, the S.A. officers and the S.A. advisor.

You may wonder what S.A. does. It is concerned with any issues which involve the student body, supervision of student organizations including budgets, freshman orientation, the freshman review, class officers, and more. Also, any new club on the campus must gain its recognition from the S.A. Senate.

Fraternities And Sororities Ready For Greek Week

By Buddy Mandell

Chariots are being hastily constructed. Sorority girls are busily trying to secure a nomination from the fraternity of their choice (or practically speaking, from any fraternity at all). There is a sudden rush on hands for house parties, as well as a rush to Redstone Campus by the many male students who do not already have dates. Above all the clamor (often in the late hours of the night) it is possible to hear hopefully harmonious singing, radiating from the various fraternity and sorority houses. And an outsider might ask "What is all this absurd confusion?" In the first place, it is not absurd, but rather different. And in the second place, it is not really confusion. It is merely preparation for GREEK WEEK in full swing.

GREEK QUEEN JUDGING AND EXCHANGE BANQUETS

Fraternities are now choosing candidates to represent their house in the Greek Week Queen competition. The only qualification for being nominated is that candidates must be presently members of sororities. Naturally with only seven sororities and sixteen fraternities, competition for candidates could get rough. The judging will be held on September 30 and the Queen will be crowned on Friday night, Oct. 1, at the Greek Sing.

In addition, each fraternity and sorority will prepare a dinner and after-dinner entertainment from 5:30-7:00 P.M. on Sept. 30. At these banquets each Greek organization will have about half of its membership, as well as representatives from every other Greek organization on campus. The purpose of these exchange dinners will be to improve fraternity-sorority relations.

GREEK SING

This year the Greek Sing has been reinstated and will be held on October 1 from 8-11 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Each fraternity and sorority will perform individually, doing either one song or a medley of songs. Trophies will be awarded to the three highest placing fraternities and to the two highest placing sororities. The winning songs will be heard on radio and possibly on television. This activity is designed to show that the Greek System provides for coordination and teamwork within the various houses, as well as within the system itself. The entire University community is invited to witness this remarkable exhibition (as well as the Opening Convocation and the Greek Games) for NO fee of admission.

NOTICE

Next week, beginning September 27, the Outing Club will man a booth in the lobby outside the Catamount Den. Students interested in pledging money to become charter members can contact the club there.

Outside Consultant May Solve Parking Problem

SUMMARY OF PARKING DECALS

Category	Issued	Available Parking Spaces
Faculty and Staff	1,148	710
Students (Residence Halls, Fraternities, Sororities)	449	1,132*
Students (Commuter)	626	1,064*
Visitors		41
10-minutes Parking		4
Totals	2,223	2,951

* Includes 944 as both for residents and commuters, making a net of 2007 parking spaces.

The above statistics were released to the CYNIC through the efforts of Dean Roland Patzer. It would seem from this information that the only group with a legitimate complaint would be the faculty which is lacking over three-hundred parking spaces. The student body, on the other hand, while according to Statistics have ample parking, argue that a major portion of these spaces is located at Patrick Gymnasium. When confronted with the situation at hand, President McCune has offered the following: "A special committee has drawn up a report on this subject (parking) and made some recommendations. They recommend that we engage an outside consultant who will do a thorough job for us and give us some long-range plans. This will be more effective than a constant stream of stop-gap measures. However, pending this long-range plan, it is recommended that certain lots be designated for certain categories of car owners. These categories are simplified into three: (a) faculty and staff, (b) Burlington and commuting students, and (c) students residing in dormitories and housing facilities."

In reference to the "long-range plans" letter have been sent to twenty-five contractors, ten of whom have favorably replied. Tentative plans hold for the barn behind Allen House to be removed and parking spaces added there, and also for more room to be made on the Main Street side of the Infirmary. Projected plans would provide approximately two-hundred and fifty additional spaces, all for students.

Hopefully, the proposed areas will be ready before the cold weather sets in.

GREEK GAMES AND HOUSE PARTIES

Probably the most exciting event of Greek Week will be held on October 2, from 1-5 p.m. at Redstone Campus. This reference is of course, to the Greek Games, which will highlight the week. The games will consist of: a sorority bicycle race; an interfraternity tug-of-war; an interfraternity chariot race; a co-ed three-legged race; and a co-ed pie-eating contest. The winners will be awarded trophies at the conclusion of the games.

On Saturday night, the activities of Greek Week will come to a dramatic climax at the Greek house parties. Although these parties will not be (in most cases) open to the entire University community, they will play an important part in demonstrating the importance of the Greek System on our campus. Some fraternities have chosen to have individual parties, whereas some houses have decided to have joint parties with one or two other houses, which demonstrates all the better the true spirit of Greek Week. This underlying drive can be summarized in one word - cooperation. Not only cooperation within the Greek System alone, but also the cooperation of the entire student body in making Greek Week a success.

Homecoming

Brings

"Spirit"

This year the Homecoming Committee has chosen as its theme "The Spirit of UVM" to portray all that has gone on in the past and present at UVM.

Homecoming will be big this year -- even bigger than our win over the University of Rhode Island. The highlight of the weekend will be the ball on Friday, October 8 at 8:30 p.m. Two orchestras will be featured along with a very popular recording group. The evening will be highlighted with the crowning of the King and Queen who are chosen by the student body on October 6 by popular vote.

Saturday features the Poster judging and then the big game at Centennial field. During halftime the King and Queen will be presented trophies. We expect the whole campus to form at 12:30 in front of Billings for a mammoth motorcade. Let's make a showing.

Miss America, 'tis of thee, stars, stripes, purple majesty, of thee we sing. "...there she is, our ideal!" Some observers, slightly less idealistic than starry-eyed, a little more objective than cynical, question, "How ideal is ideal?"

With Miss Vermont back on Redstone Campus, questions brought to mind in watching the pageant seem more real. The American principles of equality and fairness are implicit in these contests. Therefore, well-subsidized state winners who bloom fur-trimmed from finishing school, displaying a different jewel at every occasion, set no standards of judgment, do they?

Similarly, there is no correlation between the amount of time spent during the summer in costly rehearsal sessions with the musical director of the pageant and the degree to which this talent is acknowledged, is there?

The week in Atlantic City is characterized by royal treatment for the candidates. For the purpose of balanced publicity, two girls stay in each of the local hotels. After a week of cheering thousands and spectacular parades, not to mention the nightly pageant events, the Saturday program is not always a true climax. One can't guess the week's demanding schedule from the relaxed smiling faces. Rehearsing all day, competing into the night, each girl has been constantly in the spotlight. It seems only natural that the one who has come to the pageant, seeking an enriching experience, lasting friends and memories, will stand out from the many who are merely about to conclude the work toward fulfillment of superficial dreams. The former personality, will manifest herself as the ideal, but will she win? Every state winner is potentially Miss America, but is every Miss America necessarily ideal?

One point remains clear in our minds -- Lois Dodge, slender, smiling, green-eyed representative of the Green Mountain State qualifies on all standards. A native Vermonter (Grand-Isle), Lois is a 1962 graduate of Milton High. Her freshman year here at UVM was brightened by her reign over Homecoming weekend. Last year she served as president of Hamilton First. As a senior in Home Economics, Lois is an accomplished seamstress. In fact, the wardrobe which she created for the pageant augments her appealing image. Here is a girl who finds the true significance of her position, not in brief pageant glory, but in the "warmth and sincerity of the Vermonters themselves." Whether beaming at a governor's reception, singing at county fair, or judging in the "most beautiful gas station contest," she truly enjoys being Miss Vermont. It is for Vermont and its people that she went to Atlantic City "climbed mountains, followed rainbows," enjoyed a "truly enriching experience," and it is for them that she was and is ever the ideal.

Big Mama's Big Jug Band Among Hits At '65 Varieties

By Bonnie Murray

This year's committee for the production of Vermont Varieties certainly outdid itself, and it's too bad that the entire University community wasn't present last Friday night to witness the great store of talent introduced at Patrick, "Varieties" it was, even within the several groups of folk singers, and all the performers were enthusiastically received.

Leading off on the program of sixteen acts was charming Lois Dodge, aided (?) in her rendition of "Getting to Know You" by Charlie Catamount, who managed to upstage nearly everyone throughout the evening. Very little seems to throw our current Miss Vermont, however, and her performance made it quite clear why she holds the title.

Jeff Brown, a freshman from Long Island, followed with two Dylan hits, "Cocaine Blues" and "Don't Think Twice," accompanying himself quite ably on the guitar. He was followed by an accordionist from Proctorsville, Tom Pomer, who played the standard "Lady of Spain" with a few intricacies of his own.

The Job Mitchell Trio, comprised of Job himself, Tom Gibbs, and Cathy DeBoer, were most deserving of the resounding applause that followed them off-stage. These kids are an excellent combination, but Cathy, yet a senior in high school, steals the show with a voice uniquely suited for songs within the folk idiom. They sang "The Times They Are a-Changin'" and "Jesus Met the Woman at the Well," both recently recorded by Peter, Paul, and Mary.

Jim Pennell, a freshman from Bristol, Connecticut, accompanied himself on the piano, singing "I Wish You Love" and a medley of "It's a Good Day" and "It's a Most Unusual Day." Jim has a remarkably romantic voice and good stage presence, evidenced as he was victimized by our friend Charlie.

Then Brad Sumner took his place before the mike, and he had the audience right where he wanted them. This boy isn't just a singer; he's a performer, in a decidedly positive sense. After "Me and the Devil" and "Walkin' Round the Town," he was called back for an encore, and the audience still hated to see him go.

The portion of the show devoted to Kake Walk provided a change, and when the sound of "Cotton Bales" filled the gym and the spotlight hit on SAE's walkers, Steve Stearns and Mike Reardon, you could hear the shivers of excitement. The team was a beautiful sight to watch, even without their satins. The brothers of Phi Sigma Delta joined ranks to demonstrate the manner in which fraternities set pertinent and timely lyrics to popular tunes for use within their Kake Walk skits.

Another folk singer, Becky Brown from Cape Cod, entertained with a New Christy Minstrels standard, "Follow the Drinking Gourd" and "Under a Pale Moon," a song written by a friend. She accompanied herself on the guitar. She was followed by a most unusual act, a juggler named Steve Minor, who performed in a very professional manner and wound up nibbling at some apples while he was still juggling them!

Mike Woodard, familiar to most UVMers, was next with a couple of folk songs, one of which was "Scotch and Soda." Reminiscent of his performance in South Pacific -- very smooth and not very "folksy," Lois Dodge joined him for a duet on "Stewball."

Big Mama's Big Jug Band was introduced as "a self-explanatory group," and that's about it. They have a lot of fun, and consequently, so does everyone else. It's a wierd combination - three guitars, a set of jugs, a Jew's harp, a wax-papered comb, sand paper blocks, and a wash-tub bass - which, together with the hammed up voices of the lead singers, comes out altogether terrific. Who on earth is Big Mama?

Steve Stearns returned with Kern Stokes, a new partner, but this time they were armed with guitars, and the music was folk, "Chilly Winds" and "This Little Light of Mine," not to mention "Mary Had a Wristwatch!"

There finally appeared on the scene a dancer, so to speak - Andrea Baldwin, a freshman from Hinesburg, who sang and danced to "Ain't I Sweet?" A Charleston routine, complete with a costume of the roaring twenties era.

Another SAE, Tony Mastaler, followed with an instrumental number on the guitar, using a blues pick called the St. Louis pick. Tony's a master on the guitar, but the real show started when a freshman named Betty Smith joined him on stage. She cut loose on "The St. James Infirmary Blues," and the place exploded. This girl is not a folk singer; she's one of the finest talents in the blues field that any of us will probably ever hear. Her rendition of "The Very First Time" was heart-shattering, and here, the magic between Betty and Tony as musicians was thrilling. Those two will make their own breaks!

The Green Mountain Boys, Ed Malozzi and Pete Wolcott, closed out their program with several folk songs, including one of Ed's originals, "That's What I Like About Me." We missed not hearing "The Rover," but the boys turned in their usual excellent performance that UVM has come to expect of them. They'll be missed.

After the stage performance, most of the audience stayed to listen and dance to the music of The Sinners, a new band at UVM, under the direction of lead singer, Bob Price, and drummer, Gary Homer. The organ amp is too high, but it's as good a band as ever was heard in this area, and given a few weeks, will probably be in great demand. With a name like that, they could lose?

Flight Training Program

Each year, the United States Army makes participation in its Flight Training Program available to qualified and selected ROTC cadets at the colleges and universities where Army ROTC is a part of campus life. The University of Vermont ROTC is allocated 5 spaces in the program during the current academic year.

Award the distinctive single-wing badge, emblematic of participation, during the cadet drill today were the following students (all of whom are members of the Class of 1966): Amos J. Eaton, son of Mr. & Mrs. Robert Eaton, Calle Israel, Asuncian, Paraguay; Todd E. Fischer, son of Mr. & Mrs. Edward J. Fischer, 69 Pine Woods Drive, North Tonawanda, N.Y.; John R. Hughes, Jr., son of Mr. & Mrs. John R. Hughes, RD 1, Windmill Bay, Burlington, Vermont; Alan B. Levine, son of Dr. & Mrs. H. B. Levine, 231 Maple St., Burlington, Vt.; and Ronald E. Nettleton, son of Mr. & Mrs. Earl J. Nettleton, Connetquot Drive, Oakdale, N.Y.

The impact and importance of this program are most easily measured by examining the future activities of these young men who are about to embark upon the adventure of flight. During their senior year at UVM, they will receive a complete course in private flying by Vermont Aviation of Burlington, Vermont, which will include 35 hours of ground school, 22 hours of flying instruction with an instructor pilot, 14 hours of solo flying time (local and cross-country), and, finally, an FAA-awarded private pilot's license upon successfully passing the government-prescribed written and performance tests. Upon commissioning as Second Lieutenants at the time of Commencement next May, the officers will enter on active duty for three years, and may volunteer for intensive additional flight training as members of Army Aviation. As fully-qualified Army Aviators, these young men will receive higher pay than their non-flying contemporaries by an amount which varies between $100 and $245 a month, depending upon rank and time in service. Their future will be enriched by a sure knowledge that they will have joined the ranks of those adventurous and explorative Americans who have constantly pushed back the frontiers of flight during the last half-century.

EDITORIAL...

The University of Vermont has a new president, and as with all new presidents or leaders of any sort, everyone is watching him. We realize that the interim period is a time of adjustment and some confusion for a new president and, as such, is a bad time for us to make judgments. Nevertheless, the editors of The CYNIC have been watching Dr. McCune, too, and while it is too soon to offer any meaningful evaluation of the man in general, we feel that he has already made at least one outstanding innovation.

Specifically, Dr. McCune has elected to spend part of each Wednesday afternoon in Billings Center where he will meet students and exchange ideas. In adopting this "group therapy" approach, which should work to the mutual benefit of students and administration, we feel he will accomplish two important things.

First, this meeting of the minds should help to overcome the apparent breakdown in communications between the administration and the student body. Briefly, the problem as we see it has been that students always seem to receive information via the grape vine long before there is any official announcement. The result is that rumors run wild and at the same time the administration remains ignorant of student feeling toward the particular issue. A prime example is last Spring's decision on the new grading system. Perhaps the situation, as it has been, can best be illustrated as that of two opposing military strategists trying to anticipate activity in the enemy camp. We feel that in making the office of President, and thus the administration, directly accessible to student opinion, Dr. McCune has taken the first big step toward putting an end to this public relations guessing game we've been playing on matters of common interest.

The second change which is taking place involves the image of a university president. The president of the University of Vermont has always been, to most of us, an austere, somewhat vague figure, remaining totally aloof and detached from student affairs, and whose sole duty it is to secure funds and other financial backing for the university. President McCune is in the process of breathing life into this image. He has turned his attention temporarily inward from his other responsibilities to face the students who are, or should be, the essence of the university. In his convocation address, he made bitterly clear the multiplicity of problems and conflicting interests with which he must deal as president. To keep everyone happy would involve holding a variety of antithetical views simultaneously. This is of course impossible. All that we may realistically expect is that he perform his task with the difficult combination of objectivity and compassion.

However, we must extend to him this same understanding and compassion if we are to justify our own demands.

"Othello"

How subtle our Russian neighbors, if indeed the shoe-pounding Khrushchev and the screaming, breast-beating Othello who appeared last Tuesday in Votey Auditorium are indicative of Russian theatrics.

In the SCOPE presentation of the Russian production of Shakespeare's Othello, the acting was irreproachable, but the techniques were exceptional - fortunately. Perhaps it is necessary, however, to have Iago embrace his every male companion; that would depend, of course, upon one's opinion of Iago's basic psychology. He seems to have a definite problem.

Othello's problem seems far more complicated than even Shakespeare ever wrote. Was he really afflicted with the screaming mimis and St. Vitus' Dance? Or was he merely remembering his silent movie days when melodrama and rabid rages were fashionable?

The scenery and props were kept at a bare minimum. The play could not possibly have been successful without Desdemona's pleasure barge, waves raging under a clear blue sky, tossing ships on stormy seas, and fishnets drying by the marble columns in the shadow of the mountain by the glittering bay-side.

The photography was also incomparable. Bright blue skies at midnight, and angry seas on a calm and windless shore were completely in keeping with the mood of the movie, and had nothing whatsoever to do with the play that Shakespeare wrote.

One last comment: The lovely song "Willow" will never be the same again.

Student Law

By Marty Crane

The Student Law Association, which was formed in the middle of last semester, will officially begin this year's program with a meeting on Tuesday, September 28, 1965, at 7:30 P.M. in the Marsh Room of Billings Center. The meeting will consist of an introduction of the general purposes of the organization and an outline of the program for the coming year. In addition, there will be a guest speaker whose identity will be announced later.

The association was formed last year for those who are interested in the study of law and other related fields. An active program of films, lectures, discussions and possible mock trials has been set up for this year. Any interested individual is welcome to attend our first meeting on the twenty-eighth of this month.

Mixes & Matches

By Laurie Frank

Dear All,

Welcome back to UVM and "Mixes and Matches." I'm happy to hear that many of you had an active summer, and I hope it will continue into a very successful year both socially and academically. Even though there are no parental permission slips, let's start this year off right!

The boys of Acacia send best wishes to Charles C. Rubins '66, on his pinning to Susan Gibbons '67, of Alpha Delta Pi.

Heartiest congratulations to Alpha Epsilon Phi on Cheryl Eisert's '67, pinning to Dick Levy, Brown University; to Sandi Elstein's '66 engagement to Albert Feuerstein of Brooklyn, N.Y.; and to Ronie Senner's '67 engagement to Artie Chapman of Hillsdale, N.J.

Greek Week is almost here, so let's keep up the spirit of the fraternities and sororities on campus.

Athletic News

Athletic Director

J. EDWARD DONNELLY. Ed Donnelly has been athletic director at Vermont since 1952 and for the first 10 years doubled in duties, serving as head football coach. During his tenure, the intercollegiate athletic program has grown from nine to 12 sports while the physical plant has been expanded from an antiquated gym to a modern three-million dollar gymnasium-field house complex that now ranks among the most modern and complete facilities in the East.

Ed is a 1932 graduate of Chattanooga where he was a three-year monogram winner in football and basketball. He captained the latter as a senior.

Following graduation, Ed returned to his home state of Connecticut, coaching at the New Haven Boys Club. From 1936-46, he was athletic director and head football, basketball and baseball coach at Hamden (Conn.) High, winning several New Haven district titles in football and basketball. Ed also coached an undefeated hockey team.

Ed moved into the college ranks in 1947, joining the Boston University football staff. He came to Vermont in 1952.

He holds his Masters from Columbia where he also was an assistant football coach.

Each spring Ed heads for the golf course, coaching Vermont and getting in a few swings of his own. His son, John, a 1965 graduate, twice captained the team, took part in two NCAA meets, won the Yankee Conference and New England intercollegiate individual crowns in 1964, and has twice won the Vermont Amateur title. Ed's other son, Joe, is a member of the team. Ed is currently serving a six-year term as a member of the NCAA Golf Committee.

Athletic Council

The Athletic Council acts in an advisory capacity to the President and Trustees of the University in matters affecting intercollegiate athletics. The Council consists of four alumni members, four faculty members, four undergraduates, and the athletic director (ex-officio).

Members of the Council for 1965-66 are:

Alumni	Faculty
Dr. Raymond Collins	Hubert Vogelmann, chairman
Norman Myers	Dr. J. Bishop McGill
Robert Peterson	Milton Madworny
D. Dennis Rice	James Root
Student

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director of Placement, UVM

For the forth year now, your Editor and Staff of the CYNIC have been kind enough to allow me to talk with you through this column on various subject relative to your career and vocational plans. It is my personal feeling that today's college student is sadly lacking in career and vocational information. At best this is an attempt to try and catch you up on trends and the changing times. Part of the column will be devoted to job and graduate school announcements that will have particular significance to you as Graduate College students, Seniors, and Juniors. On behalf of the Placement Service Staff, I extend every good wish for the coming year and hope that you will come in to visit with us.

PLACEMENT OFFICE TECHNICAL INTERVIEWS. Candidates for BS/MS/PhD in Technology will be interviewed by employers from November 1 through December 10, 1965. Candidates must be registered with the Placement Office in order to take part in the On-Campus Interview Program. The deadline for filing papers is 5:00 PM, Friday October 15, 1965. Detailed instructions on signing-up for campus interviews, together with a complete schedule listing the employer, date of visit, openings and primary academic areas of interest will either be available in the Placement Office or mailed to your campus address. Come in and pick up your registration material now.

PLACEMENT OFFICE NON-TECHNICAL INTERVIEWS. on campus employment interviews for all majors, excluding Technology, will occur in the Placement Office from February 1, 1966 through April. Candidates must be registered with the Placement Program. The deadline date for filing papers is 5:00 P.M., Friday, December 10, 1965. A complete schedule together with sign-up instructions will be mailed in January to your campus address. Group meetings by Colleges will be scheduled in early October, to explain registration procedures. However, you may come into the Office and pick up your material now. Teacher candidates should contact Mrs. Margaret Muller. Every senior and Graduate College man and woman is urged to leave on file a set of Placement Credentials for future employment use. Students who only wish to file credentials and not take part in the Campus Interview Program may register at any time prior to their final leave-taking on the campus.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF ALL MATHEMATICS MAJORS WHO WILL RECEIVE A DEGREE FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT IN 1966 WILL BE HELD FROM 4:10 TO 5:00 P.M. ON FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th IN ROOM 301, VOTLEY BUILDING.

NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY ANNOUNCES THE 1965 PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATION TEST FOR LIBERAL ARTS MAJORS. The Test Bulletin and Application Form may be obtained from the Placement Office. Deadline for test registration is November 26, 1965. No liberal arts senior will be interviewed and considered for fulltime employment without having taken and passed this test. Come in today and take a crack at it. The opportunities are excellent.

Religious Groups Sponsor Lectures

Four campus religious groups began a series of lectures and forums by bringing Dr. John O'Keefe, the Assistant Director of the theoretical laboratory at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center, Maryland, for a lecture last Thursday, September 16.

Before a large crowd in Billings North Lounge, Dr. O'Keefe, who has a Ph.D. in Astronomy from the University of Chicago and an A.B. from Harvard, spoke on the "Creation of the Universe." This topic was chosen to lead off because of the conflict between science and religion often seen in this area, and because of a duty to demonstrate the relevance of religion to contemporary problems.

The organization of the talk was essentially historical. Theories on the universe seem to divide into those of an ageless universe, infinite in space and time, and a dying universe with one and only one beginning. Lamaitre's "egg" theory seems experimentally better supported at this time. It holds that once, in the distant past, the present universe was compressed into a very dense, relatively small, perhaps egg-shaped mass of matter and energy. At and before that time, for as long as time existed, entropy was at a minimum. Astronomically speaking, the universe suddenly began to expand and entropy to increase. This trend will continue until maximum entropy is reached; all things will then be at the same temperature -- very close to absolute zero -- so that there will be no way to do work.

O'Keefe described the Russians' emotional reaction to such theories, which their scientists may not officially consider because they do not fit into the dialectical materialism basic to the universe. Hoyle's continuous creation theory comes closer to the demand for regeneration of star systems. He postulated that one hydrogen atom is created in every quart of space every billion years. This hydrogen accumulates in the space between galaxies until it condenses to form galaxies, which condense to form stars, which condense and develop into the range of elements. Thus matter-energy would be created, and the universality of the First Law of Thermodynamics would be violated. Recent gamma ray experiments failed to support Hoyle's calculations.

Tracing of light and radio waves, studies of quasi-stellar objects and of the relative abundance of elements in celestial bodies, and other present research, will probably bring forth resolving facts within some of our lifetimes, according to Dr. O'Keefe. Some of us may help to discover the origin of the universe!

The same four groups (Newman, Hillel, Episcopal Center, and Protestant Association) will present a forum on "Viet Nam and the U.S.A." UVM will be represented on the panel by Col. Leonard G. Robinson of the Military Science Dept., and Prof. Harold Schultz of the History Dept. Participating also will be Mr. A.D. Sophrin of Burlington, and Prof. Henry Fairbanks, head of the St. Michael's College Humanities Dept.

The discussion will be Thursday, Sept. 30, at 7:30 p.m. in Billings Marsh Room.

Test Dates Set For Ed. Majors

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service.

New dates set for the testing of prospective teachers are: December 11, 1965; and March 19, July 16, and October 8, 1966. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States, ETS said.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations.

Lists of school systems which use the examination results are distributed to colleges by ETS, a nonprofit, educational organization which prepares and administers the examinations.

On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations, which measure the professional and general preparation of teachers, and one of 13 Teaching Area Examinations (formerly called Optional Examinations) which measure mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, or their colleges, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken.

A Bulletin of Information containing a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a registration form, may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

SCOPE VIEWS VIET NAM

Last Monday, Sept. 15, UVM heard the official Washington view of the Viet Nam situation as a result of Johnson's Governor's briefing this summer. Gov. Hoff was one who accepted the offer of a briefing team to inform state officials.

SCOPE sponsored the team's appearance in Billings North Lounge. A student turnout of 250 overflowed the seating capacity.

The three men spoke ten minutes each, after which a limited number of audience questions were accepted. George Roberts, a Foreign Service Officer now serving as one of six advisors at Washington's Viet Nam desk, was first to speak. He has worked in our Thai and Laotian embassies previous to his present position. Roberts stated that basically we are assisting South Viet Nam in defending against aggression from North Viet Nam, with no colonial or imperialistic aims but with the military, economic, and political values of a South East Asia accessible to the United States in mind. Furthermore, we must preserve the "credibility of our commitments" through the worldwide alliance system. We cannot, he said, let Communism think the Western world is a "pushover," as it was for Hitler and Mussolini. In other words, we must convince the Communist nations that the international Communist movement will fail through aggression.

The director of the Office of Viet Nam Affairs in the government's Association for International Development program, William Mazzucco, discussed the socio-economic problems as they contribute to insurgency. Any complete modernization of economy intensifies certain inequities and provides opportunities for the "well-schooled Communist apparatus" to reap all the profits of progress. Mr. Mazzucco said schools and health and agricultural centers are being established to ease the growing pains.

The military view came from Lt. Col. Kurtz Miller, an Army man who is top military advisor to the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs. Mr. Miller, who served two years in Viet Nam, stated that although the military objective is itself secondary, military security must precede democratic progress. The United States' increased commitment is defeating the much feared monsoon assault and strengthening the government.

In closing, Miller asserted that United States and Vietnamese military have been cooperating successfully, with neither taking command, and further, that sentiment in the countryside is more and more favorable to the government.

In answering what questions were permitted by time, the legality of the United States position was vehemently defended. The legal status of the Geneva Agreements, often quoted on free elections and unification, is unknown, since they are unsigned. North Vietnam's present Minister of Defense was quoted, presumably to prove that "they" are fighting dirtier than we are; to support the conviction of a bright future, the men cited upon provincial elections held in parts of South Viet Nam last May. The team was comfortably sure that "we will win" and that everything will turn out for our best interests.

SURVEY REPORTS CAMPUS CHEATING

The amount of academic dishonesty in American colleges and universities is "grossly underestimated" by students, student body presidents, and deans, according to a nationwide survey of more than 600 deans and about 6,000 students in 99 institutions across the country.

The survey also found these things:

Only a small proportion of those who cheat are caught and punished.

The causes of college cheating can be traced partially to the students' high school experiences.

Colleges that permit the students to deal with academic dishonesty are less apt to have a high level of cheating than those with other forms of control.

Certain elements that determine the quality of the college -- a small student body or a low faculty-student ratio -- are associated with low levels of cheating.

Survey Released Yesterday

The survey, which was released yesterday, was conducted by William J. Bowers of Columbia University's Bureau of Applied Social Research. Its conclusions are based on two samples.

The first, taken in the spring of 1962, includes answers by 626 college deans and 502 student-body presidents to a 61-item questionnaire. This group represented 838 colleges and universities.

The second sample was taken a year later. It is based on answers by 5,422 students in 99 institutions to a 72-item questionnaire.

The United States Air Force Academy, where at least 29 cadets have become involved in a cheating scandal, was not among the schools in the survey. Nor was the United States Military Academy, where 90 cadets were involved in a similar incident in 1951.

The types of academic dishonesty about which the students were questioned included getting answers or questions from others who had already taken the examination, copying from another student or from "crib notes" during test, taking a test for another student, and plagiarizing from published material or from other students' work.

At least half the students in the sample had engaged in some form of academic dishonesty during their college careers. This was three times the estimate of the deans, two and a half times as many as the student-body presidents had guessed, and twice as many as the students' estimates.

Campus authorities replied that only a small portion of those who cheat, even according to their conservative estimates, are caught. Those who are receive relatively lenient punishments.

"Seldom are students suspended or dismissed for violating norms of academic integrity, despite the fact that authorities consider this a serious disciplinary problem," the report declared.

The report also found that students believe, in varying degrees, that cheating "is wrong on moral grounds, not simply because it may have unfortunate practical consequences for the offender."

However, the report found a number of pressures on the student that might make him deviate from his beliefs. These stemmed from the background and environment of both the individual student and his college.

Fellowships

October 1 is the deadline for applications for Faculty Summer Research Fellowships for 1966, available to faculty members for non-thesis research in the humanities, social sciences, and related fields.

Up to eight fellowships of $1500 each are available, according to Professor Samuel N. Bogorad, chairman of the Subcommittee for Faculty Summer Research Fellowships of the Institutional Grants Committee headed by Dr. William H. Macmillan, dean of the Graduate College.

Additional information may be obtained from the Graduate College office, Room 107 Waterman Building.

Applications will be evaluated by the Subcommittee, and recommendations made to President McCune in November.

Cadets Excel

The competition between companies of ROTC cadets for the top camp rating at their six-week summer camp at Fort Devens, Massachusetts is intense every summer. In recognition of individual contribution toward a team goal, a special ribbon is awarded annually to each cadet member of the winning company. This year, seven University of Vermont seniors were assigned to Cadet Company A, the top unit of ten identically organized companies at the 1965 ROTC Summer Camp.

Second Lieutenant Richard P. Reynolds, West New York, New Jersey; and Michael A. Thomas, Troy, New York, received their awards earlier as a result of having completed the ROTC advanced course on campus.

Two University of Vermont Instructor Group members were assigned to the top company: Sergeant Major James W. Brady was the company first sergeant and Sergeant First Class Thomas Ovitt was a platoon sergeant. Sergeant Major Brady commented that the competition was the toughest that he had seen in three summer camps. He attributes the success of his company solely to the tremendous spirit of his cadets, together with unstinting contribution to the team effort.

MS Instructors

Five ROTC graduates, including two University of Vermont alumni, have been assigned to UVM's Military Science Department during the summer months. Major Michael Peck, UVM '51, is presently enroute from Korea. From their branch advanced officer courses came Captain Alton Sparks, Maine '57; Captain Howard Fraser, UVM '60; Captain Philip Medenbach, Johns Hopkins '60; and Captain Jack D. Rives, Virginia Polytechnic Institute '61. Captain Fraser is a Vietnam veteran; each of the three other captains has served a tour of duty in Europe.

Of the ten officers in the Military Science Department, four now hold degrees from the University. In addition to the two alumni noted above, Major Francis Mahoney holds a master's degree and Major Arthur Finehout holds a bachelor's degree.

Department of the Army deliberately pursues a policy of returning ROTC graduates to their alma maters in order that some alumni representation be continuously present at each participating university.

The So-So Cat Book Is On Display At Fleming

Do you crave cultural enrichment? Next between-class break, go past Billings Center to the Fleming Museum. On exhibit are a series of woodcuts by Clement Hurd. They are the illustrations for an important new literary work entitled The So-So Cat Book, a must for the reader with a taste for eastern art and the occult. Clement Hurd, a distinguished looking, white-haired gentleman, visited the Fleming Museum on September 17. He stated that The So-So Cat Book is the thirty-fifth book on which he and his wife, who wrote the book, have collaborated. Mr. Hurd will again be in Fleming for a reception Thursday at 8:30.

The process used in preparing the prints for The So-So Cat Book will be described step by step in the display. The original prints used will illustrate the steps. Additional prints Mr. Hurd has done will also be part of the exhibit. These prints, as well as those used in The So-So Cat Book, show a strong eastern influence. In a typical print, a small ghostly swan is rising out of a misty, blue background. The oriental quality is heightened by the fact that Clement Hurd's signature is calligraphic, in the traditional eastern manner. Mr. Hurd explained that he had had the stamp made in Tokyo, where anyone who has the money can get one.

The reporter admired a print of an orange house on an orange hill by an orange sea, which Mr.

Hurd said was formerly his home in California and is now the site of a housing development (presumably orange). Clement Hurd and his wife now live on a back road, approximately twenty miles south of Burlington, in a house of indeterminate color. The abundant Vermont wildlife is portrayed in many of the woodcuts, prints of which can be bought for fifteen dollars and up. Those students not sufficiently solvent to buy a woodcut can buy a copy of The So-So Cat Book, at the Waterman Campus Store, and thus have many more prints at a considerably lower price.

Deadline Set For Fulbright Grants

The Institute of International Education reports that the competition for U.S. Government grants for graduate study or research abroad in 1966-67, or for study and professional training in the creative and performing arts under the Fulbright-Hays Act will close shortly.

Application forms and information for students currently enrolled in the University of Vermont may be obtained from the campus Fulbright Program Adviser, Dean Macmillan. The deadline for filing applications through the Fulbright Program Adviser on this campus is Oct. 15.

He conducts competitions for the U.S. Government scholarships offered under the Fulbright-Hays Act as part of the educational and cultural exchange program of the Department of State. This program, which is intended to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries, provides more than 900 grants for study in 54 countries. Applicants must be U.S. citizens who will hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the beginning date of the grant, and who have language proficiency sufficient to carry out the proposed projects. Exceptions are made in the case of creative and performing artists who need not have a bachelor's degree but must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience. Social workers, on the other hand, must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree, and applicants in the field of medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Three types of grant are available: (1) Full awards, which provide tuition, maintenance, round-trip transportation, health and accident insurance, and an incidental allowance. Participating countries are Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Luxembourg, Bolivia, Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, China (Republic of), Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany (Federal Republic of), Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Mexico, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

(2) Joint U.S.-Other Government grants, which combine tuition and maintenance from a foreign government, plus travel costs from the U.S. government. These grants are available in Poland, Rumania and Yugoslavia.

(3) Travel-Only grants, which supplement maintenance and tuition scholarships granted to American students by universities, private donors and foreign governments. Participating countries are Austria, Brazil, Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, and Sweden.

Capable of speeds better than 2,000 mph, the YF-12A is the hottest aircraft around.

Now Maj. Walter F. Daniel, test pilot for the YF-12A, answers your questions about the world's fastest manned airplane and America's Aerospace Team.

(Maj. Daniel, a test pilot since 1954, is a member of the Society of Experimental Test Pilots. He received a B.S. degree in Aeronautical Engineering from the University of Oklahoma. In February 1962, he set world class time-to-climb records in a T-38 jet trainer.)

Is the YF-12A the world's fastest manned aircraft? It certainly is. On May 1 of this year the YF-12A (formerly known as the A-11) reclaimed the world absolute speed record from the USSR. It was clocked at 2,062 mph over Edwards Air Force Base.

How big is the YF-12A?

The exact dimensions of the YF-12A have not been released yet. But it's approximately 100 feet long, with about a 50-foot wingspan. That's half again as big as our present interceptors!

Is the Air Force training many men as pilots these days?

Yes, very definitely. In spite of all you hear about unmanned vehicles, the human pilot is still very much in the picture. As a matter of fact, the Air Force pilot quota is on the increase.

What other kinds of jobs does the Air Force offer? Since it's one of the world's foremost technological organizations, the Air Force has plenty of openings for scientists and engineers. There are also many challenging and varied administrative-managerial positions.

What do I have to do to become an Air Force officer?

Air Force ROTC is the best way to get started as an Air Force officer. The new two-year Air Force ROTC program makes this method available to men who have already completed a year or two of their college education. For college graduates, if you did not take advantage of ROTC, you can still get started through Air Force Officer Training School (OTS), a three-month course open to both men and women.

Can I keep up my studies while I'm in the Air Force?

The Air Force encourages its men and women to continue their educations. For instance, you may qualify to study for a graduate degree during off-duty hours, with the Air Force paying a substantial part of the tuition.

What kind of future do I have in the Air Force? A bright one. As we move further into the Aerospace Age, the Air Force is going to grow even more important. And you can grow with it!

ENDS — Bob Meers, Mass., and Dan Dean, R. I.

TACKLES — Bob Burke, Mass., and Joe Buesing, R. I.

GUARDS — Pete Pietz, Mass., and Rod Durgin, Me.

CENTER — Charles Scialdone, Mass.

QUARTERBACK — Dick DeVarney, Me.

HALFBACKS — Bob Ellis, Mass., and Tony Campano, Norwich.

FULLBACK — Mike Ross, Mass.

BEST BACK — Dick DeVarney, Me.

BEST LINEMAN — Bob Burke, Mass.

BEST TEAM — Massachusetts.

ROBERT E. CLIFFORD, Head Coach. After a 6-2 record in 1963, fans were wondering what Bob could do for an encore in '64. The answer? A 7-1 mark, best ever for a Vermont eleven. So what happens in '65? That remains to be seen, but it's pretty hard to improve a near-perfect product, especially with 16 members of the first two units having departed.

Bob Clifford has seen the game of football as a player, as a scout, as a coach, and as a fan, and these views are reflected in his teams. A player and a coach both know that football demands exacting discipline and superb condition to win, while a fan's chief concern is interesting and exciting football. Clifford-coached teams combine all these phases. A graduate of Western State (Col.) College in 1940, Bob earned eight letters (three in football, two each in golf and basketball) and captained his team as a junior and senior while being named All Rocky Mountain Conference and to some All America teams as a center.

Bob coached in high school for two years after graduation then entered the Navy, serving as a PT Boat Commander in the Pacific. After the war, he went to Northwestern, serving as offensive line coach and head scout until 1953, when he moved to Williams, serving two years as assistant coach. In 1956 he became head coach at Colby, and in six years won two Maine state crowns and tied for another. At one time, his Mules had the longest unbeaten string in New England. He became head man of the Catamounts in 1962 and in the years here compiled a 16-8 record. Over-all, his nine-year log as a head coach is 39-27-0.

An avid golfer (five handicap), Bob enjoys "puttering around the house and gardening." He and his wife, Virginia, have three sons, Buzz (Robert Jr.) in the Naval Officer's Candidate School in Newport, Peter, a freshman at Vermont, and "Spike," 13.

QUOTING THE COACH ON '65

Line — "Untested and inexperienced, with only two members of last fall's starting unit back, Capt. Rust Brink and end Jack Schweberger."

Backfield — "Where did everybody go? With the exception of senior Scott Fitz and junior Bill Leete at quarterback, we are sorely without experience."

Over-All — "The young men from our third unit last year and our sophomores are going to have to mature quickly if we are to play winning football. We can't substitute or platoon full elevens but the rules change will help us, and we'll use it."

... The Staff

JOHN COONS, Assistant Coach. An All New England guard as an undergraduate at Springfield, John is now at the other end of the spectrum — molding All New England players and last year two of his linemen — Rusty Brink and George Oelze — earned such honors. John is a 1950 graduate of Springfield where he was a starter for four seasons, captaining the Maroon as a senior. He also holds his M.S. degree from Springfield, John served at RPI, Colby and at his alma mater before coming to Vermont in 1962. From 1960-62, he was athletic director and football-hockey coach at East Longmeadow (Mass.) High.

John became head coach at RPI in 1954 when Nick Skorich resigned to go with the Pittsburgh Steelers. John and his wife have two daughters.

LESS LEGGETT, End Coach. The "Dr." (Ph.D. variety) of the Vermont staff, Les enjoyed a banner season in 1964-65. The football team was 7-1 and Les' swim team, only in its second campaign, chalked up a 7-2 mark, most successful of the six winter athletic teams. Les is a 1951 graduate of Maine where he earned three letters as a Black Bear. Oddly enough, he was injured as a senior in a game on Centennial Field and sidelined for the rest of the year.

Les' coaching experience includes stints as both a high school and college coach, the latter at Whitman, Portland (Ore.) State, and Adrian (Mich.) before coming to Vermont in 1962. The Leggett family includes three sons and a daughter.

DEXTER MORSE, Backfield Coach. The youngest and newest member of the varsity coaching staff, Dexter is enrolled in the Graduate College where he is a candidate for the Master of School Administration. He is a 1962 graduate of Bowdoin where he earned five letters, two each in football and baseball and one in golf. A quarterback, he earned honorable mention on the ECAC All East team in 1961. Dexter played defensive halfback for the Portland Seahawks of the Atlantic Coast League in 1962-63 and was captain of the defensive unit.

Dexter has served as assistant football coach at Thornton Academy and was head coach at Skowhegan High. He is married.

Catalina Club Holds Tryouts

The time and opportunity is here for all UVM women to display their talent in synchronized swimming! Wednesday evening, Sept. 29, at 7:00 p.m., the Catalina Club will hold the annual tryouts at the pool in Patrick Gym. This year, however, there has been an addition made to the usual format of the evening.

The members of the Catalina Club will put on a demonstration of synchronized swimming, preceding the actual tryouts. The purpose of this demonstration is to show what can be accomplished in the field of synchronized swimming through practice and an understanding of the necessary basic skills.

The Catalina Club meets every Wednesday evening from 6:30 to 8:30 at the pool in Patrick Gym. (We're in the Date Book this year!) Under the supervision of Miss Farrell, the club members practice the skills of synchronized swimming, write routines, and present shows throughout the year. This year the Catalina Club will again put on a demonstration for the Vermont Educational Association on October 22. Plans are also beginning to take shape for a show to be presented in February. These shows are enjoyed by all who attend and are a wonderful experience for the members of the club.

All of you UVM women who have a true interest in synchronized swimming — not necessarily a mastery of the skills involved — come to the tryouts and demonstration this Wednesday evening. A vital part of the Catalina Club is the increased knowledge and progress of its members. The Club is looking forward to increasing its membership this Wednesday.

And remember, the Catalina Club can be the fun way of keeping in shape, or making new friends, and of increasing your knowledge of a very rewarding sport — synchronized swimming. See you Wednesday at Patrick Gym!

CATS TROUNCE A.I.C. ACES 42-19

Look To W.P.I. Saturday

As the gun sounded at approximately 4:30 last Saturday in Springfield, Mass. the scoreboard acknowledged a 42-19 victory by the Cats over the Aces of American International College. Aside from the fact that UVM broke an opening game scoring record which they set back in 1902 when they defeated Montpelier Seminary by a score of 52-0, there was a great deal more significance to this game than might meet the viewer's eye.

Let's go back to a certain August afternoon and delve into the life of a UVM football player. This player might be the star of the team or a third string lineman, but in any case the routine was the same. Up at dawn for breakfast, out at drills during the hot afternoon, and to sleep at 10:30. These boys, with the able assistance of an excellent coaching staff, were preparing themselves for the season's opener in September. As the days progressed, a squad highlighted with tremendous sophomore talent fought for the top positions with an air of enthusiasm which is often lacking on a more seasoned club. Finally, as opening day drew near, all the drills and scrimmages which had previously seemed disjointed began to mesh into a powerful football machine. Les Legett and John Koone brought out the desire to win and the ingredients of success in their boys, while coach Clifford established the proper mental attitude and at the same time coordinated the various aspects of his "Flip-Flop" offense and defense. A great deal of responsibility was meted out to Cat's captain Rusty Brink, as he had to maintain team spirit as well as enforcing the team's strict training rules.

Last Saturday the fruition of the entire team's effort came to a head. After arriving in Springfield on Friday, Coach Clifford went over a few final details for the following day's game. The boys don't take these pointers lightly because they can often mean the difference between victory and defeat. The outcome of this game can be chalked up as just another statistic - another Vermont win - but as we have seen it goes much deeper. Success is a thing called guts, courage and most of all, desire. For those of you who did not listen to Saturday's game, the game ball was awarded to Jim Krause - a boy who didn't even play. Jim badly fractured his thumb in a pre-season drill, and therefore the starting role which he had earned as offensive halfback was filled by another. But the club didn't forget all the hard work he did to earn that position.

Netmen Prep For ECAC

By Alan Rice
The UVM tennis team began practicing last week for their fall schedule.

October 8-10 the Cats' racket men will travel to Rider College to defend their ECAC championship. Last year Vermont won the tournament by the biggest margin ever. Unfortunately, due to graduation, the Cats have lost three of their four top men. The only returnee of the big four is Captain Paul Ryan. The team's outlook, however, is not as dismal as one might think. Prospects for a fine season are quite good, because, along with Ryan, there are three other returning lettermen. These include Richie Sachs, Dutch Curtis, and Al Secunda, plus newcomers Don Miller and Hal Newell.

In the final analysis, the success of the team will hinge on two men returning to school after a one year absence. One is "Laddie" Cook, who won his varsity letter two years ago, and should be one of the top three men on the squad. The other is Don Hensa, who is considered to be one of the top tennis players in the East. One more man will be needed to fill the squad competing in the ECAC. Richard Sachs, who would seem the most likely candidate, is bothered by injuries. With one more man to play beside Henson, Cook and Ryan, Vermont could once again capture the ECAC championship.

After leading Vermont to its first Yankee Conference championships, Dr. Marston was forced to give up his coaching duties last year due to illness. Replacing him is Michael Humphreys, a teacher at the Overlake School. Humphreys taught and coached tennis at the Belmont Hill School for many years. He has coached tennis in the Burlington area for the past 6 summers, and has been teaching at the Overlake School since 1963. The CYNIC welcomes Coach Humphreys and hopes he can help lead Vermont to another great tennis season.

By Bob Bloomenthal
Coach Bob Clifford was breathing a lot easier this week after his charges came home with a smashing 42-19 victory over AIC in Springfield, Mass. No one had dared to predict how greatly UVM's losses through last June's graduation would hurt this year's team, but the sophomores jelled and the big win was the result.

The 42 points scored by the Catamounts is the highest opening game total rolled up by a Vermont team since 1902. A stellar performance by veteran quarterback Scott Fitz was a key factor in the game as he got the Cats rolling with seven pass completions in 15 attempts besides scoring two touchdowns himself.

UVM spotted AIC an early touchdown before the offense started to roll. The Aces scored a free play after Ed Kiniry fumbled the opening kickoff. The Cats bounced back, however by recovering an AIC fumble on the AIC seven yard line. Mike Burke promptly scored on the first play and Joe Soldano's kick made it 7-7. Soldano booted the conversion after each Catamount touchdown for a perfect day.

Vermont struck again to grab the lead later in the first period when Bill Leete found Flanker Dick Hebert from 26 yards out, and Hebert carried it in for the touchdown. In the second period Scott Fitz sandwiched one yard touchdown runs in between an AIC tally to make the halftime score, UVM 27 - AIC 13.

The Cats stretched their lead in the third period when Fitz mixed his calls beautifully to carry Vermont from their own 42 to the AIC five before fullback Terry Lynn delivered the goods into paydirt.

Hebert rounded out the scoring by taking a 25-yard scoring pass from sophomore quarterback Dave Shumate. Other sophomores earning the praises of Coach Clifford for their performances in the game were Andy Schuyler who averaged 42.5 yards on punts, and Billy Wolff for his fine defensive play. Other standouts on defense were John Sullivan and Rusty Brink, although Rusty saw only limited action.

This Saturday the Cats will open at home and will be heavily favored against a WPI squad from Worcester. See the scouting report on Worcester Tech for a more detailed description of their prospects against Vermont.

SCOUTING REPORT ON WPI

Last Season's Record: Won 2
Lost 6

Lettermen returning: 14
Type of offense: Split-end; averaged 22 passes per game last season, expected to pass more this year.

Players to Watch: Quarterback Jack Kozick, started last year as a freshman.

Halfback George Flynn, last season's leading ground-gatherer with 213 yards. End Frank Magiera, started last year before breaking his leg.

Tackle Bob Sinuc, co-captain, 5-10, 210 lbs.

Prospects: The Engineers are not given much of a chance to improve on last year's record since freshmen are no longer eligible to play for the varsity. Thus WPI has no replacements for the 12 lettermen lost through graduation.

This season's Record: 0 Won 1
Lost (40-8 to Bowdoin)

Lapointe 9 Begin Workouts

By Gordon Josephson

The Catamount 9, Co-Yankee Conference champions, have begun their fall workout under the guidance of the veteran coach Ralph Lapointe. For the first time the Cats will play an informal fall schedule. Fall baseball has, as in the past, acted as an excellent guidepost for Mr. Lapointe in his eventual selection of the spring squad. This year's brief schedule will afford Coach Lapointe an even greater opportunity to view his young prospects and seasoned veterans.

Inexperience is the keynote to this year's ball club. Only two seniors have returned from last year's team which saw nine men lost at graduation. The team lacks real depth, and virtually every position is up for grabs. The outlook for a top season will depend on the performances turned in by the sophomores and juniors.

Although the Cats lost seven top pitchers at graduation, the squad has three returning lettermen, all of whom did excellent jobs last year. They include juniors Len Chefflott, John McCord and Bruce Bovenizer, all of whom are starters. Rounding out the mound staff are Sophomores Don Schneider, Ron Gondek, Peter Kleinhnecht and senior Mike Shea.

INFIELD

The Cats will feel the loss of power hitting and two time all Yankee Conference 1st basemen John Tartera. Trying to fill this spot, Mr. Lapointe has been looking at sophomores Dave Kronin and John Packard. Competing for second are sophomores Bruce Lombard and Art DeLucia. Filling the hole between 2nd and 3rd, a position which gave the Cats a great deal of trouble last year, are sophomore Bobby Kronin and junior Dave Wayne. At the hot corner are junior John (Buncy) Morris and senior Jim McKinnon.

OUTFIELD

The outfield will feel the loss of All-Yankee Conference Pete McDonald and two-time All-Yankee Conference Utility man Charlie Foster. Candidates for these three positions include sophomores Dave Holton, Garry Rice, Dean Bartholomew and Dave Wells.

Although this year looks like a real building year, the club's outlook is good.

Homecoming Features Tymes And Chiffons

Homecoming, an event enjoyed by alumni, undergraduates, and faculty, is Oct. 8 and 9. The theme this year will be "The Spirit of UVM." Starting the weekend of Friday night from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. will be the Homecoming Ball at the Patrick Gym. Featured at the Ball will be Parkway Records recording stars, the Tymes, and GAC recording stars, the Chiffons. Backing the two singing groups will be Bob Clark and his band; and, for your dancing enjoyment, Burt Orr's Orchestra will play.

Reigning over the festivities will be the Homecoming King and Queen and their Court, all members of the freshman class. They will be introduced and crowned at the Ball. Voting for the royalty will take place in lower Billings on Wednesday, Oct. 6.

Saturday is to start with the judging of fraternity and sorority posters, beginning at 9 a.m. A great deal of effort and energy has been expended on making posters and they should be worth the time to see them. At 12:15 a motorcade from Billings to Centennial Field, led by the King, Queen and Court, Charlie Catamount, the UVM Band, and the Pep Committee, will initiate the pre-game ceremonies. The chairman of Homecoming hopes that everyone will participate in the parade to show the SPIRIT OF UVM to our opponents, the University of Rhode Island.

At halftime, poster and alumni awards will be presented by

The impact and spirit of Greek Week has already made itself felt all over campus, and the activities of the week have just begun. The Opening Convocation, held at Ira Allen Chapel on Wednesday night, was a total success. Highlighting the convocation were Mr. Robert W. Krovitz and Mrs. Russell Holden, who made a lasting impression upon the audience. Later that evening, informal discussion groups were held in Billings Center, which proved to be beneficial to the presidents of the various fraternities and sororities on campus. On Thursday the judges reviewed the sixteen candidates for Greek Week Queen and selected the queen. However, the name of the queen will not be revealed until tonight at the Greek Sing. The candidates for Greek Queen and the fraternities they represent are: Donna Kristiansen (Phi-Delta Theta), Linda Burrill (Acacia), Mardi Kjartansson (Alpha Gamma Rho), Josie Ellenson (Alpha Epsilon Pi), Lucy Beal (Delta Psi), Carin Ringdahl (Sigma Phi), Joyce Herlihy (Sigma Alpha Epsilon), Sherry Morrell (Alpha Tau Omega), Mary McColl (Phi Mu Delta), Ronni Brambler (Phi Sigma Delta), Susan Shelly (Sigma Phi Epsilon), Melinda Parker (Tau Epsilon Phi), Joanne Dare (Sigma Nu), Patricia Stankewich (Theta Chi), Jolen Bisaccia (Lambda Iota), and Helen Kieth (Kappa Sigma). The exchange dinners were successful, and instrumental in promoting better fraternity-sorority relations and communication.

Greek Week is far from over. Tonight is the Greek Sing; Saturday will be the Greek Games, and Saturday night will be the Greek House parties. How the remainder of the weekend turns out will depend on the support and participation of the entire student body.

A PINT SPEAKS OUT

No, I'm not a pint of that stuff that most of us are too familiar with. I'm a pint of blood and I belong to the greatest life-saving program ever undertaken in the world. Everyone in America can benefit because my blood is available to everyone when blood is needed to save a life - yours. Everyone can help with a little of his time and his blood.

You say, "I don't have the time," or, "I get too weak," or, "I've got a cold," or, "Someone else will do it." Let's not kid ourselves, I'm not going to be around forever. I'll have to be replaced and I can't wait for that someone else. I need you. Won't you help?

Let's face reality. Most of us are afraid. And what is the matter with that. It's a normal reaction to something that appears distasteful. All I can say is that the first time is always the worst. This is only because of the element of apprehension. I cannot alter your fear, but I will try to overcome it with some simple facts to alleviate your anxieties.

The only really bad part is the needle. I have found that if you are squeamish, don't look at it. You'll hardly feel it. No, Giving blood won't weaken you. There are 12 pints of blood in your system and the giving of one hardly affects you. In fact, within 24 to 48 hours the pint is replaced. If you are under 21, you can still give by having your parents sign the release slip. Very simple. Most important, however, is the feeling that you get from knowing that you have done something tremendously worthwhile.

Now that I have told you why you should give, I'm going to tell you how you can give. Ethan Allen Rifles is sponsoring a blood drive in coordination with the Red Cross, October 6 & 7 at Billings Center. All you need do is pick up an appointment card at Billings your dorm, fraternity, sorority, or elsewhere, and then show up at the time you indicated as being convenient for you. We need 300 pints. Won't you help with an hour of your time and a unit of blood to provide a life-time for someone else? I've got to go. Will YOU replace me with a pint of YOUR blood?

KW Secretary Elected

The school year has begun again, and with it, the functions of the 69th Annual Kake Walk Committee. One of the first items of business for the Directors -- Bob Ostrom, Vinnie De Cesaris, and Dave Cohen -- was to choose a new secretary. She is Carol Cayward.

Carol, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. G. Cayward, is from New Ipswich, N.H. She is a senior majoring in English. Carol is a sister to Delta Delta Delta Sorority where she has served as Recommendations Chairman. With the addition of Carol, the Committee is now at half strength, with only the four assistant directors to be chosen in October.

UVM Continues Increasing Spending For Research

In 1952 $271,284 was spent on research at the University of Vermont. In a dozen years this figure has increased tenfold, such that during the year ending June 30, 1964, $2,816,941 was spent for research in the Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics, Arts and Sciences, Medicine, and Technology. Eighty-eight per cent of this amount was from federal grants, seven per cent from the State of Vermont, and the remaining five per cent from UVM and private sources.

How does this astounding amount of research aid the University and student, and why is it encouraged at most colleges throughout the country?

Probably the most important reason is that provisions for faculty research attract scholars, even from high-paying industrial jobs, men interested in learning and in adding to the body of knowledge as well as in teaching. Because research requires an up-to-date knowledge of the field, these faculty members have new and living knowledge with them in their classrooms, where the students can profit also. Generally, top professors, especially in the scientific fields, are involved in some research, either on a grant or on their own.

But research has still other advantages on a University campus. Every time a faculty member makes a discovery attracting local or national attention, whether among the general public or among scholars in the field, the University's reputation gains.

Facilities, many out of range of department budgets, are bought with money from research grants and made available for use in classrooms. In many cases a large percentage of the funds for actually constructing buildings housing both research and classrooms is provided by the federal government. Examples of this are Votey Engineering Building, the new Medical Buildings, and the planned Life Sciences Building.

Each year additions are made to the library through the demands of researchers. Books are actually bought by grants and then presented to the University by researchers. These books, often extensively used by upperclassmen, would otherwise not have been available here.

Another distinct advantage of research becomes apparent during the upperclass years for the more than ten per cent of the graduating class who become involved in research of some kind, with some faculty member, or on their own problem. For these seniors and many student technicians, the relevancy of one's courses to the problems confronting his future profession become visible. An increasing number of students find research an educational tool providing a respect for the many intricacies encountered in an actual problem.

To the individual researcher in any of the University of Vermont's sixty departments, research means more than a teaching aid, a source of funds, materials, or facilities, or even personal advancement in his field. It is the feeling of achievement involved in solving a previously unsolved problem, discovering new material or theorems, or developing a new tool for practical use of other research.

New Ed. Standards Set

TO THE CLASS OF 1968:

Beginning with the Class of 1968, all students at the University of Vermont who expect to prepare for public school teaching in any subject and at any grade level must be formally admitted to Teacher Education.

If you are in the Class of 1968 and expect to prepare for teaching but did not make application last year to a program in Teacher Education, you must do so at once. Application forms may be obtained from the Office of the Dean of the College of Education and Nursing, 143 Waterman.

To qualify for admission to Teacher Education, applicants must present satisfactory academic records, must perform satisfactorily in both writing and speech tests, must be endorsed by at least two faculty members, and may have to be recommended by an interviewing committee.

During the two-hour writing session, students will be given opportunity to express their thoughts about a general topic of common interest to college students. Each writer will be expected to demonstrate adequate use and range of vocabulary, logical expression of ideas, proper paragraph organization, good sentence structure, correct spelling, and legible handwriting.

The writing test will be given from 7 to 9 p.m. on Wednesday, October 20, in Votey Hall (Room 101) to all students in the Class of 1968 in all colleges who did not take the test last April and who expect to qualify for teaching.

Examinations and endorsements for speech proficiency will be administered by the UVM Speech Department.

The new procedures and requirements for admission to Teacher Education at UVM are expected 1) to assure that only qualified students enter teaching, 2) to aid in early identification of students who expect to prepare for teaching (regardless of the college in which they are enrolled), and 3) to bring about improvements in the advisement and counseling of students in Teacher Education.

General information about Teacher Education and specific information about steps to be followed in seeking admission to Teacher Education may be obtained from the Dean's Office at 143 Waterman.

NOTE: THE WRITING TEST FOR THE CLASS OF 1969 WILL BE GIVEN IN THE SECOND SEMESTER OF THE CURRENT SCHOOL YEAR ON A DATE TO BE ANNOUNCED.

and Nursing

Senate Guides Academic Policy

By Dick Matheson

The University administration is advised and aided by the University Senate - not to be confused with the S.A. Senate - a faculty and administration body responsible for many of the policies affecting UVM students. President McCune is Chairman of this large organization, which includes virtually all the UVM Deans and the teaching staff (although first-year instructors can't vote).

Important areas in which the Senate determines or recommends policy include minimum standards for admission, the academic calendar, conduct of exams, standards for grading, and general requirements for degrees.

The fact that the President is Chairman of the University Senate doesn't mean that he determines most of the policy. The reason for having the Senate is to delegate some of the administration's responsibility to the faculty and to get their opinions and advice. There are ten standing committees which study and advise on certain specific areas: admissions, buildings and grounds, ceremonies, curriculum, external affairs, financial aid, library, museum, research, and student life.

The Policy Committee, composed of one member from each of the six colleges, plays an important role, representing the Senate (between its monthly meetings, making faculty sentiment known to the President, and making the President's suggestions known to the faculty).

Do students have any influence on the Senate? Very little. Rarely, if ever, do students appear at Senate meetings, and of all the committees, only the Library Committee includes a student representative, who cannot, however, vote. There are two means, however, by which students may make their views known to the Senate. (1) They may have a sympathetic faculty member represent them at a Senate meeting, or (2) they may go through the S.A. Senate, which has a President to President relationship with the University Senate, and should have regular communication with the faculty administration body.

Bain Heads Student Activities

By Syrette Dym

The new Director of Student Activities and of Billings Center, David A. Bain, has quickly merited the unofficial respect and friendship of those he works with - the students and the administration. Born in Nebraska, Mr. Bain was raised in Iowa and was a 1957 graduate of Cornell College. After graduation, he headed for the University of Connecticut, where his interest in student activities found an outlet. As Coordinator of Student Activities on the U. Conn. campus, Mr. Bain developed his own philosophy for smooth coordination of a varied activities program and followed this plan for five years. After this time he worked for two years on his Masters Degree in Personnel and Counseling.

That was the end of last semester. This summer, Mr. Bain was interviewed for his present position. Curiously, this was the same day Mr. McCune was interviewed. Hearing a complete explanation of the job, Mr. Bain's enthusiasm for the philosophy of Billings Center lead to his acceptance of the position. We students may not realize the difference between our Center and other student centers, but, as Mr. Bain explained, at UVM, programming is left to the students. Mr. Bain acts to coordinate the students' interests with those of the administration.

But Mr. Bain's job is not cut and dried nor is his title limiting. He may be the closest link to Emily Post on this campus. Greatly interested in social education and in teaching students social amenities, Mr. Bain is our new etiquette authority. If your fraternity is holding a tea in honor of a "Calista Vanderbilt" and you have never cut a lemon before, march to Mr. Bain before violating the code of lemon cutting. An example from Bain's specialized knowledge: cookies on a platter should never overlap.

One project Mr. Bain hopes to accomplish is a Student Leadership Conference at which the qualities and responsibilities of leadership could be discussed and better understood. A past project has involved the giving of blood. Though he may not be directly connected with the blood drive at UVM, some may find themselves blood donors through his persuasive powers.

With the wide range of interests that he plans to pursue, Mr. Bain's job becomes, as he put it, "a shizoid type job, where you are counseling a tea one minute and asking the Chief of Police if you can rope off a street for a pep rally the next." One experience Mr. Bain anticipates eagerly is the indescribable occurrence we call Kake Walk. Though the event is new to him, Mr. Bain is confident that he and the students can reach the agreements necessary for action. This confidence is a result of his respect for UVM students whom he feels are generally "responsible and open minded without being Philadelphia Lawyerish." This year should prove new and exciting for Mr. Bain, and those who come in contact with his new ideas and genuine interest.

POSTER RESTRICTIONS

EDITORIAL...

The representation of this week's cover of the CYNIC depicts the Trojan horse. Ulysses had the Greeks build this huge wooden horse and then told the Trojans that it was an offering to the goddess Athena. Just as this was an offering to the Trojans, Greek Week is also an offering, that of the Fraternity System. During this one week, much is offered in the way of activities -- an opening convocation, exchange dinners and workshops, Greek games, and house parties. This, however, is only one week out of an entire academic year. What, if anything, does the fraternity system offer in general to any prospective member?

Perhaps one of the best and kindest ways of describing fraternal living is to call it an "experiment in living," living together. Skeptics might wonder how this is different from dormitory life. In a dorm, one hibernates in his room, although he might lead a rather miserable existence, without communicating with anyone (except for maybe an occasional roommate). Far-fetched? Perhaps, but it only serves to emphasize the point that in a fraternity none of this is possible.

One must relate and communicate. Naturally, there may be some people for whom we do not care so much as we do for others, but life is a compromise. We must try to learn to tolerate people, all people. We must try to find and cultivate the good points in people. We must try to de-emphasize the poor habits that they may acquire. This is the secret to living together. What better way to practice this than in a fraternity setup.

We must be fair, however. There is at least one major fault prevalent among fraternal systems. This is the lack of individuality. In any instance, the existence of the individual is of primary importance. We must not strive to perpetuate the stereotype present in almost every fraternity here at UVM (whether it be going without socks, wearing a Princeton style haircut, or whatever).

Everyone is a distinct, unique being and should seek to remain so. The idea of working together as a group is fine in its proper place, but each person in this group should play a distinct role and retain some individuality in his own characteristic manner.

Only in this way, with each person fulfilling his individual role in a group situation, can the true offering of fraternity be realized.

Letters To The Editor A Call To Responsibility

To the Editor:

October 6 & 7 could mark an important first step for many students at the University of Vermont. It will mark the acceptance and realization of the moral responsibilities of today's student. On these two days, a blood drive is being held at Billings Center and everyone's help is necessary to make it an qualified success. A quota of 300 pints has been set, but in reality this is quite low. Previous drives have fished as much as 444 pints. Even this sum is painfully low - less than 10% of the total University population. This is a sad figure indeed.

At a time when the student is often accused of doing little for society outside of his fairly secure atmosphere of intellectualism, we find that we are confronted with something that is both humanitarian and highly beneficial. Students are condemned for being apathetic and not caring. Here is an opportunity for all of us to avail ourselves of a truly worthwhile cause. It seems a shame that we don't give blood. Human nature makes it very easy for us to give. The process is painless, and the blood is replaced within 24-48 hours. This is a small price to pay for saving someone's life - perhaps the life of someone that you know. After you have given that first time, the feeling of elation and self-satisfaction is indescribable. Everyone should feel this emotion, and you all can.

As responsible citizens, we must all accept the obligations that are part of this society. I don't believe that students at Vermont are apathetic. They have been given ample chance to prove themselves. Every member of the University family, from the faculty and staff to the honoraries to the newest freshmen, should rise to the occasion. I hope that the Red Cross will see you October 6 & 7.

Mixes & Matches

Dear All,

It's ours, the Greeks' week, so let's really let ourselves be noticed!

Sue Riggs, '66, of Alpha Chi Omega, was noticed and became engaged to Steve Humphrey of Siena College, Schenectady, N.Y. All the Alpha Delta Pi's send best wishes to Gail Doubleday, '67, on her pinning to Roger Ames, '66, of Sigma Phi Epsilon, and to Meryl Schneider, '66, on her pinning to Bob Suhr, '66, of Clarkson College, New York.

Lots of luck to Delta Psi on Chad Smith's pinning to Marion Maynard; on Brian Andrews' pinning to Lucy Peal, of Kappa Alpha Theta, and on Kirk MacDonald's pinning to Linda Heller.

Heartiest congratulations to Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity on the initiation of the following new brothers: James D. White, John P. Pratt, Richard Dexter, William Nelson and Lester Denison. Also, Dixon Ballard, Robert Weeks, Lawrence Clark, Andrew Dyfresne, Paul Bruns, John Farley, Robert Foster, Herman Hoops, John Scott, and Edmund Wodehouse.

Long may the Greeks live and grow!

Perception

By David St. John (SS)

After careful investigation, I feel it is safe to say that the University of Vermont is still here in Burlington. Since I am merely a student and have no relatives in faculty or staff, I found it necessary to probe for the above information in a hired helicopter (which didn't have a yellow sticker, but hovered, aggravatingly, over the Rent-A-Cop parking place).

Rent-A-Cop, incidentally, now has detectives who watched car owners come through the bumper-sticker line to be certain of identifying students who might paint stickers yellow. (Marking pencil, felt tip - works fine.) Speaking of yellow, the city of Burlington has just acquired more yellow paint (curb type) and may soon paint an attractive border around our lovely college green. Merchants are bitter because we on the hill have all the pretty lawns, tax free. So, they have prompted fuzzy doings about the place in order to even up the tax situation.

The University, this year, has much more lawn space than it has had in the past. Several parking places were modified into lawns, such as the area in front of the freshman boys' dorms. This effort was probably to discourage freshman boys from hiding motor vehicles in front of their dorms. The Buildings and Grounds Committee is looking to the future to solve the parking problem. "One day," quoth an administrator, "there will be too many people on earth to allow cars at all; so, being modern, down with parking areas!"

The freshman girls were foiled the first few days of school by the generous shuttle bus service to and from their dorms. The upper-class girls knew the hoax was just for the benefit of onlooking parents who had stayed over a few days to see that the kiddies would be well cared for. The giveaway was that the price of bubble-gum in their dorms was also cut in half the first week.

Cigarette sales soared this year over years past. Either there are more freshmen this year or parents have been more strictly forbidding youngsters to smoke.

The puritanical era is again being forcefully encouraged here. Rest assured that the freshman girls have all been cautioned against walking alone, going to parties, going out nights, talking to other students, and associating with dirty old men (BMOC's). Girls, I'll guarantee that if there are any men on campus whom you wish to date, if you'll just tell them, they'll ask you out. Remember, drinking is forbidden now and it's going to be harder for the boys to work up to calling you.

Several frat houses have been remodeled this year so girls might well be advised to watch out, in the restrooms provided, for two-way mirrors and tape-recorders. Light switches may be wired and these holes in the walls which look like peak holes, are.

What else is new? We will probably find that all blue laws will be tightly enforced, and that this year's Kake Walk skits will portray more monkeys than ever. News, we expect, will be easy to come by.

Fraternity Row

Because this is the annual Greek Week issue of the CYNIC, Fraternity Row would like to talk with the non-Greeks on the UVM campus. By now, Greek Week (which isn't a full week but only four days; fraternities are pushing for a three day weekend) is half over, with only the Greek Sing and the Games remaining, along with the parties on Saturday night at the respective houses. Let's explain the Sing and the Games, not in terms of the fraternities, but in terms of the independents, or GDI's, as they are affectionately called.

Because independents live in the men's residence halls or in apartments if they are Seniors, they can not conceivably have the close contacts that are found in fraternity houses. This is not to say that independents do not have close friends, but rather only that their friendships are limited by subcubes for rooms and long corridors. Fraternities offer a change from the regimented life, a change which allows for a change in attitudes. But the major point here is that because of the scope of the residence halls, independents find themselves missing the social activities on the campus. For them, there is no Greek Week, no Winter or Spring Formals, and until last year, there was no Kake Walk. Parties at the fraternities are closed to non-fraternity men under a ruling by the IFC. The independents' only hope is that the movies are good, or that there happens to be something extra-special in Burlington that they would wish to attend. Other than these two alternatives, there is no place for an independent to go, socially. The other side of the coin is the fraternity house, a place where social events are well-integrated into the scholastic schedule of the school.

One now might ask what this has to do with Greek Week. The answer is very simple: Greek Week is the epitome of fraternity life. It contains the elements of a well-rounded college career - the workshops for leadership and responsibilities, the Games for athletic prowess, the parties for social outlets, the convocation for scholarship, and the Sing for brotherhood. In every sense of the word, Greek Week is a complete four days, demanding and expecting all fraternity men to meet its challenges and goals.

It may seem to some that this column is now, in a sense, bragging. And it cannot be denied that, in part, it is. The Interfraternity Council is proud of its week, and it hopes that it will stimulate both the independents and the freshmen to think seriously about what they are missing in those five areas listed above. Fraternities are experiences in life, leadership, athletics, scholarship, social pleasures, and brotherhood. If there is any doubt in your mind, doubt as to either the benefits or the detriments of the fraternity system, stop any fraternity man and challenge him to prove to you the inherent enjoyment and pleasures of being a fraternity man. If he cannot satisfy you, call the IFC office during the day. We will try to straighten you out.

Outing Club Gets New Lodge Pending School Support

UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT PROPOSED OUTING CLUB LODGE JEFFERSONVILLE VT BENJAMIN STALE ARCHITECT VERMONT

By John W. Goodrich, II

The UVM Outing Club is currently conducting an $80,000 fund raising drive for its new lodge on Route 108 out of Jeffersonville, at the Madonna Mountain Ski Area.

Since Monday, September 27, the Outing Club has had a booth downstairs in Billings Student Center for the solicitation of monetary subscriptions from the students. The booth may be operated throughout October, because the failure of this drive will mean the loss of a $20,000 challenge gift.

The total cost of the projected two-story lodge will be $80,000. Since March 1 the Outing Club has collected $25,000 in gifts. In order to succeed, the current drive must collect $35,000 in subscriptions by the end of October. The money must be collected promptly because the lodge must be completed by this December in order to meet the terms of the challenge gift.

Already 120 students have pledged $4200. Each student simply has to subscribe the $35 that was deposited with the university when he was officially accepted. This is a painless method of contributing to YOUR lodge!

In exchange, the student will receive a charter membership in the Outing Club. A charter membership will automatically mean that the student is a normal Outing Club member with all the benefits of regular memberships. In addition, a charter membership will entitle a student to priority over non-member students for accommodations at the Outing Club lodge and to reduced ski rates in the adjacent area.

The lodge has bunk rooms on the second floor to easily accommodate sixty men and women. The rooms are equipped with shelves, wardrobes, and even mattresses on the beds. There are dorm style baths for men and women. The lodge also has a bedroom-sitting room suite for either a chaperone or a caretaker.

On the first floor, the lodge has two lounges with large fireplaces. The smaller lounge is a reading room as a result of a $5,000 gift from the Student Association. There is also a room for the storage and maintenance of students' skis.

In addition, the first floor has a kitchen. Three regular meals will be available every day. Besides meals, the students will be able to get short order snacks all during the day.

The spacious, attractive area surrounding the lodge will have parking facilities and a skating pond.

The lodge will be open for year-round use. The lodge's location (one mile from the slopes) is excellent for skiing. It also has several other attractions to recommend it. There is an Adirondack team that will accommodate twenty campers. Rock climbing and hiking, as well as caving, are available in the vicinity for fair weather activities. All of these activities and all of the accommodations are available for any group, couple, or individual. Of course the lodge will be a wonderful place to go and just get away from it all.

Are you tired of studying? Do you want to get away from the books for awhile? Come with the Outing Club on our IOCA (Inter-collegiate Outing Club Association) trip to Lake George this weekend. Over 500 Outing Club members from colleges all over the eastern United States will converge on Turtle Island by canoe and camp out Friday and Saturday nights. There will be singing, square and folk dancing, canoeing, exploring, and climbing, depending on how ambitious you feel. If you are interested, carloads for Lake George will be leaving Friday night and Saturday noon for a weekend of fun.

The Outing Club's traditional Mountain Day is scheduled for the following Sunday, October 10. Anyone interested in seeing Vermont's scenic beauty and making new friends should enjoy this hike to the top of Mount Mansfield. Busloads of ambitious students will leave both the Waterman building and Redstone campus at 9:00. Transportation is free and free cider and doughnuts are available for all at Mansfield's summit.

Last Sunday, afternoon nineteen Outing Club members returned from an overnight sailing trip on Lake Champlain. The clear skies and strong winds made for a good trip out to Stave Island and back on a beautiful 36 foot sailboat. Once there, we climbed a fire tower to see an unbelievable view of the Lake, went swimming, explored, and told ghost stories by the campfire.

All, however, was not smooth sailing. To start with, one of the sailboats couldn't go, resulting in an excess of people. Our hard-working leader remained behind. Furthermore, on the return trip, the smaller sailboat hit a reef, putting a gaping hole in the side, and it had to be towed back to shore. The trip was still a good one.

If you are interested in joining us in having a good time, come to our regular Thursday night meetings at Southwick Gym at 7:00 and sign up for the trips.

Cheerleaders Bring Pep To Campus

By Marv Belovin

Football players are not the only students busy practicing for the current football season. A football game is an event participated in by both players and spectators; our players are led by their coaches and our spectators are led by an able and hard working group called cheerleaders. In the spring of 1965, the cheerleaders were put under the auspices of the Pep Committee. The Committee allocates a portion of its budget to them for uniforms and equipment. Cheerleaders conduct their tryouts and practices independently of the Pep Committee. On Sept. 20, 21, and 22 the cheerleaders held tryouts for this year's team. The tryouts were at Southwick, with an encouraging turnout of 40 girls. These tryouts were preliminaries in which the girls were all taught two cheers. They had those three days to perfect the two cheers for the final tryouts which took place at Southwick on Sept. 23.

At 7:00 p.m. twenty five anxious and nervous girls marched into Southwick with their lungs and limbs ready for the deciding effort. The girls all gave it their all, but there were only four openings. The girls who made the team are: Nancy Changaris, '68; Sue Norton, '69; Phyllis Weil, '69; and Margaret West, '69. Those girls who are already on the team from last year are: co-captains Carolyn Pratt, '66, and Judy Claypoole, '66; Ann Brown, '67; Donna Sweeney, '68; Audrey O'Brien, '68; Barbara Favreau, '68; Judy Blackburn, '68; and Joan Rousseau, '67. To hold the attention of the feminine spectators, there are currently four male cheerleaders. They are: Puffer Wellman, Eric Skinner, Jeff Zinn, and Eddie Young.

These boys have offered their services to the girl cheerleaders and urgently request any other boys interested in cheerleading to contact them. This year the cheerleaders are going to the Middlebury game and will also be present at all home games.

The cheerleaders work in conjunction with the Pep Committee in organizing Pep Rallies. On Friday night, Sept. 24, the Pep Committee, in spite of the pouring rain, pulled off the best Pep Rally yet seen at UVM. Close to 700 screaming, dripping wet students crowded into the indoor rink. The spirit displayed Friday night was a morale booster for the team. The cheerleaders led chants during the rally. Coach Clifford introduced the members of the varsity football team, and Dr. Gregg contributed his usual humor. The cheerleaders wish to give special thanks to Kappa Sigma for their exuberant spirit and their rallying drum which brought many of the freshmen out of the dorms and down to the gym. The largest contingent of any one group at the rally was 100 freshmen from Buckham Hall who call themselves the "Buckham Bears." The fraternity and sorority roll call was taken by Roy Zuckerman. The competitive screaming was frantic, although there was a notable lack of noise from some houses. The rally promised spirit for Saturday's opening game with W.P.I.

The game brought a victory to the team, but a great disappointment to the cheerleaders because of the lack of vitality shown by students. Granted the game was one-sided, still, no football game should sound like a funeral march. The cheerleaders hope the spirit rapidly improves, but only you spectators can make hopes facts.

Coed Dorms Coming To UVM

By Stephen Carlson

At long last, the fond dreams of many a UVM student forced to the drudgery of dormitory life are to come true. The administration is planning to build a coeducational dormitory complex.

Before the elation gets out of hand, it might be relevant to repeat and emphasize that word,

F.M.A Born

Over the summer many changes came to UVM, one in the form of a new association. Born was the F.M.A., Fraternity Managers Association, directed by Stanton Williams, a 1961 graduate and alumnus of Sigma Nu fraternity. The F.M.A. was set up to help the fraternities keep within their budgets without cutting down on the quality of the items purchased.

All but three of the sixteen fraternities have joined this association; the sororities, however, did not join as this year is experimental. Big savings will not show up on this year's books, but if there is any excess from initial dues it will be apportioned to each house on the basis of its budget size. Mr. Williams is in charge of all fraternity spending. Services under F.M.A. include food, linen and fuel. Over the summer recess bids were sought from all prospective suppliers, and the lowest bidder became the recipient of all the fraternities' business. This insures the fraternities of high quality and good service at the smallest cost.

Each merchant sends his bill to the F.M.A. office rather than the individual house, and it is through the office that all the bills are paid within a guaranteed ten days. Once a month an itemized bill is sent to each house with a record of whether it is over or under its budget.

The association headed by Mr. Williams consists of a board of trustees on which serve the president and members of the I.F.C. as well as members of the alumni I.F.C.

As this is only the fourth week of the fall term, it is impossible to tell the outcome of this test. It should be noted, however, that thus far the fraternity management has run smoothly with very minor problems.

Summer Fun?

Dr. Gilbert A. Marshall, associate professor of mechanical engineering at the University of Vermont, has returned to campus after a summer on the staff of International Business Machines Corporation's manufacturing facility here.

Dr. Marshall was one of 64 faculty members from 40 colleges and universities throughout the United States who took part in IBM's Summer College Faculty Program at the company's plants, laboratories and offices.

During his stay with IBM, Dr. Marshall was engaged in the development of plans for IBM's new facility here which will manufacture micro-miniature circuits used in the company's most advanced computer products.

IBM's Summer College Faculty Program, now in its sixth year of operation, is designed to acquaint teachers with the environment and work of an industrial corporation. By giving them actual "hands-on" experience in their academic fields, the program helps them to keep their classroom instruction up-to-date.

It is also designed to aid faculty members in counseling students interested in careers in industry.

complex. There will be three buildings — two for men and one for women, or vice versa; it will at least be an improvement over the present separate-but-equal residence centers.

Scheduled for opening in the fall of 1967, the four-story complex will have living units on only the second, third, and fourth floors. Present plans (which are still subject to change) are to make the first floor a common area, open to all students, which will include study rooms, a library, a laundry, etc. The three dormitories and the dining hall will all be connected by an enclosed walkway, called a "gallery." The complex will form three sides of a quadrangle, which may later be enclosed by another complex, if further expansion is required.

The planned lay-out is unique. The hallways will be U-shaped, and the rooms will not be standardized as in the present dorms. Some will be square, some rectangular, and others pentagonal. There will be two bathrooms on each floor, and possibly each floor will also have its own living room, laundry room, typing room, storage room, and ski room. The planned capacity of the complex is 468 students, and the projected cost is $2,800,000.

UVM 11 WHIP W.P.I. IN HOME OPENER

BLACK BEARS OF MAINE WILL BE TEST TOMORROW

Last weekend as the Cats were out on the field destroying the engineers from W.P.I., there was an aura about the game which differed from any game I have seen in my college career. The difference can be summed up in one word - enthusiasm. It seems as if UVM is caught in the midst of the "new breed" spirit which has followed the New York Mets where ever they go. The new spirit seems to have radiated from a large group of freshmen who brought banners to the game, and sat in their own section. They initiated many cheers and one of them was a demand for Charlie Catamount to join them at the north stands. These freshmen are a refreshing breath of air in a stagnant school. We hope they will never lost their desire for school spirit even though it seems that the rest of the school has abandoned it.

We would like to extend our congratulations to Mike Burke, who we consider to be the hero of last Saturday's game, as well as Joe Soldano who kicked his twelfth straight extra point.

It seems as if basketball at UVM is being revived under the watchful eye of Arthur Locke who replaced Fuzzy Evans as head coach. Last year the Catamounts had 7-13 overall record and were 1-9 in Yankee Conference play. After a season like that the team was in the need of a great deal of revamping. Coach Locke has instituted an informal practice routine which is quite vigorous. I would like to emphasize the fact that this is a completely voluntary and individual thing since, according to Yankee Conference regulations, basketball practice may not start on an official basis until October 15.

Meanwhile, we size up the team as being in excellent shape. Co-captain Milt Goggans looks especially good. He's slimmer and trimmer this year than he has been in the past. This should enable him to move much faster. Returning veterans include Co-captain Layne Higgs, Mike Karel, Russ Boardman, Bruce Hynna, Ken Spalter and Jerry Abbott. The team is basically inexperienced, but they have the will to win.

Booters Upend Maine

By Alan Rice

Not to be outdone by the UVM football team, the Vermont soccer team romped over Maine 7 to 1 in their opening game of the 1965 season. After playing a tight first three periods with the Bears from Orano, the Cats exploded for 4 goals in the final period.

Last year, in their first season of intercollegiate competition, the Vermont soccer men were 3-4, a quite respectable record. Moreover, they have 11 returning lettermen to go along with many bright new faces.

The Cats drew first blood against Maine in the opening period when Jeff Taft scored his first of two goals, Bob Schroeder fed a pass to Taft, who kicked it by the Maine goalie at 5:35 of the period. Maine came back to tie the score in the same period on a penalty kick by Don Chase. Vermont went ahead to stay in the second period 2-1 when Pete Giroux scored from the right side on a pass from Dennis Linnehan. Linnehan put Vermont further ahead in the 3rd period on a penalty kick at 6:05 of the period. The Cats then made the game into a runaway in the 4th period when they scored 4 goals. Jeff Taft scored his second goal of the game after dribbling half the length of the field. Vermont added another on a goal scored by Mike Burke, 23, hits pay dirt for his second and UVM's fifth touchdown.

By Bob Bloomenthal

The UVM Catamounts smashed their way to victory number 2 with a 42-0 killing of Worcester Tech. Vermont simply outclassed the Engineers in this one, as W.P.I. offered very little competition for the Cats.

The statistics for the game prove this point. Tech was held to -12 yards on the ground in the game while UVM totaled 380 yards. Vermont was forced to punt but once while W.P.I. gave up the ball seven times on punts.

Another shining performance by quarterback Scott Fitz sparked the Cats offensively. Fitz ran with the ball only four times, but he picked up 93 yards on these carries for a phenomenal average of 232 yards per carry. Scott completed three of four passes for another 59 yards besides.

The star Catamount signal caller also scored the first touchdown of the game. After receiving the opening kickoff, UVM drove 68 yards in nine plays as Fitz carried the ball in for the score from seven yards out on an option pitchout play. Three plays earlier Fitz had set up the touchdown by going 53 yards on the same type of play. Joe Soldano kicked his first of six extra points to make it 7-0 with 9:26 remaining in the period.

Soldano himself set up the next UVM score when he blocked a W.P.I. punt and recovered it on Worcester's 12 yard line. Four plays later Terry Lynn busted over the middle for six more points and Soldano's kick made it 14-0 at the quarter.

Vermont raised the score again early in the second period by driving 78 yards in ten plays. The big one was a 39-yard run by Dick Hebert after taking a pitchout from Fitz. Mike Burke got the touchdown on a one yard run.

Bill Leete led UVM to its final first half score. A pass to sophomore Jeff Kuhman was good for 17 yards and put the ball on the W.P.I. 11. Leete then tossed a pitchout to Ed (Boomer) Kihiry who covered the remaining yardage to make the halftime score 28-0.

Play was slowed down a bit in the second half as Coach Clifford got another good look at his second and third good. Mike Burke got the fifth UVM tally and his second of the game on a seven yard run in the third period. Kuhman scored the final TD of the game by taking a six yard pass from Leete. Soldano's kicks after both these scores made the final 42-0. Joe has now kicked 12 straight PATs in the Cats' two games this year.

With W.P.I. quarterback Jack Kofzick filling the air with passes the UVM defense had a field day on interceptions. Linebackers Rusty Brink and soph Colin Hurd each picked off two while Bill Leete grabbed another. Cats who looked good rushing the Worcester passer included Harvey Bazarian, Bob Murray, Bob Mitchell, and Dave Lucaroni.

For the third consecutive year now, UVM will be heading into the Maine encounter with a 2-0 record. Nevertheless, Vermont will be travelling to Orano to face the Black Bears as underdogs. Maine is in the driver's seat of the Yankee Conference as they already own a victory over U Mass. A UVM defeat would virtually clinch the title for the Bears. Thus Vermont will be up against some real competition this Saturday and it appears to be a quarterback battle between two veterans, Scott Fitz and Dick DeVarney. Unless Vermont's Sophomores continue to jell, however, the going will be rough, as the Black Bears are just waiting to taste a Yankee Conference title.

Curt Tobey with an assist from Tom Laudmann. A minute later Pete Baldwin put in a pass from Jeff Hyman to make the score 6-1. Finally, Don Carlson added the finishing touches at 20:30 as he tapped in a pass from Curt Tobey.

Veteran Vermont Goalie Tim Madison played an excellent game in the nets. He wasn't tested very often, but when called upon to make the stop, he was more than equal to the task. Jerry Abbot played most of the final period in goal for Vermont and saved all of Maine's shots on goal.

Playing a fine game, along with the players who scored the goals, were Captain Bill Willey, Ted Schroeder and John Neftzger.

Soccer is a new varsity sport at Vermont, but one with a great future. It was a difficult task for Coach Greig to organize soccer and build it into a varsity sport. However, now that the team is off the ground, it is becoming well respected on campus. Many capable soccer players, who hesitated to go out for the sport in its past couple of years, tried out for the team this year, and have helped make it into a solid squad.

The Cats open their home season against U Conn on Saturday. We hope a large Greek Week crowd will be at the game to cheer the team on to another victory.

Welcome Alumni-Homecoming '65 Arrives Greek Week Excels

"Chariots are Coming."

"Pull that Line."

By Jack Rosenberg

UVM Greeks staged their first Sing in four years last Friday night. It was a night that completely epitomized the atmosphere of Greek Week. The evening was highlighted by Phi Sigma Delta's rendition of "Ride the Chariot" which seemed to overwhelm the audience and the judges, who awarded them first place in the fraternity division. Sigma Alpha Epsilon was second in the competition with "Hanover Winter Song." Third place was awarded to Tau Epsilon Phi who sang original lyrics to "Goodbye, Old Girl" from Damn Yankees. Laura Schildhaus, Fred Brown, and Carl Lisman, co-chairmen, introduced each House humorously to keep audience interest concentrated from one competition entry to the next.

The sorority division was a very close competition; Nevertheless, the judges, the Burlington Barber Shop Quartet, made a decision and Alpha Delta Pi emerged victorious. The winning song, "Greensleeves," is an authentic and well-loved ballad dating from before the 15th century. Pi Beta Phi came in a close second with a medley from the Broadway musical Oliver.

Following the Sing, the Greek Week Queen, Joyce Herlihy representing Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Helen Keith representing Kappa Sigma, were introduced to the waiting Greek and Independent audience.

Then Saturday arrived, with good weather for the Greek Games. The Games were held at Redstone Campus, and involved everything from a pie eating contest, won by Phi Sigma Delta, to a bicycle race, won by Kappa Alpha Theta, to a chariot race in the Ben Hur tradition, won by Delta Psi. When the dust finally settled, Sigma Alpha Epsilon had gathered the most points and was awarded first place. Phi Sigma Delta took second place and Tau Epsilon Phi came in third place. The sororities helped the fraternities to make this Greek Week the best one UVM has seen in a long time. The Week's festivities ended that night with parties, some cooperative affairs. The Greeks hope they have demonstrated that they can work with as well as against each other.

The long period of preparation ends Friday night as the 1965 Homecoming Weekend opens with a ball. Dancers to the orchestral sound of Bert Orr will, in the course of the evening, be presented with the Tymes and their claims to fame, "So Much In Love" and "Wonderful, Wonderful." Performing such hits as "He's So Fine" and "Nobody Knows What's Goin' On In My Mind..." will be the Chiffons, while Bob Clark and his band, just returned from a European tour, will provide another highlight.

The King and Queen and Court will be announced, having been chosen by all campus ballot Wednesday. The candidates were selected by the freshmen, one or two from each women's dorm, one from each floor of the freshmen boys' dorms.

Throughout the week Mortar Board, like Mortar Board chapters all across the country, has been selling mums - a happy yellow tradition symbolic of a college Homecoming weekend. Sophomore Aides here have helped with the sale of tickets.

The junior honoraries, headed by Peter Gross and Theo Russell, have taken extensive steps toward making this year's Homecoming, for which they are responsible, a golden success. The chief contributors are: Rich Colton, Kathy Brush (Ball); Terry Matthews, Joan Newman (Half-time); Ralph Hochberg, Cheryl Eisert (Publicity); Rich Lewis, Judy Peitscher (King & Queen); Carl Lisman, Anne Meunier (Ticket); and Fred Brown, Ann Lindley (Poster).

These chairmen, along with the Pep Committee, cheerleaders, Charlie Catamount, and the UVM band will escort the King and Queen from Ira Allen Chapel to Centennial Field, scene of Saturday's game with the University of Rhode Island.

At half-time the King and Queen will each receive a trophy, a final souvenir of their reign. The Greek winner of the poster competition will be honored at this time, as will the Alumnus or Alumna who has traveled the longest distance.

The existence of such an award shows the significance of the American Homecoming tradition of loyalty to one's college ties.

S.A. Senators Elected

By Bruce Rosen

Congratulations to the newly elected representatives to the Student Association Senate from the dormitories, fraternity houses, and sorority houses on campus. There was a large turnover in the membership of this year's new Senate. Approximately three-fourths of the Senators elected were newcomers to the position.

One glaring aspect of this year's elections was the small number of candidates running for S.A. representative. In each of the large dormitories petitions were required to be submitted by any prospective candidate, with the result that many candidates ran unopposed. In some instances there was not even one candidate from a dormitory. The smaller residence halls, fraternities, and sororities ran their own house-wide elections and petitions were not required. Bob Lampke, who was in charge of the elections, expressed the opinion that it was a general apathy on the part of the student body which led to the lack of candidates.

This past Wednesday evening at 6:30, Student Association Senate met in Billings with the new members in attendance for the first time. Copies of the S.A. Constitution were handed out to new members, followed by a brief introduction to the purposes and the methods by which the Student Association functions.

Topics currently on the floor with which the new Senators will have an opportunity to get their feet wet include:

1. Plans to open study hall an evening in Waterman provided there is adequate response and that absolute quiet is maintained.
2. A better reviewing system of campus organizations in order to determine the proper amount of funds each should be allotted. Each organization will be required to submit statements as to how they spent their money last year and of the benefit the organization is to the entire student body.

Still in committee for study is a proposed system for professor evaluation. The purpose of the evaluation will be to let the professor know the students' estimation of his effectiveness with the hope that the professor may improve his teaching techniques. The system will probably be extended to include an appraisal of all faculty members, but there is still much research needed before the institution of such a system becomes reality.

It must be emphasized that any student is welcome to attend any of the S.A. meetings and offer his services in working on a committee that may interest him. Meetings will be regularly held on Wednesdays at 6:30 P.M. in Marsh Lounge.

Once again, congratulations to the newly elected and those re-elected Senators of the Student

Minority Leader Visits UVM

By Eloise Roberts

This past weekend marked one of the year's most notable events for Vermont Republicans. On Saturday, October 2nd, the state of Vermont and the UVM campus was honored by the presence of Representative Gerald R. Ford, United States House Minority Leader.

First came an informal reception for Congressman Ford at the Holiday Inn. Many eminent Republicans and party faithful were present to welcome Mr. Ford to the state. A twenty-five dollar a plate dinner (catered by Saga) at the UVM's Patrick Gymnasium followed; attending were 1500 people from all parts of the state.

After dinner came the formal political speeches. Congressman Robert T. Stafford, Toastmaster, opened the program with an appeal for unity within the party. Mr. Stafford then introduced Edward G. Janeway, GOP National Committeeman, who spoke of his faith in the ability of the Republican Party to develop vigorous and progressive leadership on both the state and national levels. Mrs. Consuelia Bailey, Republican National Committeewoman, attacked the Johnson Administration, holding it responsible for many of the ills that plague our country here and abroad.

Vermont's Junior Senator, Winston L. Prouty, provoked audience applause with his declaration that the tremendous power in the White House and the programs of the current administration constitute a "threat to our survival as a free nation." He went on to say that a government large enough to provide all the welfare services that the President advocates is a government large enough to deprive every citizen of his essential liberties.

Senator George D. Aiken, the grand old man of Vermont Republicanism, was next on the agenda. His attacks on the "images, glamor and press releases" of the present administration in the Vermont State House won thunderous approval.

The highlight was the address by Representative Gerald Ford, who delivered a blistering attack on the Johnson administration. Indicating the firm Democratic control in both houses of Congress (295-141 for the House; 68-32 for the Senate) as well as the "rubber stamp" attitude of the legislators, he charged that Johnson is a "Goliath" who is using these majorities so "brutally" that our country's freedom and even the federal system itself is endangered. He emphasized the importance of the role of the legislature in government and deplored "President Johnson's . . . use and misuse of power."

He concluded by urging GOP unity saying, "Let's become once again one Republican Party." The program was terminated by a dance with music supplied by the "Music Messengers."

According to Derick V. Webb, the hope of the gathering was that all present would "return home inspired and determined to work harder than . . . ever . . . before to elect Republicans . . . to both the House and Senate."

Hippolytus Due In Nov. - Cast Chosen

By Marv Bellovin

Last week the UVM community was given a performance by the Greek fraternities on campus. Next month the students at UVM will be treated to a different type of Greek performance given by University Players. Euripides tragedy Hippolytus. Tryouts for the production were last week at and approximately 50 students came with hopes of securing a role. The cast list for Hippolytus is as follows: Theseus - Bill Dixon; Hippolytus - Peter Covette; Servant to Hippolytus - Forrest Bowman; Messenger - Trent Anderson; Huntsmen - Jan Quackenbush, Errol Solshy, William Levy, Jeff Freeman, Nash Lamb, and Steve Stearns; Phaedra - Judy Guernsey; Nurse - Rae Newcomb; Aphrodite - Liz Bradspies; Artemis - Carol Scott; Chorus Leaders - Marjorie Adams, Marilyn Deutsch; Women's Chorus - Claudia Serwer, Sara Dana, Jeanne Seales, Sherri Mundell, Judith Watson, Sally Andrews, Elizabeth Ingoldsby, Jill Taylor, Fran Rome, Cynthia Quimby, Bonnie Buxton, and Kathryn Bucktel.

The cast started rehearsals last Sunday in the Arena Theatre. The play is scheduled for the evenings of November 4, 5, and 6, in the Arena Theatre. Tickets will be available at the bookstore and the box-office, starting Oct. 25, at a cost of $1.50. Anyone wishing to assist on costumes, scenery, or promotion, please contact Mr. Feidner. The play will be quite authentic with all performers in full head masks. In charge of scenery for this production is Mr. William Schenk, Designer and Technical Director. Costumes are being handled by Lynne Breth and the play is under the direction of Mr. Feidner, Director of Drama, assisted by Esther Sunden, who will also be stage manager.

A brief resume of the legend as used by Euripides follows. Theseus' legitimate wife, Phaedra, falls in love with her stepson, Hippolytus. Hippolytus has vowed to remain chaste. Phaedra's nurse discovers the problem and convinces Phaedra that the only thing to do is to reveal her love to Hippolytus. The nurse reveals Phaedra's love to Hippolytus himself, who is shocked and appalled. Phaedra, upon hearing Hippolytus' outburst, vows to kill herself and place the blame for her suicide on Hippolytus. She does this by leaving a note that Hippolytus has raped her. Theseus returns and discovers his dead wife and the note she has left. Theseus banishes Hippolytus from the kingdom. Hippolytus dashes from the country in his chariot when a huge earthquake brings a huge bull from the sea. This fulfills the curse of Artemis. The bull stampedes and drags Hippolytus over rocks. His half-dead body is brought to Theseus who in the end discovers the truth. The Players will give this story life and will also provide a chance for learning about the origins of drama.

Panel Discusses Viet Nam

A four man panel discussed the controversial topic "Viet Nam and U.S.A." last week at the second of a series of lectures sponsored by campus religious groups.

The first speaker, Mr. A.D. Sophin, said that the U.S. government is in Viet Nam only because the administration fears public reaction at home if South Viet Nam were to come under Communist control. The Administration should be honest with itself, get out of Viet Nam, and face the political consequences. Mr. Sophin felt that if we withdrew our military force from Viet Nam and concentrated on normal commercial relations, our economic and political ideas would spread more readily.

Col. L. Robinson, head of the Military Science Department then attempted to justify U.S. actions in Viet Nam with facts. He quoted several members of the Communist hierarchy who had openly admitted that North Viet Nam has to be the base for aggression in South Viet Nam. As an example of their terrorism, the Colonel said that the Viet Cong had killed or abducted 22,000 civilians between January, 1964 and July, 1965.

To his mind the U.S. is not the aggressor nation. The U.S. has even attempted to bring peace in Viet Nam through unconditional talks but the North has refused all proposals for discussions.

Professor H. Schultz of the History Department was third. Calling on history to help prove his point, Mr. Schultz pointed out that the U.S. had usually failed in freeing oppressed peoples after intervening in their country for that purpose. He offered Cuba and Haiti, as examples. Mr. Schultz also felt that in any case the U.S. had no right to intervene in other countries. Why is it morally right, he asked, to free the South Vietnamese from Communism if we are not obligated also to free people under Communist domination in China and Russia?

Professor H. Fairbanks of St. Michael's Humanities Department, the last to speak agreed with Col. Robinson that the U.S. policy in Viet Nam was the only right one. Mr. Fairbanks said that the U.S. does not have an expansionist policy in Viet Nam, but is merely there to help. The U.S. is giving not only military aid but also money for the improvement of medical, educational and social facilities. Few questions were permitted by time.

Scope Presents

Scope is pleased to present three short films which depict the stark realities of life. THE EXILES is a conceived portrayal of the actual experiences of three American Indian boys as they venture from the tribal life to an alien social situation in the city of Los Angeles. ON THE BOWERY portrays the conflicts of an alcoholic as he faces his own world, and the world around him. THE CORNER is a short interesting feature which further probes the realities of human conditions.

WRUV-FM Now Broadcasting

By Stephen Carlson

After what seems an eternity of discussion, dickering, and just plain waiting, WRUV-FM is finally on the air. The FM station began broadcasting at 6:00 p.m. last Sunday; it is a ten watt station which may be heard in a five mile radius of its facilities.

A wide variety of programming is offered, ranging from the usual (e.g. classical music, jazz, music from Broadway) to the more esoteric (e.g. poems in Old English). Many of the programs are supplied by the National Educational Radio Network.

The station, which operates at a frequency of 90.1 megacycles, is completely student-operated, under the direction of Dr. William Lewis, Professor of Speech. Because there are, at present, only six student operators, the station is broadcasting only six days a week (Saturdays are excluded), from 6:00 p.m. to midnight. As more students qualify as operators, the program hours will be expanded.

In order to become an operator, a student must have a third-class operator's permit and pass an audition for announcing ability.

The history of WRUV-FM dates back to the fall of 1963, when President Fey approved the project. Broadcasting, however, could not begin until a license was granted by the FCC. This proved a major stumbling block because of a conflict between the FCC and the Canadian government concerning an acceptable broadcast frequency. The conflict has still not been completely resolved, but the University has been granted 90.1 as a temporary frequency, to be used until agreement is reached.

WRUV-AM will continue to broadcast as before, as a closed-circuit station, on a frequency of 570 kilocycles.

A Generation In Revolt

By Louis Blumenfeld

President Shannon McCune, speaking at the opening session of Hillel House Discussion Series, introduced the semester's topic, "A Generation In Revolt." In his short introductory speech on Sunday, October 3, President McCune cited the recent Berkeley revolt as the underlying factor for current interest in this topic while commenting on the need for revolt and the causes of it.

In opening, President McCune noted that revolt has long been an American tradition. He reminded us that our nation was founded through revolution and that revolution is often necessary to bring about change.

President McCune mentioned a second form of revolution which has been traditional, not only in this country, but in others as well; that is, the "youth revolt tradition."

Extreme acts, such as revolt, may be necessary to bring changes, and change, he stated, should not be feared. He stressed change in reference to UVM and to Vermont. He illustrated the Vermont attitude of fear with a short anecdote about the Vermont Legislature: In a discussion concerning educational television, one representative stated that "educational television is bad because new ideas might come into Vermont."

Youth revolution is constantly taking place. It is a constant fight against old, traditional things such as family, authority and ideals. The revolt against ideals was particularly stressed. Students, upon entering college, often find that what they have previously believed, no longer seems valid. The result, President McCune suggested, is a tearing down of beliefs without a replacing of them.

The main difficulties arising between students and faculty center around this loss of beliefs and the faculty's failure to help in replacement. There is, said he, "no desire on the part of the University to help students find themselves." This lack of desire may well stem from an absence of unity among university faculty members.

At one time all faculty members held a common loyalty to the university as a singular institution. Today, however, there is a breakdown into individual fields of study, thus breaking the unanimity of the university into departments with faculty members owing allegiance to their respective fields of study.

The loss of unity is a great loss to the student, for upon revolting against old beliefs, the college student has no one to help him reconstitute them. In President McCune's words, "I am convinced that the college must do something about helping the student achieve a sense of identity Indifference is to be worried about A college is not doing its duty when it spends its time tearing down a student's beliefs without reconstituting them."

Proper university action will not stop revolts like Berkeley's, but it can channel them in the proper direction, toward reaffirming and reconstituting the students' beliefs.

President McCune concluded with what might be construed as an invitation to revolt, but with a note of warning. "Often students revolt against the wrong thing at the wrong time. . . ." he warned, but there are "many things that students should revolt on."

Win $3500 For Best Drawing

The Saint Paul Art Center, 30 E. Tenth Street, Saint Paul, Minnesota, announces the presentation of its 3rd biennial competition, DRAWINGS, USA. The Show is scheduled for the spring of 1966 and will be open to all artists living in the United States.

A prominent jury will select the show from the competition. It is anticipated that artists throughout the country will participate. Thirty-five hundred dollars ($3500) in purchases and awards will be given. Entries must be delivered to the Saint Paul Art Center by January 20, 1966. Jurying will take place in February and the Exhibition will be previewed at the Saint Paul Art Center on 6 April remaining in view until June. Approximately seventy-five (75) items from the show will be chosen for a traveling exhibit following its close at the Saint Paul Art Center.

More than four thousand entries were submitted to the Second Biennial Show in 1963 from all states, from which 239 pieces were chosen for exhibit by the Center. Seventeen (17) pieces were purchased for its permanent collection including works by such well known artists as Abraham Rattner, Fritz Glarner, Byron Burford and Anton Refregier. These pieces formed the nucleus of an exhibit organized and circulated by the Center to museums and galleries throughout the United States.

During the period 1950-66, The Saint Paul Art Center established an outstanding reputation for its work in the Craft Field. Its biennial competition, Fiber-Clay-Metal, became the country's foremost National Craft Competition. Twice during this period the Saint Paul Art Center was selected by the United States Information Agency to assemble a comprehensive exhibition of American Crafts to tour Europe and the Far East. The Exhibitions, now returned, were enthusiastically received in countries on both sides of the Iron Curtain. One exhibition was the U.S. entry in the International Craft Exhibition in Florence, Italy in 1962. The Drawing Biennial alternates with the Craft Biennial.

DRAWINGS USA originated as a result of the great interest in drawings as well as the renewed understanding of the possibilities and importance of the disciplines of this medium. Art Center Director, Malcolm E. Lein said, "This Biennial National Exhibition was started in the hope that it would help re-establish the importance of a vital art media. It found enthusiastic response among the nation's artists and gave striking evidence of their vitality and skill. In the tremendous Renaissance of interest in the arts today, drawing is the 'avant-garde.' Mr. Lein also announced that William E. Woolfenden, Director, the Archives of American Art, will serve again as Technical Consultant and Advisor for the Exhibition.

The echos of bagpipes and drums played by plaid-garbed soldiers will reverberate in Patrick Gymnasium this coming Monday. The spectacle will be presented by The Royal Marine Tattoo, which includes two marching bands of the Royal Marines, the Massed Pipes, Drums, and Dancers of the Scots Guards and Royal Scots Greys, and the British Highland Lassie Dancers. The military entertainment provided by the 180 member tattoo will be the largest and most varied of any comparable company ever presented on the East Coast. It is essentially the same company that will appear at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland next summer.

The Royal Marine Bands, under the direction of Lieutenant Colonel F. Vivian Dunn, are renowned military bands. The bands have been seen and heard extensively in England and Europe,

Danforth Fellowships To Be Given

Inquiries about the Danforth Graduate Fellowships, to be awarded in March, 1966, are invited, according to Dean, W.H. Macmillan, Graduate College, the local campus representative.

The Fellowships, offered by the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Missouri, are open to men and women who are seniors or recent graduates of accredited colleges in the United States, who have serious interest in college teaching as a career, and who plan to study for a Ph.D. in a field common to the undergraduate college. Applicants may be single or married, must be less than thirty years of age at the time of application, and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

Approximately 120 Fellowships will be awarded in March, 1966. Candidates must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions. The Foundation does not accept direct applications for the Fellowships. Danforth Graduate Fellows are eligible for four years of financial assistance, with a maximum annual living stipend of $1800 for single Fellows and $2200 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are available. Financial need is not a condition for consideration.

Danforth Fellows may hold other fellowships such as Ford, Fulbright, National Science, Rhodes, Woodrow Wilson, etc., concurrently, and will be Danforth Fellows without stipend until the other awards lapse.

The Danforth Foundation, one of the nation's 10 largest educational Foundations, was founded in 1927 by the late William H. Danforth, St. Louis businessman and philanthropist. The Foundation's primary aim is to strengthen liberal education through programs of fellowships and workshops, and through grants to colleges, universities and other educational agencies.

ROYAL MARINES PERFORM AT PATRICK

but never before in the United States. The Massed Pipes and Drums of the Scots Greys represent the traditional kilted Scottish band at its finest. Under the sponsorship of Columbia Festivals, Inc., recently responsible for the presentation of the famous Lipizaner Stallions of the Spanish Riding School of Vienna, the Tattoo is being produced and directed by "Mr. Tattoo" himself, Brigadier Alastair Maclean, director of the Tattoos at the Edinburgh Festivals.

The Tattoo made its first appearance in Toronto on September 16. Engagements in Montreal, Troy, and Philadelphia followed. The Tattoo is coming to Burlington directly from its ten day, fourteen performance appearance at Madison Square Garden in New York. Thereafter, it will tour forty cities concluding its U.S. tour in December.

The word tattoo causes some confusion since most Americans think of it as a design or en-signia which is incised onto the skin by needle. The word in British military language is supposed to have originated during the period when British troops were serving in Europe a couple of centuries ago. In order to get the troops out of wineshops at a reasonable hour at night, a special bugle was blown, known as the "tapoe," meaning "tape off." Somehow the great military spectacle it now means has evolved and has its own special meaning in Britain.

The Royal Marines Tattoo should be an entertainment of "one in a lifetime" proportions. Tickets can be obtained in the Lane Series office, Room 54 Waterman.

Student Life Committee Reports

By Dick Matheson

The Student Life Committee, a standing committee of the University Senate, studies student life and activities and reports its findings and recommendations to the Senate.

Last year the Student Life Committee was assigned the study of the student health service's efficiency and competence. The committee decided that the infirmary was very effective within its capacity but was hampered by limited funds and personnel. It recommended that a visitation committee, from the American College Health Association be requested to make a further professional survey.

Members of the committee include a representative from the faculty of each college; the personnel Deans, Dean Patzer, and Dean Harris are ex-officio members. Mr. Christensen of the College of Education and Nursing and Chairman of the Men's Physical Education Department is Chairman of the Student Life Committee.

Mr. Christensen said that the committee primarily focused on non-academic aspects of student life. Because discussions often concern students' recreational and religious habits and opportunities, the Director of Student Activities, Mr. Speas, and the Consultant on Religious Programs, Dr. Sadler, sometimes assume active roles in the committee.

The committee, which normally meets at least once every two weeks, will soon hold its first meeting of the year to study and discuss the intra-mural and intercollegiate athletic programs.

According to Mr. Christensen, the members of the committee do take a sincere, personal interest in student affairs. He noted that there were actually very few student complaints and said he thought that UVM students were quite satisfied with the student organizations that they now have: the fraternity and sorority systems, a growing independent system, SCOPE, the Lane Series, and the Student Association Senate, providing examples.

The members of the Student Life Committee would like to talk with students so that they can better recommend policy to the University Senate and the administration. It remains with the students to make known to individual faculty and committee members their opinions and feelings concerning specific situations on campus.

EDITORIAL...

Greek Week 1965 is a thing of the past now and there isn't too much that can be said about it that won't sound hackneyed and cliché-ridden. However, we feel that a few brief remarks are in order. In any case there is at least one standard question which we must answer -- was it a success?

The answer is in your outlook, in your definition of the term. If you think of it in more personal terms and bring the question down to an individual fraternity or sorority level then the answer is simple. It will depend entirely upon which house you are in, who your date was, etc. But, if by success what is meant is the achievement of a unifying effect and the lessening of any existing friction between houses then there is only one answer we can give. This is our definition, and our answer, within an interfraternity context, is yes, but with one qualification the weekend was a success to the extent that it constituted a first step in this positive direction. As we have said, however, Greek Week 1965 is a thing of the past and this is where the problem arises. If the weekend must be forgotten the spirit of Greek Week (pardon the cliché) must not. If we are not careful, this spirit may attain the status of a New Year's resolution, and the nominal interfraternism which has arisen out of the weekend's excitement and enthusiasm may easily be forgotten as rushing resumes this week.

The fact is that true interfraternism is not an event that happens in one weekend and is finished. It is, rather an ongoing process, and what is needed is a conscious effort at its perpetuation. What sort of conscious effort? Some suggestions, if we may:

Why not have exchange banquets once a month instead of once a year?

Why not have fraternity and sorority workshops more often?

Why not arrange joint parties with houses you are not so close with and do not know that well?

And finally, why not invite the presidents of other houses as after-dinner speakers?

These are a few of our suggestions. Accept them or reject them as you like. But if you reject them, replace them with ideas of your own. This is your show; you take it from here.

And so ends a Greek Week for the most part profitably spent. It was a week not without its problems. But these problems have been settled admirably and maturely within the IFC, and should not be allowed to overshadow the positive effects of the week's activities. These activities both strengthened interfraternal bonds and pointed out certain weaknesses in an otherwise formidable system. Congratulations to the Greek Week Committee and the Greek system on a job generally well done.

Letters To The Editor Shadows Cast

To the Editor:

With Greek Week past and Homecoming now upon us, this would be a good time to reflect upon Greek Week and its purposes. Many of the alumni returning for Homecoming will readily acknowledge the fact that they are here to visit the University of Vermont, but foremost they are here to visit their respective Greek houses. It is very difficult for an alumnus to return to the UVM campus and spend his time on the floor of a dormitory reliving the days when he was an undergraduate. The dormitory just does not hold the memories that a Greek house holds. The cold halls never were a home, only a place to live. Homecoming is a chance to return home, and the Greek houses were homes to hundreds of alumni during their college careers. One of the main purposes of Greek Week was to unite these homes in a stronger, more unified existence. It is indeed unfortunate that through the well planned, but ill chosen words of one man, much of what had previously been accomplished at Greek Week was destroyed.

Carl Lisman, a vice president of the IFC, was placed in a position of extreme importance. In an attempt to further the interests of his fraternity, he used the position of Master of Ceremonies of the Greek sing to his own benefit. As Phi Sigma Delta was about to perform, Mr. Lisman made a speech about the benefit of this fraternity. He did not praise the Greek system, he did not merely introduce a group about to perform, he rushed for his fraternity. It is disgraceful that he chose to say that Phi Sigma Delta was the best group to perform, even before they sang. It is equally as distasteful that he intimated that another fraternity was not going to win. This fraternity performed songs that were, to say the least, out of the ordinary, but which did entertain the audience if laughter is any criterion for judging entertainment. It is true that this fraternity did not have a chance to win, the members never intended to do so since music was never submitted to the judges. The fact is Mr. Lisman made it a point to degrade their performance and praise that of his own fraternity for obviously selfish reasons.

It is unfortunate that during Greek Week, the main purpose of which is to foster the Greek system and improve interfraternity relations, a man in a position of responsibility tried to better one house at the expense of the whole Greek system. Phi Sigma Delta did put on a good show, but it is disheartening that they allowed a brother of their fraternity, with his well prepared phrases, to destroy all that the sing and Greek Week could have accomplished.

Editor's Note:

It seems to us that this Lisman issue has been the subject of a disproportionate degree of concern. To imply premeditation is unfair. The fact is that we do not know what went through his mind, and we must, therefore, assume the man's integrity. To do other wise is to contradict the basic legal and moral tenet that a man is innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Carl Lisman has, in the past, spoken very well both for his school and for his fraternity. One mistake does not erase this fact. He finds himself, now, the victim of his own eloquence to the extent that even his extemporaneous remarks naturally sound well planned. It is our conviction that this man Lisman simply

THE SCEPTIC

Editor's Note:

Merry Andrews, who will be our Sceptic columnist for this academic year, is a member of the University Staff. A secretary for the Audio-Visual Staff, she is also an Evening Division Student.

merryandrews (staff)

In the beginning was the Word, and shortly after it, came Apathy. And right on the heels of the two of them, came the Sceptic to sneer at it all. And then there were Critics to bark at the Sceptics, who sneered at Apathetics, (who did nothing at all). And all together they chased one another about, like children with ribbons of a maypole; going in and out, and getting all tangled.

It went on for a good long while.

So now, ribbon in hand, we would like to introduce ourself. We are a Sceptic. But we are only one in a long line of Sceptics, and like so many other things which come in long lines (notably kings, all-day suckers, and sausages) some are good and some are bad.

But it's fun to be a Sceptic. There's ever so much to write about. 'Cause we're such an awfully exciting generation. Well, we ought to admit here, we suppose, that we are not really of your generation. In face, we're a small grey old lady in a crocheted pink shawl, whom you may notice most any day pattering about this green and leafy campus. But our age doesn't matter, really, because we're young at heart. We are well-read like you, and we can Frug ('though it's beastly difficult with this shawl on). We read leftist periodicals and haven't missed an Ann Landers since the Depression. We went to Berkeley in the riot season, and 'though we actually got stranded on a trolley car in San Francisco and never got near the campus, it's just the being there that counts, don't you think?

You don't think? Well, it's not important, really. After all, action, not thought, is the keynote these days. And you're just full of action. Buzzing, moving, all the time. Sometimes, even, your pace is so dazzling that we think we cannot possibly keep up. But when that happens, we just pull on our CPO jacket and Courreges boots, and try again. To keep up. And we do.

Because it's fun. To be a Sceptic.

Especially in these trying times. In the old days, of course, one had very little to be Sceptical about. The parking problem, theft from the library, Sociology teachers, and dear old Uncle Apathy; how much, after all, can one say about these things? But today, beloved generation, there are such intriguing things to discuss. Like drinking. We might as well start there.

You cannot drink in a University residence. We can, because all we ever drink is milk. But you cannot. You may drink in your autos. You may guzzle in your gutters. You may drive several hundred miles on rainy nights to drink in somebody else's state. But you may not drink where you live.

We did not know this last year. We often went to certain of those brotherly Greek organizations, and were quite sure we saw people drinking things, in their very own rooms. But perhaps it was just some Canada Dry promotional stunt - putting ginger ale into Budweiser cans for the fun of it. Or something. Because this sober law has existed here for a good long while. And this year it seems it's been dug out from the cobwebs that covered it, and rejuvenated by our brand new president. Which seems rather un-irish of him, considering his name. But he did it anyway.

So where does this leave you? It leaves you on Homecoming weekend wondering how thirsty you're going to be. Or wondering if your date is going to appreciate those forty-seven trips to the auto during the party. Or wondering if perhaps, since Greek Week seemed just a bit damp, the Powers That Be might not ignore the rule a bit longer?

But what could you do, if said rule happens to be enforced? (We know, after all, that when you make something illegal, it stops.)

Well, you might empty the contents of two cases of ginger ale, refill the bottles with champagne, and tidily re-cap them. Which could run into a bit of money. But you don't care.

Or you could borrow a hypodermic needle from a local dope fiend (if, indeed, you could find one) and inject a bushel of apples with vodka; then spend the evening chewing to the core.

Or you could leave the party every twelve minutes and putter on down to your neighborhood bar, enjoying the way of white line in the middle of the road begins late in the evening to wrap itself fondly around the trees by the sidewalk; how after a while your car wraps itself around them too.

But enough said. May you have a happy Homecoming. And after all, some good could come of all this. If they're going to play that game, you could play one of your own, and begin making bathtub gin, as in the good old days. You wouldn't, after all, be bringing anything into the place. (Well, gosh, Mister President, it just grew there!)

There is yet hope.

The annual antics of a gruelling Greek Week have come again passed this time with no charging chariot casualties. No cases of teeth, hair and eyes spread about the playground. The Romans wouldn't lend us any lions this year.

Did you know that it is weekly doings such as these that keeps our campus supplied with more "Queens" than can be found at any other small point on the globe? Isn't it nice to know that we have most of the queens right here at UVM? We do. Girls, if you would like to become a "Queen" here is what you must do. First, start dating a fraternity man (note: large frats control the polls). Second, you probably should sprinkle on Q G if your hair is short or buy a hair piece because most of our queens have had long hair. Third, if you look like you got molested by a freight train at age three, plastic surgery can be arranged for at our famous medical center. Fourth, flirt with the fraternity President and last, vote for yourselves girls, no charity or no crown. Now that the secrets are out, stand by for more queens. The independents will soon have a queen also because all Greeks will be excluded from independent voting grounds.

Let's throw a real show for Homecoming. More queens, more parties, and more meat for tongue in cheek writers. Let no one forget that the true test of a Queen is the girl with the biggest and most sincere smile when she didn't win the contest.

"To live he must 'belong,' to 'belong,' he must be able to locate himself in the larger social whole, to identify himself to himself and others."

- Will Herberg

Who am I? What am I? What am I doing here? Who are these people and what are they like? Whether we come from a small Vermont town or the corner of 45th and 5th Avenue, almost all of us soon realize that for the first time we are called upon to find our identity in a society made up of people whom we have never seen before. Some of us retreat from the challenge - make only a few friends and spend four years here just eating, sleeping, and studying and never getting to know anything about the University itself or the people within it. The others, who realize that adaptation to a different society and different people is a part of maturing, soon try to find some way to just getting to know people and make friends. Probably one of the best means of finding our identity is through membership in a fraternity.

The most obvious advantage of the fraternity lies in the social life it provides. The house parties, without a doubt, are often expressions of the release of tensions from constant studying and anxiety over grades or marks. But to the incoming freshman this seems to be the only advantage. Many do not realize that parties are not the only function which the house provides. Often activities such as the exchange banquets and workshops during Greek Week, the pledge teas, the workings of the IFC, and taking part in occasional community projects are not publicized as being a part of fraternity life. All of these functions bring us into greater contact with a number of different individuals, permitting us to get to know them and to exchange our ideas with others. They not only help us mature, but also help fulfill the realization of identity which all of us need to live.

Friendship among girls in the dorms is almost spontaneous. Within a week, a freshman girl may not only know 90% of the other girls on her floor, but also learn these girls' boyfriends, the clothes they have, and the amount of emphasis they put on dates. But with the boys it's a different matter. By the end of the semester, many of them hardly know half of the guys on their floor and will still be looking at the list next to the telephono to find someone's name. The friends that they initially make are often confined to the people they met in high school or through participating in a competitive sport. Many lack the aggressiveness needed to make friends and to find their own identity in themselves and

Dear All,

The season of Homecoming and its "pinnings" is here again. The King and Queen will take their thrones and begin their joyful reign. However, this does not mean that the rest of us must remain "uncrowned"; there are many different ways of becoming a queen.

This is exemplified by Larry Miller, '66, of Alpha Epsilon Pi on his lavaliering of Anne Knopping of Brookline, Mass. (Boston University '68) Alpha Epsilon Pi has also brought honor to Betty Fuchs, '66, by her pinning to Marty Welt, '65.

Best Wishes go to Phi Sigma Delta on Mike Sherman's, '66, pinning of Ronnie Brambler, '67 of Alpha Epsilon Phi and on Bernie Zaccaro's, '66, pinning of Phyllis Incorvia of Malverne, N.Y.

Marital bliss will keep the following couples enthroned forever. The marriages include:

Delta Psi -- John Fox and Linda Kyke; Don Burgess and Andy Poloski; Dick Whittier and Judy Ogando; Bob Bellisle and Sandy Murray of Kappa Alpha Theta, '65.

Alpha Chi Omega -- Andy Beebe, '66 and Richard Smith; Linda Riggs and David Abbott of Burlington, Vermont.

Alpha Epsilon Phi -- Merry Schron, '66 and Bill Likosky, UVM Medical School; Esta Smith, '66 and Jay Feinsod of Port Chester, N.Y.; Merry Rogers, '65 and Jack Kaplan of Rockville, Center, N.Y.

May you all have a happy and memorable Homecoming Week-end.

Living In Aix-En-Provence

Editor's Note:

Carolyn Seigel, a student at UVM and a past CYNIC News and Feature Editor, is spending her junior year in France. Carolyn will be sending us her impressions of her new home during the weeks to come.

Aix-En-Provence, France and Burlington, Vermont are two different cities in two different countries, with two seemingly different cultures, yet sometimes the similarities that I've noticed between the two amaze me. At first glance, Aix has an interesting combination of very old and formal looking buildings (e.g. the museums and cathedrals), of very new and modern buildings (e.g. the dormitories and buildings of the new part of the University), and of very dirty or slummy-looking buildings (e.g. those in the center of town). This last group, which reminds me of houses on the lower East Side of Manhattan or in Winooski or N. Burlington, has one distinguishing characteristic -- many of them surround courtyards which are filled with very beautiful gardens. All the newer, more modern buildings are outside the city walls, because that is the only way that Aix can retain its tremendously historical atmosphere. Of course, there are old but very magnificent mansions out of town, but these are being renovated now, and are quite comfortable on the inside.

Aix could be the most charming and picturesque city I have ever been in. It is replete with winding, narrow, cobble-stone streets, tiny antique stores, and very fresh Spanish-looking Frenchmen. The main street is called the Cours Mirabeau, and is as wide as two Main Streets would be in Burlington. It is lined with trees and cafes from end to end. What is more, Aix is famous as the city of fountains, and has more than its share of cathedrals, museums, and Roman ruins. Of course, it is a good deal more than this, but that is hard to explain.

My residence is on the outskirts of town on Rte. de Berre. I live on the fifth floor of a modern apartment house (i.e. modern for Southern France), with a family and another girl from the program. It is a five room apartment, distributed this way: I have my own room, my house-mate has her own room, the mother has hers, the daughter sleeps in the living room, on a couch. There is also a small kitchen, a W.C. (water closet, or toilet), and a room with a sink and a European type of shower. There is a terrace, too. We are fortunate to have hot and cold running water, instead of cold and cold, but when the winter comes, we will be at a loss, since there is no central heating system here. My room is a little bigger than a single in any UVM dorm. I have a huge bed, a fairly big dresser, a good-sized desk, a monster closet, with a full length mirror, a shelf for my shoes, and a secret drawer, and a night table next to my bed. Also, there is a big window, which provides a tremendous view of the mountains and the main cathedral in town. It is beautifully decorated, as is the rest of the apartment.

The family is very warm and hospitable and can't seem to do enough for us. The girl is nineteen years old and has just received her baccalaureat. Last night she took us to a party with her friends which, needless to say, was quite an experience. All the people were as old as college Freshmen, some Sophomores, and this Junior, yet have two more years to go before they begin work at the University. They all speak German besides their French, and most speak a little English. Their evening consisted of first drinking and eating, then rolling up the rug, and dancing, etc. They all love rock 'n roll, and like almost every other group better than the Beatles. The most popular dance here is the bop, sometimes called Le Rock, popular in the States a few years ago as the Lindy.

So far, I have found that the moral standards here are quite different from those in the United States, and especially from those at UVM. Families tend to be much more strict with their children, and keep a close eye on them until they are about eighteen. The classes at the University don't start until the end of October, so I don't know what happens after a French adolescent turns twenty or so. In Aix, a boy does not come to the girl's house to pick her up. Instead, they meet at a cafe, and the girl almost always pays her own way. If a boy does come to the house to get the girl, it is understood that he is just a friend, with no romantic interests, or else that he is engaged to the girl. By the way, my family speaks no English, and the other girl here has never had any French, so besides speaking for myself, I must also act as an interpreter.

Orientation to academic and family life has been going on for 3 days, and is as typical a program as is possible. Tomorrow is the first day of class for us, but on or about October 20, we have to start attending classes at the University of Aix-Marseille, enrollment 18,000. We have an extremely strict and rigid set of rules regarding attendance, exams, and papers, and must sign out at the university if we are not sleeping at our family's house over night. Next weekend the whole group is going to Nice, Cannes, and St. Tropez and the weekend after to Marseille, which is only 25 minutes from here. I think the Institute planned these trips for us so we wouldn't go crazy here, since there isn't very much to do at night. They stop the weekend the European students come to Aix.

The similarities to Burlington will come in my next letter, as will observations and information about courses, and the general life of a student, both academic and otherwise. If anyone has any questions about Aix or the Junior Year Abroad Program, please write to me, c/o Institute for American Universities, 2 bis, Rue due Bon Pasteur, Aix-En-Provence, France. I will send a bulletin to the Dean's office for anyone who might be interested in applying. I can't tell you what a fantastic experience it has been so far, in the meantime, good luck to the football team!

Student Law

UVM's Student Law Association began its second year with a guest speaker and the introduction of an additional advisor for the club.

The guest speaker, Mr. Leon Latham, graduate of UVM and Boston University law school, spoke on the college courses which he considered important to pre-law students, specialties in the field of law, and the value of a law degree in getting jobs in other fields. He encouraged questions.

At the beginning of the meeting, Mr. Best of the Political Science Department was introduced to the group. Accepting Student Law's invitation to become one of its advisors, he gave his ideas of what such an organization should do. He stressed the importance of keeping Vermont students informed about law schools through the availability of their catalogues in the SLA office. He suggested also, that the organization sponsor visits to Family Court and to some of the local penal institutions.

It was announced that in the near future the organization would sponsor a talk by the dean of Maine's law school, one by a member of the FBI, and several films. At the next meeting Mr. Joe Wool, a Burlington Lawyer, will speak on Trial Law. The meeting will be Tuesday, Oct. 12, at 7:30 in Marsh Lounge, Billings. All interested students are invited to attend.

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director UVM Placement Service

"More UVM Grads, Qualified To Teach, Staying 'In Vermont'" (Reprinted from The Burlington Free Press, September 10, 1965, Page 15). The number of University of Vermont graduating teachers who choose to teach in Vermont has increased in each of the past two years, says Dr. Thomas C. King, Dean of UVM's College of Education and Nursing. King said there also has been an increase in the number of graduates qualified for certification and accepting teaching positions. The figures are based on the number of students who are placed through the student placement office in the year following graduation. King cited regionalization of schools and improvement in salaries as primary reasons for the increased numbers electing to teach in Vermont in preference to taking jobs in other states.

In 1963, the University graduated 98 students qualified for teaching certification; 67 of these accepted teaching positions in the fall of 1963; 26 accepted teaching positions in Vermont. In 1964, the number of graduates qualified for teaching certification increased slightly to 102; 76 of these accepted teaching posts; 35 of them in Vermont. In May 1965, the number of graduates qualified for teaching certification increased to 113; the number accepting teaching positions increased to 102; and the number electing to teach in Vermont increased to 64.

Dean King said the figures are "all the more significant in view of the increasing competition for qualified teachers." The University of Vermont last year received notices of more than 10,000 teaching places open all over the country and particularly in the northeast. "We regularly have recruiters come from what are considered the best public school districts in the northeast," he said.

Douglas O. Hanau, director of placement for the university, said that figures compiled by Mrs. Margaret Muller, assistant in the placement office who handles teacher placement, show that typical beginning teacher salaries in Vermont are now between $4,500 and $5,000. Typical out-of-state beginning teacher salaries are between $5,000 and $5,500, a study shows. Not too long ago there was almost a $1,000 gap between Vermont teaching salaries and those offered beginning teachers in other states. The difference is now about $500.

Dean King said this improved salary picture, new buildings, equipment, new instructional materials, and increasing regionalization are improving Vermont's position in the competition for well-qualified teachers. "Regional schools do make a difference," he said. "There is just no doubt about it." Dean King said that many of the graduates qualified for teaching certification who do not accept teaching posts following graduation elect to do graduate work, military service, and entry into other careers also account for some qualified teachers.

Outing Club Canoes

By Bob Smith

This past weekend twenty members of the Outing Club represented our school at an IOCA (Intercollegiate Outing Club Association) canoe trip on Lake George.

We spent the weekend on Turtle Island, two miles from Bolton Landing. Most of us paddled out Friday night, and the rest arrived early Saturday afternoon.

Over 500 students camped on the island, having come from colleges from Montreal to Virginia. Outing clubs from Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale, Cornell, Columbia, Vassar, Radcliffe, Smith, Wellesley, and many others attended the weekend sponsored by the R.P.I. Outing Club.

Saturday was perfect for canoeing as Lake George was smooth and the sky clear. The lake was dotted with canoes on excursions. Seven from our group paddled four miles down the lake to picnic at a spectacular waterfall. More ambitious paddlers made an eighteen mile round trip, including an eight mile climb to the top of Black Mountain. A few of our members joined other clubs in climbing Deer Leap, a 300-foot cliff rising from the shore.

There was a square dance Saturday night on a nearby island. A generator supplied power for lights and a public address system. Following the dance people gathered at folk sings on Turtle Island, where some talented pickers and singers entertained.

The lake was quite rough Sunday, and a light rain fell. Nevertheless, we left about eleven to paddle back to the mainland. It was rough going but everyone made it safely. Motorboats ferried the rest of the campers back to Bolton Landing.

others. The fraternity, through its social activities and its essential aim - brotherhood - is often able to fulfill this need. The pledge gets to know the boys in the House and they take an interest in him as a pledge and prospective brother. He realizes that there is an ideal and spirit common to the brothers of the different houses and that the houses consist of people just like himself, with aspirations and goals similar to his own. He is able to exchange his ideas and experiences with others, to obtain help when he needs it, and to become a part of the society called a university. The fraternity life has not only helped him toward cultural and intellectual maturity, but has led him to an identity with self and others. CATS DOWNED BY MAINE 35-6 UP FOR WIN OVER URI Enthusiasm is the key word around a new and re-vitalized UVM campus this year. The indifference and apathy of past years that had differentiated the UVM student from Joe violence, has disappeared from sight; or has it.

As one walked about the campus Saturday and Sunday, a re-occurrence of defeatism was again evident. People were discussing next year's football team and hopeful attitudes towards Greek Week '66. This optimism with reference to next year is encouraging but without merit unfortunately. Fire up UVM! The season is three games old and Greek competition is just beginning to say the least. Our football team molded by mainly inexperienced talent, was unable to cope with the of ----- DeVarney; but so have more experienced teams. The season is still young and there are still five big games to play and a chance for a Yankee Conference title. Coach Clifford and his fine staff has yet to call off practices after this initial setback, which is evidence of the fact that there is still hope. Our team can win and will win, but the enthusiasm that overran our campus for the first 4 weeks of school should not be diminished; on the contrary, it should be heightened in recognition of a fine team effort by a crew of athletes with possibly the brightest future on campus.

On another front, look out for the 1965 UVM basketball team. Helped by an increase in scholarships, a new coach and sheer determination, our boys are getting into shape daily by running, lifting weights and of course playing basketball. Coach Arthur Lech is one of the best in the business and we hope from this corner, that his experience and know-how will lead the Catamount five to a successful season opening Dec. 1st at home against Dartmouth.

Finally, our acolyte of the month award to Charlie Catamount who has rejuvenated school spirit and enthusiasm at social functions, pep rallies and sports events. The lethargy that has been acquainted with this colorful figure has been expelled and forgotten and only new horizons stand in Charlie's way. Keep up the good work!

Cross Country And Soccer

Compete Away

The University of Vermont cross country and soccer teams traveled to New York State Wednesday (Oct. 6) for contests with RPI and Union.

Coach Archie Post's hill and dalers launched their season against RPI in Troy while, over in Schenectady, Hall Greig's undefeated soccer team shot for its third win, met the Dutchmen of Union.

Post is starting his 37th season at Vermont with only three lettermen among the eight men-out for the team, Capt. Walt Stowell, John Morse IV, and Sid Young return from last year's squad that was 3-3, including a three-point loss at the hands of the Engineers.

Joining the lettermen are Paul Aldinger, John Baker, Renier Chantreaux, Phillips Mord, and Peter Jones. Aldinger has been bothered by boils while Chantreaux, a junior, hasn't run cross country since high school.

A freshman race was also on tap.

Vermont and Union met for the first time in soccer and both preferred to start the new series with a victory.

The Catamounts own wins over Maine and Connecticut and offer a well-balanced scoring attack. Jeff Taft, Pete Baldwin and Dennis Linnehan have each scored two goals. Capt. Bill Willey and Bob Schroeder have been standouts defensively.

Union hoped the presence of 15 sophomores from last year's freshman club that won eight of nine matches would provide the necessary spark for the varsity to improve on its 2-7 record of a year ago.

Vermont returns to Yankee Conference competition Saturday morning, hosting the Rams of Rhode Island.

Team Leaders

Mike Burke of Rutland is the leading Vermont rusher after three games with 124 yards in 36 carries, according to statistics released Tuesday.

Second to Burke is veteran quarterback Scott Fitz with 114 yards in 12 carries. Fitz' average of 9.5 yards per carry leads the team. Dick Hebert of St. Albans has picked up 95 yards on 16 carries.

Fitz has completed 18 of 41 passes for 244 yards and one touchdown.

Chief targets of these passes have been ends Jack Schweberger and Jeff Kuhman. Schweberger has caught eight passes for 113 yards while Kuhman has snared seven passes for 115 yards. Hebert has grabbed six passes for 84 yards and two touchdowns.

Fitz and Burke are tied for the scoring lead with 18 points each. Hebert, Terry Lynn and Joe Soldano all have 12 points. Despite missing his first attempt of the season, Soldano remains one of the nation's top extra point kickers with 12 for 13.

All East center Rusty Brink leads the defensive statistics with 59 points after an outstanding performance at Maine. Brink has 12 unassisted tackles, 26 assisted tackles and also leads the team with three pass interceptions.

The Catamounts open a three-game homestand with a Homecoming contest against Rhode Island at 1:30 p.m. at Centennial Field.

BRINK Tops In YanCon

Vermont's All East center Rusty Brink, Maine's John Huard and Wayne Zdanowicz of Rhode Island have been named Yankee Conference players of the week following their outstanding gridiron performances last Saturday.

Brink played one of the finest games of his outstanding career in a losing cause at Maine, making seven unassisted tackles and 16 assisted tackles and intercepting a pass. Brink leads the Catamounts into a three-game homestand this Saturday with a Homecoming contest against Rhode Island.

Zdanowicz, the Rhode Island Rams' leading ground gainer, led his club to a Yankee Conference win over New Hampshire last week.

Huard was poison to the Catamounts at Orono, being a Tiger on defense and also intercepting two passes. He ran one of the interceptions back 86 yards before being tackled on the two-yard line.

By Bob Bloomenthal

The UVM football team tasted defeat for the first time this season when they ran into the hard-hitting Black Bears of Maine last Saturday. Although they trailed by only 7-6 at half-time, the Cats succumbed to the passing of Maine's brilliant quarterback Dick Devarney in the second half to lose by a 35-6 score.

Vermont started off on the right path when sophomore Don (Tuck) Nelson recovered a Maine fumble at midfield early in the first period. In just nine plays Scott Fitz directed the Cats to a touchdown. Senior backs Mike Burke and Terry Lynn ground out most of the yardage during the drive, but the final six yards were covered on a pass from Fitz to end Jack Schweberger.

The scoring catch for Schweberger marked the first pass of his career that he has caught for a touchdown. Joe (the Toe) Soldano's toe failed him on the conversion attempt for the first time in thirteen attempts this season, but Vermont led 6-0 with less than half the first period to play.

Later in the first quarter, however, Maine struck back when Devarney fired a 33-yard touchdown pass and after Maine's Pat Lovejoy kicked the extra point the Black Bears never were headed again. Devarney picked the UVM pass defense apart in the second half as he led his team to four touchdowns in the final two periods. For the day he had only thirteen completions out of 31 attempts, but they were good for 184 yards.

The Black Bear defense also played a big role in the Catamount defeat. UVM gained but 51 yards rushing for the day and almost half of these came on the touchdown drive. This failure of the running game was one of the causes for four interceptions of Catamount passes which led to Maine touchdowns.

For UVM, Burke was the leading ground gainer with 33 yards on eleven attempts. Capt. Rusty Brink played one of his greatest games on defense. He intercepted one pass and was in on 23 tackles. As one critic said, "Rusty had large press corps 'seeing' and believing' with the way he roamed all over to make tackles."

The win kept Maine undefeated and at the top of the Yankee Conference. They have now defeated the two conference teams which were supposed to give them the greatest difficulty, UMass and UVM.

Saturday, Vermont will be facing another undefeated Yankee Conference opponent in their Homecoming game. The Rhode Island Rams come to Centennial Field sporting a 3-0 record. The game is a must win for the Cats if they hope to stay in the Conference race, but the Rams need the win just as badly and are ready to provide stern opposition.

National Ballet To Perform

National Ballet

By Judy Beeber

Officially opening the 1965-66 Blue Lane Series Season will be one of America's most renowned ballet dance companies, the National Ballet. Its 60 member troupe will make its debut in Memorial Auditorium on Friday, Oct. 15.

The company will give two performances, one in the afternoon at 4:15 p.m. and one in the evening at 8:30 p.m. The afternoon performance will be part of the Lane Youth Concert which is made possible by the Lane Series Committee and by the Friends of Music, a group of women interested in bringing the best music and dance to the children of the community. The one hour matinee will include such famous ballets as "Con Amor," and portions of "Swan Lake."

The evening performance will be part of the regular Lane Series with the presentation of "Swan Lake," "Con Amore," and "Le Combat." The ballet "Swan Lake," which will be presented in an abbreviated form, is one of the best known and most beautiful ballets in the whole classical repertory. The music composed by Tchaikovsky, the romantic story of love and magic, the ensemble dances by the corps, the pas de deux, will all be essential parts in the production.

"Con Amore" is a fun ballet of two interwoven love stories, full of humorous and lively episodes, multicolored costumes, extravagant scenery, and striking dances, with music by Giacomo Rossini.

The third ballet, a new production by the National Ballet, is "Le Combat." The two scene ballet is based on Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered," the story of a pagan princess who is slain in a duel as a result of mistaken identity. The music is by Raffaillo de Banfield and the choreography is by William Dollar.

Director Frederic Franklin has been responsible for the combining of the artistry of world famous ballerinas and premier danseurs with a fresh, youthful corps de ballet. Franklin is not a newcomer in the Burlington area. He made his first appearance here 14 years ago when he danced with the famous Russian ballet dancer Alexandra Danilova in "A Streetcar Named Desire." In the summer of 1960, he returned once again to thrill audiences, but this time as the director of the Washington Ballet.

The National Ballet will feature such celebrated dancers as Claudine Kamoun, who is a favorite of ballet lovers in both Paris and London. She will be a prima ballerina and will dance the role of Clarinda, pagan princess in "Le Combat." Another internationally known dancer, Ivan Nagy, former member of the Hungarian State Opera House Ballet will be a premier danseur in the ballet. The silver medal winner in the 1965 International Ballet Competition, he received "Bravos" for his first U.S. performance at the Virginia Museum Theater in Richmond. Daniel Frank, who was formerly with the L'Opera de Paris, will be another premier danseur. He will be seen in "Swan Lake."

The National Ballet will come equipped with colorful scenery and costumes as well as a symphony orchestra. Ballet lovers and those who come for sheer entertainment cannot avoid profiting from watching the performance.

Humphrey Cancels Tuesday Talk

The University received word early Thursday that Vice President Humphrey would be unable to accept a UVM speaking date Tuesday, Oct. 19, in anticipation of which 8, 9 and 10 o'clock classes that day had been cancelled.

With word that the Vice President will be unable to appear, the classes have been rescheduled; Dean of Faculties Clinton D. Cook announced.

The CYNIC learned that Mr. Humphrey apparently will still come to Vermont for a political speech Monday evening at Rutland. But his daytime schedule calls for him to be in Washington until President Johnson is fully recovered from his operation.

The University had had tentative acceptance from Mr. Humphrey for an informal convocation at Ira Allen Chapel on Tuesday morning. That convocation is now cancelled and classes will be held on normal schedule.

Class Officers To Be Elected

By Robert Lampke

Students will have the opportunity to vote for the officers of their respective classes Friday, Oct. 22. It is hoped by this writer that much consideration will go into the selection of the class officers, because in a sense, they will be the leaders of your class and they will be in charge of planning and sponsoring events for your class throughout the year. In addition to this, the Senior Class Officers will also have the added responsibility of planning the Senior Week Activities, and special care should be taken here to elect officers who can and will do a really good job.

Those students who have not as of yet expressed a desire to run for office but who now feel interested in doing so, should sign a Candidate's Sign-Up Sheet at the S.A. Office in Billings; at the same time they should pick up a petition blank and four qualification cards. If the S.A. Office is closed during the weekend, a blank piece of paper with the candidate's name, class, and position desired will suffice.

Petitions should contain the signatures of at least 100 members of your class and must be turned in by 4:15 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 18, at the S.A. Office in Billings. Only those turning in petitions by this date will be allowed to run for office.

Campaign posters should not be up before 9 a.m. on Monday, Oct. 18, or after 7 a.m. on Thursday, Oct. 21. Posters should be no larger than 14" x 22" and should be displayed only on student approved bulletin boards.

Pictures of candidates will be taken Saturday afternoon the 19th of October at the Student Photography Service Office in lower Billings.

Voting will be Friday, Oct. 22, at Billings from 9-4, and arrangements are being made for voting at the evening meal at the Marsh, Simpson, Wright and Waterman dining areas. For further information call R. Lampke at ext. 343 or UN 4-9792.

Homecoming ... A Ball Had By All

King and Queen rule Homecoming Week.

(Credit: Davidson, SPS)

King Bob Williams, Queen Calista Chapman, and their court of Peter Meyer, Larry Hibbard, Phyllis Welly, and Pat Giardi, reigned over Homecoming, 1965, last Friday and Saturday. The royalty was announced Friday evening at the Homecoming Ball, where entertainment was furnished by the Chiffons and the Tymes.

Each fraternity and sorority erected a Homecoming poster, from which the judges chose winners Saturday morning. Judges Major Francis Mahoney, assistant professor of Military Science, Father Donald Boyer, pastor of St. Anslem's Chapel, and Mr. Charles Christensen, assistant professor of physical education, selected on the basis of originality, effect, and workmanship.

The results of the poster judging were announced Saturday afternoon at the football game. First place in the fraternity division went to Sigma Phi Epsilon, whose "UVM Spirit Puts Ram in a Stew" showed an immense witch with an educational cauldron; second place to Sigma Phi, whose three panel poster depicted the elements of the "Spirit of UVM - Friendship, Scholarship, Sportsmanship"; third place went to Delta Psi, Alpha Delta Pi, with an octopus depicting "Spirit Octopies UVM," won first prize for the sorority division, with Pi Beta Phi winning second place.

The halftime ceremonies at the game included also the awarding of a blanket. The prize was for the alumnus who traveled farthest to return to UVM for Homecoming. This award went to Bill Xiques, '61, who traveled from Midway Island in the South Pacific for the weekend.

After the game, (UVM 28 - URI 6) the several hundred returning alumni visited their sororities or fraternities or dormitories for open houses.

Royal Marines Thrill Crowd In Performance Monday

By K. Klonsky

One is used to thinking of an army as a means of waging war. However, the Royal Marines of Scotland have different ideas. It is doubtful that the Lane Series of the University of Vermont has ever had a more colorful and melodious spectacle than this brilliant Tattoo from the British Isles.

The Scots blazed their way through a wide variety of numbers. The capacity crowd was treated to drums, bugles, electrifying dancing, and precision marching. But, the highlights for most of the audience were the famous Scottish bagpipes and a band of such grandiose and powerful proportions that it could captivate the receptive gathering with Tchaicovsky and delight them with the Beatles.

Regardless of one's national background, it was hard indeed not to feel thrilled by this amassing of talent. The Royal Scots Greys, the Second Battalion Scots Guards, and the British Columbia Highland Lassies dazzled the audience with Scotch plaids and sword dances, and warmed them with the soulful chorus number, "Will Ye No Come Back Again."

The school and the general populace of Burlington are indebted to Mr. Jack Trevithick, eminent Lane Series Executive Secretary, for managing to entice this exciting Lane Series extra to UVM. With British reserve, one can say of this musical army that the show fared rather well.

Vietnam Debate

By Robin Frost

An interesting and timely debate will be presented in Ira Allen Chapel Sunday, Oct. 17, at 7:00 p.m., when two students from Cambridge University, England and two University of Vermont debaters will argue the question "Should the United States get out of Vietnam?" The two two-man teams will each consist of one student from Cambridge and one from UVM. One team will support the affirmative side of the issue and the other will defend the negative. There is no admission charge, and the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club invites all interested UVM students, faculty, and Burlington townspeople to attend.

The Cambridge debaters are John Davies, 24, and Norman Lamont, 23. Davies attended Dynevor County Grammar School in Swansea, South Wales, and has his bachelor of Arts degree in Economics and Sociology from Cambridge. Offices he has held include President of the Emmanuel Debating Society, Vice President of the Cambridge Union, and President of the Cambridge Union Society. In addition, he has been a member of the Cambridge University United Nations Association and has been active in amateur dramatics. Davies' chosen career is university lecturer in sociology.

Norman Lamont attended Loretto School in Musselburgh, Midlothian. From Cambridge he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in Economics and intends to go into politics and journalism. He has been President of the Cambridge Union, Chairman of the Cambridge University Conservative Association, Editor of the "New Radical," and member of the English delegation to the Christian Democrat Student Conference at Eicholz, Germany, the Royal Overseas League, and the United Nations Association.

Representing UVM will be seniors Norman Snow and David Webster. Both Snow and Webster attended Burlington High School and live in Burlington.

Snow, who is working for his Bachelor of Arts degree in Political Science and Pre-med, intends to become a medical doctor. He is President of the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club and is Second Vice President of Delta Sigma Rho — Tau Kappa Alpha, the national honorary debate sorority fraternity. At the National Debate Tournament at West Point last year, he was fourth best debater in the United States, one of many high honors he has received across the country.

David Webster has a Pre-law curriculum and will receive his Bachelor of Arts in Political Science. After graduation he will go on to law school. Webster has been Drum Major and Treasurer for the UVM band. He is also Treasurer of the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club and Vice-President of the UVM Chapter of DSR-TKA.

Burlington is only one of many stops on the tour of the two Cambridge debaters. The tour was arranged by the Committee on International Discussion and Debate of the Speech Association of America, of which Dr. Robert Huber, chairman of the University of Vermont speech dept. and debate coach, is a member. Davies and Lamont will cover a good portion of the United States, from Maine to North Carolina and from Massachusetts to Ohio. The pair can present pro or con arguments on a wide variety of topics.

European influences will bring new aspects of the Vietnam issue to light in the debate this Sunday.

Technical Employment Program For Engineers

On Monday evening, October 18, in Votey Auditorium at 8:00 P.M. AIEE, ASME, ASCE, and ACS in conjunction with the University Placement Service is presenting a program whose subject matter will be of interest to all Technology students on The Technical Employment Interview. Each society under the direction of Steve Jones, President AIEE, Henry Pitaniello, President ASME, Ira Allen, President ASCE, and Joyce Fleury, President ACS has set up committees to handle publicity, reception, and evaluation of the program. A dinner for the guest speakers will be held in the President's dining room. Ira Allen will act as master of ceremonies. In talking with Mr. Hanau, Director of Placement, he echoes the sentiments of the society presidents, "I sincerely hope that as many Sophomore and Freshman Technology students will attend as possible since part of the discussion will center on interviewing for summer employment."

Following is a brief biography of the speakers and panelists:

Mr. Edward L. Austin, Jr., Manager Recruiting, International Business Machines, Essex Junction, Vermont. Subject: "Preparing For and Taking the Campus Screening Interview."

Mr. Austin graduated from the University of Vermont in 1957 with a degree in commerce and economics. In the fall of the same year he joined the International Business Machines Corporation and was assigned to their brand new plant location in Essex Junction. His first assignment was as an expeditor. He then completed a six months training program in manufacturing, spent some months with purchasing, and joined the personnel department in 1961 as an interviewer. Ned passed through various staff positions and was appointed to his present job in December 1964. He has recruited at his Alma Mater for a number of years, has a family, and makes his home in Burlington.

Mr. Robert W. Brocksbank, Manager Recruiting, Socony Mobil Oil Company, Inc., New York City. Subject: "The In Plant Technical Interview."

Mr. Brocksbank graduated from Drexel Institute with a B.S. in commerce in 1947. During World War II he was in the Marine Corps and in 1961 retired as Major in the Marine Corps Reserve. He joined Mobil at the Paulsboro (N.J.) Refinery in 1947. Some of his assignments included Laboratory technician, job analyst and assistant employee relations manager. In 1957 he was transferred to New York headquarters. He is married, has three daughters, and his home is at "Happy Hollow" near Princeton, New Jersey. On September 1, he was promoted from Manager College Recruiting to Manager of all recruiting for Socony. Although he has been responsible for Socony recruiting at the University of Vermont for a number of years, this is Brocks' first visit to the campus.

Mr. Douglas O. Hanau, Director of Placement, Panel Moderator.

Mr. Hanau performed his undergraduate and graduate studies at Middlebury College and Colgate University respectively. From 1954-1956 he served on active duty as a photographer in the U.S. Navy. His personnel experience includes three years as Headquarters Personnel Supervisor for the New York Office of Union Bag-Camp Paper Corporation and one year as Technical Employment Representative for Bell Telephone Laboratories. In June 1962, he joined UVM as Director of Placement. He is married, has four children, and resides in Essex

Piano Concert To Be Given

Miss Imelda Delgado, who teaches Piano and Survey of Music Literature at the University, will give a piano concert on Wednesday, Oct. 27, at 8:30 p.m. She will play the "Partita in D major" by Bach, the "B minor Sonata" by Chopin, "Improvisations" by Bartok, two pieces by Ravel and Debussy, and a toccata by Prokofiev.

This is Miss Delgado's second year here. Presently completing work for her doctorate, she earned her bachelor's degree at the University of Texas and received her master's from Indiana University where she taught as a graduate assistant. She was an instructor at Stevens College for two years before coming to UVM. Her degrees were in Music Performance (piano). When asked about her instruction, she named Sydney Foster, famous American pianist, as her "most inspiring teacher."

She has given recitals in Mexico as well as in the United States. She has been soloist in New Mexico with the Albuquerque Symphony and with the Corpus Christi Symphony, conducted by Jacques Singer.

EDITORIAL...

It seems that everyone needs and wants money; UVM is no exception. Here, however, we have a unique organization which supposedly dispenses money merely for the asking. This is the Kake Walk Dispositions Committee. For many of you this will be the first time that you have heard this committee mentioned; for others it means just as little. Yet, what is this committee, of whom is it comprised, and what are its goals and functions?

To begin with Kake Walk Dispositions: is a sub-committee of the IFC. The chairman of the committee is chosen from the previous year's IFC Vice Presidents. There are 5 other members (The SA Treasurer, an Independent, a WSGA representative, an IFC representative, and the Kake Walk Financial Director). Each has one vote and new committee members are chosen each year. There is also an advisor from the faculty.

The money which this committee handles is the profits of the Kake Walk Winter Carnival weekend. This money, however, becomes entirely independent of the Kake Walk committee. The Dispositions Committee makes it known to all organizations and departments on campus that they may requisition for any amount of money and for any reason whatsoever. This past year, $15,000 worth of requests were made for $8,000 in Kake Walk profits.

There are no precedents in this committee. In other words, if an organization doesn't receive money one year, there is no reason theoretically why it can't receive it the next year. The committee can do whatever it wishes with the money; it does not even have to be given to the organization requesting it.

This last part bothers us. We know for a fact that many of the organizations (approximately 1/3) requesting money did not receive any money at all. They were deemed unworthy. The rest all received reduced amounts except for two, one of which was the Library which received an outright gift of $1,000. When the committee was finished dispatching money to the so called deserving organizations on campus, $500 remained: it was given as an outright gift to a local charity which shall remain anonymous, thus trying to project a better image of IFC and its system to the Burlington community. This is all well and good, but at the risk of sounding mean and mercenary, should not IFC, through Kake Walk Dispositions, have tried to improve itself and its position at UVM before venturing into the outside community? These organizations which requested money (or why else should they have bothered to ask for it)? Was the idea of these requests just a game and a farcical waste of time to the Kake Walk Disposition Committee?

If Dispositions did not see fit to give money to these organizations which requested it, shouldn't they have used it to better UVM in some other manner? After all, doesn't charity begin at home? There are many areas of UVM needing money which cannot be gotten from the state. Why give it to an outsider which is most likely state supported anyway.

This money could have been used to complete the job on the new green, to aid the parking situation, to reduce book costs somehow, or to go for loans or scholarships for needy UVM students. No, instead they took our money and gave it away.

Even some of the groups which did receive money were neither the most deserving nor the most needy. The full report should be released by next week, and then this will be clear. We have waited a long time for this report (almost as long as the CYNIC waited for a reply from Dispositions, refusing our request of funds). We too applied for funds, and were deemed unworthy. Consequently, our KW CYNICS may have to be sold to outsiders this year, with only UVM students receiving them free. This, however, is not definite.

One thing is quite definite. It seems we have this committee with the power to help UVM in a very tangible manner; yet it chooses to supposedly help it in some other, less obvious, fashion. Perhaps next year's committee will realize its position of responsibility and prove to have more foresight in its decisions.

Letters To The Editor Recognize Special Students

To the Editor:

Last year I attended a small college (Vt.) and was very disappointed with the apathetic student body and faculty, even, concerning most curricular activities. I did not expect to find a similar type of apathy at the University, but much to my dismay, I did.

The topic of this discourse is not as yet clear, so I shall explain. It seems that a "special student" can't be a member of or hold an office in any student organization whether his membership be beneficial to UVM or to the student involved.

The University regulations, as worded in the green pages of the datebook, state "All full time, regularly enrolled undergraduate students are members of the University of Vermont Student Association. The legislative authority of the Association is vested in a Student Association Senate." According to the Senate's constitution, all the members (and thus officers) of a recognized student organization must be full-time students. Many students have the implication that "special students" are different, and some even suggested that they don't belong in any organization.

What is the difference between a student carrying 15 hours and one carrying 12 hours? As far as I can see, there is no striking difference. According to most dictionaries a student is one who studies or investigates; a person who is enrolled for study at a school or college; or a person who is being taught under the supervision of a teacher or tutor, as in school. Also, student is applied either to one who attends and institution of higher learning or to one who is making a study of a particular problem. Maybe I misinterpret what this says, but I cannot see anything which implies that a person carrying 12 semester hours is not a student. Apparently, someone has interpreted this definition differently.

I realize that there has to be a cut-off point somewhere, but does this mean that the special student has to be cut out of everything? A student carrying 12 hours may not be able to afford the full semester cost, or he might have to help out financially at home. Yet he is still a college student working toward a degree, and I don't know who has got the right to say that he can't enjoy the benefits of a college life, including club membership.

I can see limiting a person with a low cumulative average or on some type of probation, but I cannot see limiting a person who has a good average and is a potential leader from doing what comes naturally, just because he isn't a full-time student. This I am told is being done. WHY? And I hope that I get a valid answer. This is your college and one wants to feel proud of his Alma Mater because of its unity, beliefs, and policies. Can you be proud of a college which segregates its students? I can't.

THE SCEPTIC

By Merry Andrews

Come on, revolutionaries, unite! Please?

Couldn't we all get together and show a little spirit about this thing? You showed great spirit all through Homecoming; haven't you got a little left you could expend for the cause? It's so in need of someone like you to support it. Won't you please?

What we're talking about, dears, is the splendid little war. You know, those games we're playing in the southeast of Asia? Those quaint little clashings of the good guys and the bad, that we hear about every day? That war. Can't we show some spirit for it?

After all, we are the youth, the strength, the future of the nation (oh, funny nation). Who else can produce spirit for this, if we can't? There's been ever so much energy spent against it; marches, speeches, meetings, and all. Couldn't we just gather 'round and show some support for it?

Remember how the pacifists came and spoke to each other about it; how they picketed the dear old city buildings? They suggested that war is not necessary; that refusing the draft is admirable; some even demanded to know what we're doing there in the first place! (As if it weren't perfectly obvious that we're there because we're the policemen of the world, and must save the poor savages from the nasty Reds they elected.)

And there are, too, those lovely ballads. There's one which says it's really rather stupid for one country's boys to kill another country's boys; another that suggests we might do better things with our time than plot devious ways to annihilate each other. But you know better than that, don't you? Of course you do. And that's just what we want you to do, to show some spirit; write some songs.

See, the thing that's wrong with this war, (justified, sensible, and glorious though it is), is the fact that there aren't any inspiring songs written about it. And that's why so many of the folks back home are objecting to it; they haven't any of those great soul-stirring songs, as in the old days, to whip up their patriotism.

Songs like: "Hubba Hubba hubba, hello Jack, Hubba hubba hubba, just get back? Hubba hubba hubba, tell me please - what ever happened to the Japanese?"

That one was always dear to our heart; and we're sure you can see why. It's such a sweet sentiment, so very good for the soul. Songs like that are just what we need today; songs like that would change the minds of those unwashed pacifists right away! Yet nobody will write them, and it nearly breaks our heart. The subject is so musical; the sentiments so fine. Couldn't we have just one little ballad about those ugly muddy trenches? Just one sad sweet song about the beauty of a dying Viet Cong?

So couldn't we just take a minute out of our frantic little days, and give some thought to a good war song? Get together and lend a helping hand; put some of your immense wit and spirit to use for a good cause?

Do, please, for if you do, maybe some day we can turn the pacifist element under entirely. We can channel it into useful energy against the enemy; we can all be part of one great big delicious war. And all it will take is one little song.

Blood Drive Thanks You

To the Editor:

On behalf of the entire membership of Ethan Allen Rifles, I would like to thank each and every person who contributed in making the Blood Drive such an unqualified success. With a total of 407 pints donated, UVM smashed last fall's record of 359 pints. It was truly gratifying to see such a turnout. We would like to extend special thanks to Mr. Stearn of the Red Cross, Mr. Bain, the Director of Student Activities, and to the Billings Center Governing Board, for their assistance. Once again, thank you for your help, and I hope to see you all in April for our second blood drive.

David T. Pietsch, Jr. President, EAR

WE NEED...

To the Editor:

For several years now, I have been wondering if it might be within the scope of possibility for this university to lay aside funds for a purchase that could inexpensively improve the cultural life of thousands around here. To wit, why not procure for this great center of learning an honest-to-gosh, big time movie projector? We have a nice auditorium in Votey Hall, and we even have some impressive film listings from SCOPE, the Foreign Films Festival, and the SA, so why not go all out and do something about the two-bit projection that now makes mockery of university film fare.

Dear All,

Homecoming is over, but all is not quiet around the UVM campus. Happily for many Greeks, Homecoming had a lasting effect.

All the boys of Sigma Nu are proud of Bill Mason '66 on his marriage to Sue Hauke, '66, of Pi Beta Phi. Sigma Nu also sends best wishes to Mike Crane, '65, on his engagement to Jean Beckley, '65, of Pi Beta Phi, and to Buck Love, '65, on his pinning to Betty Purda, '68, of Phi Beta Phi.

Lots of luck to the Theta Chi's on Craig Buchanan's, '66, pinning to Becky Brown of Mattapoisette, Mass.; on Ronald Gondek's, '68, pinning of Jane Ricard of Nashua, N.H.; on Jimmy Richer's, '66, pinning to Carol Snyder of Tupper Lake, N.Y.; and on John Bailey's, '65, marriage to Bonnie Baker of Burlington, Vermont.

Heartiest congratulations go to Susan Taggart, '66, of Pi Beta Phi on her marriage to Jon Pringle, '66, of Phi Delta Theta; Pi Beta Phi also takes pride in Marcia Leyden's, '66, engagement to John Tomasi, '62, of Sigma Nu; in Bonnie Herschede's, '66, pinning to Hayes Sagoloff, '66, of Phi Sigma Delta; and last but definitely not least, in Kathy Hentz's, '66, repinning to John Bradley, '66, of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

The sisters of Pi Beta Phi proudly announce the initiation of their new sister, Susan Nestler, '68.

Best of luck and happiness to all of you!

"SEX EMPLOYMENT CLAUSE RAISES MANY QUESTIONS." (Reprinted from the Burlington Free Press, October 7, 1965, page 32). Just in the 90 days since Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 went into effect, with a section forbidding employment discrimination because of sex, Washington's Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has been bombarded with questions on what the "sex" clause means and challenges on how it will be enforced. Some of the queries are sincere. What will happen to state laws and company policies designed to protect women workers from such burdens as excessive overtime? How will newspapers handle classified ads for "Girl Friday" and "boy wanted"? Other questions are utterly ridiculous. Will railroads have to employ female engineers? Will key clubs be forced to accept male "Bunnies" if they apply?

Okay, how WILL the sex section work? Where will the lines be drawn and what hiring-promotion changes might be anticipated? Practically no final, detailed answers are yet available. But, after adding common sense to informal guidance from Washington policy-makers, I hereby submit some educated guesses on how the sex clause will work. Classified help - wanted ads will be revised to open up many traditionally men-only jobs to women. The jobs must state "M or F" where women can perform equally and competently. Employers who maintain separate but unequal seniority lists providing separate but unequal pay scales and fringe benefits for men and women in the same jobs will come under heavy fire. Automatic firing of women who get married is being banned.

Outmoded state laws will get a hard, new look from the EEOC and from the states themselves. For instance, one state forbids women to work in jobs requiring them to lift more than 15 pounds - the weight of many a well-stocked pocketbook. Others "protect" women against long hours by prohibiting them from jobs requiring overtime. Exclusively male training courses for positions through which women also could build skills and qualifications probably will be in for major changes. Employers will not be required to hire women for jobs that would require extraordinary expenses to accommodate them or that would create conditions flying in the face of American mores. We'll be seeing no male attendants in ladies washrooms or vice-versa and no women deck hands on otherwise all-male freighters.

UVMers Fight Fire

Very little has been said about the role some UVM students played in helping the fire department at the Cupola Motel fire nearly two weeks ago.

Students, mostly from the Marsh-Austin-Tupper complex, were quickly attracted to the large blaze even though the fire began about 1 a.m. The Burlington Fire Department is limited in the amount of help it can send to South Burlington so the help given by several students in unloading the hose when the two engines first arrived was much appreciated.

Later, a few UVM students went inside the burning building and fought the fire with hoses. Most of the thirty or forty other students who were at the fire watched or helped occasionally as a hose was needed. It would be unfair to name the students who are known to have helped because there were other UVMers at the Cupola fire who helped just as much but were not recognized or noticed.

Nevertheless, it is reassuring amid the stories of crimes and injuries not prevented because of a fear of involvement, to know that UVM students have voluntarily helped when they were needed.

According to the owners of the Cupola, this fire caused between $90,000 and $100,000 damage, completely destroying the Terrace Lounge and causing extensive damage to the Decon's Room. The Cupola House itself needed renovation and is now expected to be open within the next week. Plans have already been drawn up for a new and larger Terrace Lounge, and the contract has been let out. The management of the Cupola hopes that this will be open for the Christmas holidays.

Chaucer Portrayed As Medieval Realist

Wall-to-wall sophomore English students and a scattered few genuinely interested Medievalists were introduced last Thursday night to "Chaucer the Cosmopolitan."

That the English department saw fit to require attendance at the lecture in lieu of a regular class session was sufficient proof of Dorothy Bethurum's prominence as an expert in Medieval literature. Further evidence was provided us by Prof. Muriel Hughes' presentation of qualifications.

Dorothy Bethurum is currently professor emeritus of English at Connecticut College, where she was chairman of the English department, 1940 - 1961. She graduated from Vanderbilt University, received her Ph.D. at Yale, and taught at Southwestern University, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and Lawrence College. She received a Guggenheim Foundation Fellowship and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford.

In an informative lecture encompassing Chaucer - the author, his contemporaries, and his era, Professor Bethurum acquainted her audience with Chaucer the man.

At a time when best seller lists would have been comprised of "delicate love visions," Chaucer produced dynamic realism. Therein lay his strong appeal to readers of his own and succeeding generations. It is difficult to confine Chaucer to his place in the 14th century world when his characters contain the universal virtues and vices of all ages.

A murmur of mirth swept the audience as Miss Berthum pointed out Chaucer's revolutionary attitude toward love. The previous literary ideal of courtly love was replaced by a more realistic view, in which sex predominated.

His firm belief in a benevolent Providence and an after life enabled him to view with relative amusement the shortcomings of his fellow man. He believed man to be a superior being. Therefore his satire, sarcasm, and ridicule is meant more as a light reprimand than as a condemnation.

Chaucer's broad education and varied background are reflected in the cosmopolitan viewpoint of his work.

Professor Berthum's lecture was made available to us by the Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar Program. Under this program several lecturers visit campuses throughout the United States, giving undergraduates a chance to meet and talk with outstanding scholars who are also noted teachers. This program has been in effect here at UVM since 1956.

Students Urged To Seek Financial Aid

The Financial Aid Office, now in its fourth year of operation, functions as the distribution agent for the University's scholarship and loan funds and provides other financial assistance and advice.

This administrative office, which evolved out of the Student Aid Committee, is a participant in the national College Scholarship Service. Aid is distributed according to the individual student's need (as demonstrated in the Parents' Confidential Statement) and his scholastic ability. As a freshman you must maintain a 1.70 (72) average in order to continue receiving assistance. For sophomores the required average is 2.50 (80), for juniors 2.70 (82) and for seniors 2.90 (84). The reason for these increasingly more difficult requirements is that one should earn better grades as one advances; moreover, the competition grows keener year by year. According to Allen Walker of the Financial Aid Office, "If you need help, you should demonstrate that you are capable of maintaining satisfactory grades."

There are several national scholarships administered through this office. For example, there is the General Motors Scholarship Program which is open to any U.S. citizen entering college as a freshman. There is no restriction as to course of study under this program and grants may range from $200 to $2000 per year, depending upon individual need.

The loans available are more numerous and of wide variety. The National Defense Student Loan Fund, the "most beneficial," according to Mr. Walker, is an example of federal government aid for college students. It provides for the borrowing of up to $1000 a year with a maximum of $5000 while in college, 90% of the funds come from the federal government with the individual institution supplying 10%. The repayment period is 10 years or more and the interest rate is low. Similar funds are available under the Health Professions Student Loan Program and the Nursing Student Loan Program.

Another source of loans is the United Student Aid Funds, a private, nonprofit corporation which endorses low-cost loans made by local banks to needy college students. Interest on these loans (which may provide as much as $1000 per year) never exceeds 5% and the repayment period may range from 36 to 54 months.

These are but a few of the many types of funds available. In addition to national programs there are numerous general and special bequests and endowments. Moreover the Office assists students seeking employment and also administers the Work-Study Program under the Economic Opportunity Act.

The Financial Aid Office was instituted to assist the students of UVM. Mr. Walker urges that students look ahead, and if financial aid is needed application should be made, generally before April 1 for the year following. Each application must be carefully considered; if a student needs financial aid to complete his education, he will usually receive it. As Mr. Walker expresses it, "We need to encourage students to come in and talk over their financial problems." Only in this way can the Financial Aid Office effectively perform its job.

One hidden benefit of the legislation which could grow out of its actual application in the future well may turn out to be broader job opportunities for men too. A company which requires women to retire earlier than men may opt to reduce the retirement age for all employees rather than to raise the retirement age for women. States which now have special minimum wage laws for women only may extend them to men. Maximum working hours stipulated by some state laws for women only might be extended to men—with overtime pay provisions for all workers after a given period.

The key yardstick which administrators of the sex section will use to judge individual cases in the months ahead will be this: Does the job really require one sex or the other to get it done properly? Says EEOC chairman Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. "We will make every effort to distinguish those situations where job discrimination on the basis of sex is merely a convenient extension of tradition and those situations where sex is tied directly to the requirements of the job or other basic values. The law will be strictly and seriously applied and we will not tolerate 'dodgers.' But we will be sympathetic to bona fide, clearly proven exceptions."

Of course, it won't be easy to translate the sex section into significantly broadened opportunities for women. But the clause must help speed the crumbling of cruelly obsolete, utterly unjustifiable barriers against America's working women.

Blood Drive Nets 407 Pints

The Ethan Allen Rifles, University of Vermont ROTC Senior Honor Society, conducted a record-breaking, two-day blood drive on behalf of the Vermont-New Hampshire Regional Blood Center late last week. The drive netted 407 pints of blood, surpassing the Fall Blood Drive record of 359 pints set last October. UVM students, faculty, and staff contributed the single greatest portion of blood to drawings conducted last week by the Vermont-New Hampshire center. Red Cross officials were able to report the highest weekly total in six months.

The Ethan Allen Rifles have conducted UVM's Spring Blood Drive for years. They were called upon this year to handle both the Spring and Fall drives when an organization previously committed to the Fall drive could not perform the service. The drive chairman, Cadet David Pietsch, Honolulu, Hawaii, had expressed concern because the ranks of UVM ROTC Cadets, traditionally a major source of donors, had been thinned when the ROTC program became voluntary in September. However an intensive effort to communicate with the University community compensated for diminished classroom contact with Cadets. Cadet Pietsch commented that the drive could not have been the success which it was without the cooperation of the Billings Center Board of Governors, UVM student nurses, volunteer assistants, and the teamwork demonstrated by members of his organization.

Cadet David Pietsch
Blood Drive Chairman

Mr. Edward Stearn, Red Cross regional director, was generous in his praise of blood drive organization calling it "... the best I have seen at UVM." He also praised the outstanding response of the University community to the 300 pint goal which he had set.

New Chevelle SS 396 Sport Coupe—with clean-sculpted all-new Body by Fisher.

by Chevrolet

Two new Super Sport beauties for '66—a hardtop and convertible—propelled by nothing less than the new Turbo-Jet 396 V8.

This remarkably efficient power plant, with aircraft-type valves, deep-breathing ports and other design advances, develops 325 hp in the standard version. And you're welcome to order more—in a 360-hp version—if you're so inclined.

Both Chevelle SS 396 models ride on a special flat-cornering chassis. A fully synchronized 3-speed transmission with floor-mounted stick shift is standard. Or you can order a 4-speed or Powerglide—also Strato-bucket front seats, center console and full SS instrumentation.

Your Chevrolet dealer's is the place to see how all this feels from behind the wheel. He's a great believer in letting the customers handle the merchandise.

CNVA Protests

The CNVA (Committee for Nonviolent Action) was formed in the spring of 1957, largely through the efforts of Lawrence Scott, a staff member of the American Friends Service Committee.

The Committee's first project was a 24 hour protest organized outside of the A-bomb testing grounds in Nevada on Hiroshima Day in 1957.

More projects followed in 1958, including the sailing of a vessel into the forbidden test zone area in the Pacific. In 1959, a demonstration was held against the land-launching of missiles near Omaha and protests were later organized at all nuclear submarine launchings at New London, Connecticut. The protests were staged with vigils, picket lines, and dramatic swimming onto trespasses the submarines.

Other protests include: a walk to Moscow in 1960 which involved 31 people from nine countries who entered Red Square after 10 months of walking from San Francisco; four protest sailings against ocean nuclear testing in 1962, after which many crewmen on the four vessels received prison sentences; and a walk to Cuba in 1963 in order to further understanding between Cubans and Americans.

More recently, the New England CNVA has organized youth training programs in non-violence, has sent a task force of Civil Rights Workers to Selma, Alabama (in January of this year) and has several times held or contributed to civil disobedience demonstrations in Washington protesting the Vietnam War.

One of the most significant of recent nonviolent actions was taken by the North-East CNVA with respect to the impending shutdown of the Boston Navy Yard. The group introduced alternatives to prevent the loss of employment. CNVA has interests in all types of urban renewal, anti-poverty, and civil rights programs, as well as in directly anti-military actions such as the public burning of draft cards staged just before the enactment of the law which makes their destruction a federal offense.

UVM Sponsors W.R.A Tennis

The New England Women's Collegiate Tennis Tournament was held October 8-10 at Longwood Cricket Club outside of Boston. Sponsors of the tournament were the University of Massachusetts and the University of Vermont.

The financial backing for the UVM team was provided by Women's Recreation Association. Eight girls represented the university, six competing, and two acting as hostesses. Although the singles players were defeated early in the tourney, a doubles team, composed of Pat Thompson and Pam Nichols fought their way to the semi-finals, there only to be defeated by Sargent College's winning team.

W.R.A. sorority and dormitory representatives have been elected, and will be encouraging all women students to attend field hockey practices on Tuesday and Thursday at 4:45 p.m., and Tennis Club at 7 p.m. Tuesday evening in Patrick Gym. In order to participate in W.R.A. functions, one must first join W.R.A. Any one wishing to join should contact Carolyn Comstock, Membership Chairman.

EAR Elects Members

With the election of twelve new members, Ethan Allen Rifles Senior Military Honor Society has reached its full complement. Installation of new members took place last Sunday in the Waterman Memorial Lounge. Colonel L.G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, was an honored guest. David Pietsch, Honolulu, Hawaii, president of EAR, conducted the ceremony.

The purpose of Ethan Allen Rifles is to promote a spirit of fraternal and military excellence on campus; to exemplify the high ideals of service to man and country; and to perpetuate the memory of Ethan Allen, patriot and soldier. EAR participates in many service projects on campus including Blood Drives such as the one which was carried on last week. They also sponsor UVM's annual Military Ball in cooperation with the Pershing Rifles and organize the Senior Banquet for ROTC students.

The roster of the organization includes: Joseph DiGerolamo, Montclair, N.J.; John Fox, Burlington, Vt.; Milton Goggans, Hoboken, N.J.; William Rush, So. Burlington, Vt.; Niel Day, Longmeadow, Mass.; Jean Halpern, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Peter Leavy, Oceanside, N.Y.; Albert Lesage, Winooski, Vt.; Walter Stowell, Townshend, Vt.; Paul Tierney, Woodstock, Vt.; Boyd Tomasetti, Northampton, Mass.; Michael Sherman, Worcester, Mass.; David Cohen, Burlington, Vt.; Thomas Donohue, Caldwell, N.J.; Stuart Eldred, Bennington, Vt.; Todd Fischer, Tonawanda, N.Y.; Michael Jarvis, Burlington, Vt.; Peter McGregor, Burlington, Vt.; John Munn, Bradford, Vt.; and David Pietsch, Pres., Honolulu, Hawaii.

Life Science Building Gets N.S.F. Grant

The National Science Foundation has awarded a $385,700 grant to the University of Vermont toward construction of the University's proposed new $2,100,000 life sciences building.

The NSF matching grant is for support of research and graduate training space in the new building.

The Vermont Legislature has made $2,100,000 in state funds available to the University toward construction cost of new life sciences and new physical sciences facilities, and the Board of Trustees authorized requests for bids for the life sciences unit at their August meeting.

It will be a 71,000 square-foot building located on the East Campus adjacent to and west of Hills Agricultural Science Hall. It will house the departments of botany and zoology with three full floors of laboratories and offices, a basement, service facilities, and an auditorium for 350 located between the new building and Hills, and connected to each.

With its completion, space occupied by zoology in Williams Science Hall will be freed for renovation to provide additional teaching and research space for the departments of chemistry and physics. Space occupied by botany will be used for the graduate program in biochemistry and for expansion of the forestry department.

The University considers the life sciences building to be part of a related building project which includes plans for the physical Sciences addition to Williams Science Hall, President Shannon McCune said.

It is hoped that life sciences construction can start in the spring of 1966 with a fall, 1967 completion date. Architect for the life sciences building is Linde and Hubbard of Burlington.

Phantom Phases

By David Cohen

Membership in a class honorary at UVM is a true honor. Respect and prestige are some of the fringe benefits that a member accrues. However, in recent years, there is very little respect for the honoraries and their prestige is only a token sweater or blazer. Why has the position of the honoraries slid to such a despicable level? The answer is quite simple. The honoraries themselves have little interest in doing anything worthwhile while they are active members. For those who are a little myopic, let us elaborate.

Initially, the manner of choosing members leaves some doubt in the mind. Is it possible that some groups control such matters? Then, when you are in and firmly settled in your sweater or blazer, you cease to function as a member of the honorary. You just wait for the next year when you hope that you will make the next society when you will repeat the whole cycle. This is pure nonsense.

If the honoraries continue to act this way, then they will cease to exist, and rightly so. You must justify your existence by pledging to do what you are supposed to do. How many members have read your constitutions? How many know what your aims and objectives really are? Probably very few indeed. So therefore, how can you possibly accomplish anything if you don't know what you stand for. Let's look at some excerpts from two constitutions. "Encouraging effective leadership." "Object is service, scholarship, and leadership."

These are abstractions, but they can be accomplished, and they are not. What it boils down to is this. Without a doubt, the honoraries have the largest group of "campus leaders" than any other group. It seems strange that all these active people find so little to do as active honorary members. Or is it that they don't want to do anything? One thing is obvious. You lack initiative! You do not care to go out and offer your services to worthwhile projects. You're content to put a directory together, plan Homecoming, pour coffee, and serve cookies. Don't get me wrong. These are worthwhile, but your time expended is a small percentage of time as compared with the total school year. Once again, how do you justify your existence - on your past and individual accomplishments? You'll never succeed that way.

Last week, you had an excellent opportunity to assert yourselves and show some initiative. You could have supported the blood drive (or any school sponsored program for that matter). Some of you really came through and we thank you. But the rest of you failed terribly. Here are the percentages of those who actually gave blood:

Boulder 50%	Mortar Board 10%
Key and Serpent 7.7%	Staff and Sandal 8.3%
Gold Key 38.5%	Sophomore Aides 3.4%

Originally, I had planned to print the names of those who didn't give, but there are just too many. Which percentage were you in? Chances are, you were in the non-donors. It's just another example of why the honoraries are what they are. You're apathetic. Be motivated, have initiative, look for projects, and succeed. There is my case. It is not too late to change.

U.R.I. RAMS HUMBLLED 28-6

Large Crowd Sees Cats Excel In Homecoming Contest

We would like to extend our congratulations to the entire football team for their brilliant upset against Rhode Island last weekend. The Catamounts annihilated the previously undefeated Rams with a score of 25-6. Mr. Bishop of The Burlington Free Press picked Rhode Island over us by one touchdown. Our victory gave most of us a chance to start celebrating the Homecoming weekend early. We would like to cite Don Nelson as the Hero of the game. Tuck (big number 69) was impossible to be stopped regardless of whether he was playing offense or defense. Coach Clifford went all the way with Scot Fitz, his number one quarterback. Rusty Brink seemed to be all over the field. Wherever a key man had to be tackled, Rusty was there and showed that he was most ready to oblige.

We understand that Paul Ryan is the new captain of the tennis team. We would like to congratulate Paul on winning the E.C.A.C. crown. Paul looks like he will be enjoying a marvelous season.

At present the UVM soccer team is undefeated. Keep it up guys and let's bring home a perfect season.

There is a lot of re-vitalizing going on around the UVM campus in sports this year. Besides a novice football team, the basketball team looks fitter than ever. UVM is in the process of building a 36-40 degree ski jump behind Centennial field. This will enable the ski team to get a lot of additional practice, which should significantly effect their performance. The University is presently granting more athletic scholarships which should also improve the quality of its athletes.

FOREIGN COACHES ARRIVE

Three African basketball coaches arrived at the University of Vermont on Sunday, Oct. 10, for a 3 1/2 week stay to observe how colleges conduct basketball programs.

The three are part of a group of French-speaking coaches who arrived in the United States this week. The first stop was in Hagerstown, Md., for a two-day clinic, following which they have been assigned to various colleges and universities throughout the United States for 3 1/2 weeks.

Ralph Lapointe, varsity basketball and freshman basketball coach conducted a discussion on "Coach-Official Relationship" Thursday at Hagerstown and will be in charge of the three coaches visiting Vermont.

The three are Amadou Sall, Mali; Balla Mamane, Niger; and Felix Samba, Central African Republic. All are basketball coaches and physical education teachers in their respective countries. Samba also is a member of the International Amateur Federation of Basketball.

In addition to observing the basketball program at Vermont, the three coaches will take part in physical education classes and attend some regular academic classes.

While at the University, they will be housed in Grassmount. They will return to Africa in November. Their stay is sponsored by Sports International and Youth for Development.

By Bob Bloementhal

Vermont's football team got back to its winning ways last Saturday by overwhelming a strong Rhode Island team, 28-6. Although the Cats have shown good offensive power in games earlier this season, it was the defense that made the difference in this one. As Coach Clifford said, "It was the greatest defensive team effort since I've been coach here."

In singling out the stars of this game, the names that come to mind are defensive end Bill Van Bemmekum, defensive linemen Bill Wolff, Joe Soldano, and John Sullivan, and linebackers Rusty Brink and Tuck Nelson. It was the great rush which these men put on Rhode Island quarterback Bricoccoli which stopped the Rams cold, both on the ground and in the air.

Vermont did no better on the ground, but it was the passing of Scott Fitz which got the Cats rolling. The first touchdown of the game came on an eight yard pass from Fitz to Dick Hebert. Vermont had gotten into scoring position after a Rhode Island punt slid off the side of the foot of the kicker and traveled only three yards.

The Cats scored again late in the first half with the passing of Fitz again highlighting the drive. He hit on four passes to bring the ball to the two yard line from UVM's 38. From here it took three running plays before Mike Burke dove over from a half yard out. The touchdown was Burke's fourth of the season as he continues to lead the team in scoring.

Vermont's final two touchdowns were scored in the final period. When a Ram punt carried to its own 37, the Cats scored in three plays. Dick Hebert went 13 yards on a pitchout and two plays later sophomore fullback Bob Mitchell bulled over after taking a 20 yard pass from Fitz.

The defense set up the last UVM score of the day when Rusty Brink picked off a deflected Rhode Island pass and carried it all the way to the one yard line before stepping out of bounds. It took the Cats four running plays to get this final yard, however, with Terry Lynn going in for the score. The interception was Brink's fourth this year in four. Last season Rusty did not intercept a pass.

The win upped Vermont's

SERIES RECORD AGAINST VERMONT: 15-16-1

HEAD COACH: Andrew Mooradian (New Hampshire)—1st year

1965 PROSPECTS: Another lean year with air of uncertainty. Gone is veteran coach Chief Boston who guided Wildcats for 16 years. Gone also is his replacement who quit before spring drills. Long-time assistant and head baseball coach Andy Mooradian inherits job of getting UNH back on victory path. Team appears slightly stronger than last year with a veteran backfield back but line poses problems.

1964 GAME: Vermont 40, New Hampshire 0. Playing before t.v. cameras as well as the fans in the stands, Vermont put on one of its greatest offensive shows ever, amassing 530 yards total offense. Vermont grabbed a pair of fumbles and picked off a pass and had a 21-0 lead by the time the Wildcats ran their 4th play from scrimmage. Getting TDs were Frank Foerster (5), Richie Reynolds (1), Scott Fitz (11), Mike Burke (4), Bill Leete (13) and Charlie Foster (32-yd. pass from Jim Brennan). Ken Andrade made three kicks, Carl Ettlinger one.

record to 3-1 and for the Rams, it was their first defeat of the season. The Cats should have an easier time of it this Saturday as they play host to the New Hampshire Wildcats. The running game must improve, however, and the defense will have to keep up its great play if the Cats hope to go the rest of the season without a defeat.

LANE SERIES OFFERS DOUBLE FEATURE

New Christy Minstrels

By Judy Beeber

The week of Oct. 25 should prove to be an exciting one for Lane Series ticket-holders. Two of the Series' most popular attractions will be presented during this week. On Monday, Oct. 25, the New Christy Minstrels will headline on the Red Series; and, on the same series, that Friday, Oct. 29, the Broadway hit "Stop the World - I Want to Get Off" will be performed. (Details about this show will be in next week's issue.)

The New Christy Minstrels are known for their trained voices, skilled musicianship, vibrant personalities, sense of fun and comedy, and for a lively beat. They have performed countless times in nightclubs and supper clubs, on the concert circuit, on television and in the recording industry.

Their unique style of singing, with feet stomping and fingers snapping, brought them to the White House in 1964 when they introduced their particular folk-style at the invitation of President Johnson. They have also appeared at the San Remo Festival and won first and second prizes there. They became the first folk-group to ever headline at the Copacabana in New York (April 1965). In the realm of television, the Minstrels were the first group to ever have their own weekly show. The Minstrels have also entertained millions across the ocean. They visited England, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, and Italy, and were received with great enthusiasm everywhere.

The New Christy Minstrels were organized in 1961 and now consist of seven male and two female vocalists. Their singing style is patterned after a company of pre-Civil War entertainers created by Edwin "Pops" Christy. The original group rolicked through the country with jokes, slapstick, and folk songs; the old Christy minstrels are credited with introducing Stephen Foster's greatest songs.

Under the guidance of George Greif and Sid Garris, the New Christy Minstrels perfected a personal style. Each individual of the group has his or her own specialty which can be performed as a solo. They accompany themselves on banjos, guitars and the bass. Since their formation, the record albums of the Minstrels have been in demand throughout the United States, Europe, Asia, and in 121 other countries.

For students who have been under the pressure of studying for exams and for adults who are under daily tensions, the Christy Minstrels will provide an evening of relaxation and enjoyment.

Presidents Set Policies For Friendly Rivals

A call to good sportsmanship first issued under the tenures of Carl Borgmann, William Stratton and Ernest Harmon and issued annually since, has again been issued by the presidents of the University of Vermont, Middlebury and Norwich.

Dr. Shannon McCune, Dr. James I. Armstrong, and General Barksdale Hamlett this week called on students of the three institutions to bring to the long-standing state rivalry on the football fields only the best of pride in alma mater, college spirit and friendly rivalry.

Dr. McCune and General Hamlett will be joining their names to the statement for the first time.

This year's state rivalry begins this week as the Norwich Cadets travel to Centennial Field to play the Vermont Catamounts on Saturday, (Oct. 23). The series will switch to Norwich on Saturday, Oct. 30, where the Middlebury Panthers will be the visitors; and concludes Nov. 6 with Middlebury at home to Vermont.

The joint sportsmanship statement follows:

We are agreed that pride in alma mater, college spirit, and friendly rivalry between colleges are healthy and desirable, and should be encouraged; however, we are also agreed that the damage of property, either on a rival campus or elsewhere, is not a proper manifestation of college spirit. We condemn such actions, and any student who is apprehended may expect to be subjected to disciplinary action.

We also wish to announce at this time that the possession or consumption of alcoholic beverages is not permitted at football games held under the auspices of the colleges we represent.

Class Officers Elected Today

The elections for class officers are being held today in Billings from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. in front of Waterman dining hall from 5 - 6 p.m., in the lobby of the upperclassmen's dorms, in Simpson lounge, and in Wright Hall's lobby, all from 4:30 - 6:30 p.m.

There is a large number of fine candidates running for the respective offices this year, according to Bob Lampke, who is in charge of the Student Association run elections.

Candidates for office of Senior Class President are as follows:

Deborah Cole, A & S; House Committee Vice-President 1964-65, Alpha Chi Omega, Fire Captain 1965-66, Spanish Club Secretary.

Jane Mitchell, Ed. & N; Gamma Phi Beta, House Committee Vice-President, WRA, SNA, Outing Club.

Ronald Sturzenberger, A & S; Kappa Sigma, IFC Representative, Pep Committee, Freshman Orientation Committee, Intramural Sports, Kappa Sigma study committee.

Preparations Made For Third Annual Parents' Weekend

Many students have been busy this past week straightening up rooms and cleaning clothes in preparation for the arrival of hundreds of parents to our campus for the Third Annual Parents' Weekend, beginning Saturday, October 23. The weekend is being sponsored by the Family Associates, currently headed by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Roney of Burlington. Family Associates has planned a very busy schedule for the parents. The agenda for Saturday as stated by Mr. Roney is as follows:

10:30 a.m. -- meeting of the executive board of the Family Associates at Marsh Room, Billings Center.

11:15-12:30 p.m. -- parents are invited to eat with the students.

1:30 p.m. -- football game, UVM vs. state rival Norwich University at Centennial Field.

7:15 p.m. -- dinner at Waterman cafeteria with guest speaker, President Shannon McCune.

9:00 -- panel discussion by the Deans, with the topic "Academic Stresses" as they affect students, faculty and parents; Arena Theatre, Fleming Museum.

10:00 p.m. -- informal reception for parents at Marble Court, Fleming Museum.

The chairmen of arrangements for Parents' Weekend are Mr. and Mrs. William Cronin of Burlington. Family Associates is pleased to have present the Deans, so that parents may ask them questions. All parents of UVM students are automatically members of the Family Associates and are eligible to participate in the various programs. Mr. Roney reports that a large volume of reservations have been sent in. He expects a sizeable turnout of parents at the Third Annual Parents' Weekend.

STUDENTS INITIATE MOVE FOR EXCHANGE DINNERS

There is a movement presently underway on this campus to enable men and women students in the residence halls, individually and at no extra cost to eat with each other. The system, activity, for which is spearheaded by a sophomore, John Bickford, would be entirely on an exchange basis. For each boy desiring to eat in a women's dining hall, a girl would take a place in a men's dining hall.

The system being most seriously considered at this time, would involve both boy and girl signing up in advance in the respective dining halls, each indicating name, meal ticket number, meal they wish to exchange for, and the counterpart's name and meal ticket number.

This plan, if accepted, would not involve any large number of changes for SAGA Foods, because the balance in each unit would remain the same, as only exchanges would be allowed. This, therefore, would not involve an influx of gallant young men upon Redstone campus for dinner, upsetting the meal program.

"It is not anticipated that there will be any delay at the checker's tables, hindering service for the regular boarders," says Mr. Bickford, "because each checker will have a list of names and meal ticket numbers for expected guests. There should be less delay than there is for a paying non-boarder."

Here is an idea that has received interest in the past, but has not been passed for one reason or another. This specific plan still needs support to become accomplished fact. The basic idea was approved by the Men's Residence Hall Assembly on Monday night, and, by the present time will have been noted upon by the Men's Residence Hall Council and the Women's Social Chairmen.

If all students want such an exchange, and indicate an interest, the Dean's office will take up consideration of the plan with Mr. James Hagadone, district manager of SAGA Food Service. The exchange could, perhaps in some modified form, be in operation in a very short time.

Buildings, Grounds Group Plans For Campus Safety

"If somebody complains to us about dirty cups in the cafeteria, it isn't our concern, but we'll try to direct the complaint to whom-ever should hear it," said Dr. T.R. Flanagan as Chairman of the University Senate's Buildings and Grounds Committee.

This attitude certainly doesn't mean that this committee is the complaint center of UVM, but it shows the willingness of the group to cooperate with students as well as faculty.

The original purpose of the Buildings and Grounds Committee was to plan and advise on how to make the outward appearance of the campus more attractive. Recent additional responsibilities of the committee include planning for the safety and welfare of people on campus.

The committee recommended the crosswalk and caution blinker across Main Street in front of the Dental Hygiene building. It also initiated the program of installing additional lights along the walk-ways all over campus. The purpose of the new lights is to enhance the beauty of the campus at night and also to make the paths safer for coeds.

The Buildings and Grounds Committee has a "master plan" which provides for specific future developments of buildings, parking lots, and other areas on campus.

The area in front of the freshman dorms was upon their advice. They also recommended the species of trees to be planted around the reflecting pool which for purposes of safety and general convenience will be only six inches deep. The depth was likewise their suggestion.

Many complaints are now being heard concerning the parking lots we have or do not have. Mr. Flanagan says that although the Buildings and Grounds Committee isn't itself responsible for an adequacy of parking spaces on campus, it must consider this factor in its plans. The committee is trying to make the university's parking more attractive by planting trees and shrubbery around them.

According to the master plan, many of UVM's parking lots will eventually be peripheral to the campus, such as the large one for the Medical College which will be added behind Hills Hall. New parking lots are planned to go with new buildings. In regard to probable complaints about the locations of future lots, Mr. Flanagan notes that at many colleges, students and even professors are lucky if they find a parking place within half a mile of where they want to go.

Currently the committee has sparked a program to standardize the color and design of all university signs.

Low Price For UMass Tickets With UVM ID

Tickets for the UMass game are now on sale in the Bookstore and in the Athletic Department Office - 206 Patrick Gym (from 8:30-12:00 and from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. Special price for students and faculty $1. In order to receive this $2 saving you must present your I.D.

Tickets for the Middlebury game will be on sale starting Monday. Price $1.

Honorary Inducts New Members

Tapped for membership into Omicron Nu, Phi Chapter, of the Home Economics honor society on Thursday, October 14, were Susan Aiken and Patricia Williams. They were pledged at a brunch given Sunday, October 17, by Miss Martha Caldwell, Associate Professor of Related Arts. Miss Esther Knowles, chapter adviser, will give an initiation tea to honor them on Sunday, October 24.

New Officers for the year are Barbara Kaldy, president, Patricia McFadden, vice president, Joyce Smith, secretary, and Dr. Lucille Wakefield, treasurer.

OUTING CLUB TO "HOWL" HIGH BIDS BLOCK LODGE

By Roger Ketcham

On October 8th, the Outing Club Proposed Ski Lodge hit a road block of high bids for the construction of the lodge. The president of the Outing Club and the student chairman of the lodge fund drive have met continuously throughout the past two weeks and though they are unable to give specific details, they appear confident that the Ski Lodge will become a reality by this 1965-66 ski season.

OUTING CLUB GROPE

Last Sunday afternoon 22 Outing Club and faculty members and one St. Bernard dog explored the recently discovered largest cave in New England, which is located near Middlebury. The cave is 850 feet long and drops about 100 feet below the ground. After rappelling down a 40 foot freefall to the main chamber of the cave, several spelunkers explored the twisting passageways under the guidance of our fearless leader, Flash Pelton. The novice spelunkers were interested in seeing the unusual cave formations such as the straw stalactites. After spending most of the afternoon exploring the cave, we began the long climb back to the surface. The ascent, vertical in places, was made more interesting by the limited amount of light available from carbide lamps and flashlights, and after five hours of spelunking, it was a welcome relief to emerge into the growing dusk.

The Folk Music Club and the Outing Club jointly staged a successful folk sing last Friday night at Simpson Hall. In response to UVM students' enthusiasm for folksinging, the Outing Club is sponsoring a "Hallowe'en Howl" at Southwick Gym on Saturday, October 30, from 7 to 12. There will be a folk sing from 7 to 9, where folk singers from Middlebury, Dartmouth, and Goddard Colleges will be participating alongside UVM Folk-singers. Following the folk-sing, a dance band will provide music until the bewitching hour of 12 o'clock midnight.

Come one, come all and bring your favorite ghoul and join in the treats and trickery at our "Hallowe'en Howl."

Fellowships To Be Given

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION GRADUATE AND POST-DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIPS FOR 1966-1967 WASHINGTON, D.C. -

The National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate and regular postdoctoral fellowships. Committees of outstanding scientists appointed by the Academy-Research Council will evaluate applications of all candidates. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1966.

Fellowships will be awarded for study in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological and engineering sciences; also in anthropology, economics (excluding business administration), geography, the history and philosophy of science, linguistics, political science, psychology (excluding clinical psychology), and sociology (not including social work). They are open to college seniors, graduate students working toward a degree, postdoctoral students, and others with equivalent training and experience. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability.

Applicants for the graduate awards will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on January 15, 1966, at designated centers throughout the United States and certain foreign countries.

The annual stipends for graduate Fellows are as follows: $2400 for the first level; $2600 for the intermediate level; and $2800 for the terminal level. The annual stipend for postdoctoral Fellows is $5500. Limited allowances will also be provided to apply toward tuition, laboratory fees, and travel.

Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418. The deadline for the receipt of applications for graduate fellowships is December 10, 1965, and for regular postdoctoral fellowships, December 13, 1965.

Scope Inaugurates New Season

Scope inaugurated this season's series of films by presenting three award-winning shorts, "The Exiles," "The Corner," and "On the Bowery," in the Votey Hall Auditorium. After viewing these films, this writer wonders who the generous critics were that gave out the awards. Highly touted as the films were, they have to be looked at as a great disappointment. Notable were a general lack of action, trite dialogue, and very ordinary camera work.

"The Exiles" is the story of the many American Indians who have left their life on the reservation to live in downtown Los Angeles. The audience follows one day in the lives of a group of newly migrated Indians as they go from bar to bar, drinking, playing cards, and picking-up girls. Their hopes of achieving a better life seem to have ended before they have begun. They are a tribal culture caught up in the confusion of a big city's unique society.

The "Vice-Lords" is a gang of Negro youths in Chicago, and we hear their philosophy explained in "The Corner." As a member of a persecuted minority group, the young Negro boy feels compelled to join the neighborhood gang.

Later this gang robs and provokes violence in an attempt to relieve its anxieties and frustrations. But the adolescent believes that no one can live in this world by himself, and thus feels compelled to join regardless of how he feels about gangs. The big question is who will help these people to peacefully adjust to the laws of society?

"On the Bowery" depicts the utter hopelessness, desolation, and waste of the lives of three alcoholics living on New York's Bowery. The alcoholic grabs for a ray of hope but always ends up the easy prey of the bottle.

National Ballet Performs

The Lane Series Blue Concerts opened Friday evening, Oct. 15 to a capacity audience. Featured in this first concert was the National Ballet from Washington, D.C., directed by Frederic Franklin. The program was divided into three parts, the first being a shortened version of Peter Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake," the second, "Le Combat," with music by Raffaele de Banfield, and the third, Gioacchino Rossini's "Con Amore."

Given the confines of the Memorial Auditorium stage, the company must be commended for a good performance. Andrea Vodehnal was both beautiful and graceful as Odette. The ballet was greatly enhanced by the richness of the orchestra, conducted by Ottavio De Rosa. Although not a typically picturesque "Swan Lake," this version gives a good idea to the viewer of what Tchaikovsky's most poignant ballet can actually be like.

"Le Combat," choreographed

by William Dollar, was like watching a spectacular movie, music and all. Claudine Kamoun and Ivan Nagy were exciting to watch but the number itself lacked the grace of classical ballet and the true emotion of modern dance. The climax of the dance, a long, drawn-out death scene, was most unconvincing.

The final dance was by far the best from my point of view. Rossini's "Con Amore," with choreography by Lew Christensen, is a very light ballet with an overriding message of "love conquers all." The number was highly amusing and chaotic, and was carried off skillfully by Roni Mahler, Roger Bigelow and a talented supporting group. It was the most colorful and professional job of the evening.

Despite one's personal preferences, the National Ballet provided an entertaining evening. It was a strong beginning for what promises to be the best Lane Series year ever.

COFFEE HOUSE AT UVM

A full report on the national coffee house situation will be given at a public meeting at 7 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 28, at St. Anselm's Chapel on Redstone Campus. Rev. Perry will present slides of over a dozen coffee houses which he visited this past summer in the preparation of a report for the National Council of Churches.

Following the presentation, there will be a discussion of whether UVM needs a campus coffee house. The meeting is open to the public, and coffee will be served -- naturally.

Better Things for Better Living... through Chemistry

RESEARCH CONDUCTED BY PHYSICS DEPT.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Several weeks ago an article pointed out the growing proportions of research at UVM. To make use of this knowledge, CYNIC has two reporters working regularly to bring the general student some direct educational benefit from the research.

Have you ever been curious about the interaction of gas molecules with surfaces? Probably not, but the Chairman of the Physics Department at UVM, Prof. Albert D. Crowell, has a "scientific curiosity" which he has been striving to satisfy since his graduate days at Harvard (M.S.) and Brown (B.S. and Ph.D.).

The first part of Mr. Crowell's two-phase program involves experimental observations of changes in properties of metal when the metal comes in contact with a gas. With the help of Ted Ansbacher, MIT graduate and Ph.D. candidate, and Dean Clewey, Middlebury graduate and Ph.D. candidate also, Mr. Crowell observes primarily changes in the metal's electrical conductivity and photoelectric work function.

To determine the former, Mr. Ansbacher forms a film of the metal-molybdenum in a high vacuum, and measures the change in its resistance as carbon monoxide is admitted to the chamber. The photoelectric work function of solid molybdenum is determined by Mr. Clewey by measuring the changes in the energy necessary from an ultra-violet light source to cause the ejection of an electron from the molybdenum in the presence of the changing amounts of carbon monoxide.

"In both cases," says Mr. Crowell, "it is important to know how many gas molecules contribute to the changes observed. These are very small numbers compared with the numbers involved in the traditional chemical reactions, and special techniques are required. Radio-active tracers are used in conjunction with other methods."

The second phase, "although it is related, essentially involves a different type of interaction: that of a spherical molecule of an inert gas with solids possessing a graphite crystalline structure." Further, it involves the calculations of the energies of interaction. The effects involved in the first phase, described above, depend upon the transfer or sharing of electrons between the solid and the gas molecule. The interactions with the graphite involve no transfer or sharing of electrons. Over the past few years, methods of calculating the energies for inert gas atoms with graphite and with boron nitride have been developed. Last year Miss Chi Won Chang did research for her Master's degree in this field. The past summer's methods have been extended to include polar molecules.

Mr. Crowell has also predicted theoretically and observed by experiment that interactions between two gas molecules free in space are not the same as those between two molecules near a surface. Together with John E. Krizan, Assist. Prof. of Physics he is exploring statistically, the mechanical consequences of these interactions near surfaces. "Mr. Krizan's calculations show that there may well be significant discrepancies in the interpretation of data in the field of determining the surface areas of porous materials."

In addition to satisfying his scientific curiosity, Mr. Crowell's research has possible practical applications in the fields of contact catalysis and corrosion, both of which depend upon the interaction of gases with solid surfaces. He receives financial support in grants from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Gulf Oil, and the U.S. Air Force.

Conservative Speaks Thursday

SCOPE will present William A. Rusher, the publisher of "National Review," as speaker, Thursday, Oct. 28, at 8 p.m. in North Lounge, Billings Center. Mr. Rusher, William Buckley's right-hand man, is known to be "hard-hitting, witty and urbane" speaker.

"National Review" is the number one conservative magazine in the United States. William Buckley, the editor, is a candidate for mayor of New York City on the conservative ticket. Mr. Rusher shares many of Mr. Buckley's views and has become one of the leading men in that party. His viewpoint on many issues is subject to debate, but no one can doubt the importance of his viewpoint, nor can anyone afford to ignore it. Mr. Rusher will speak on "The United Nations: Promise or Menace?" and should provide the stimulus for a controversial evening.

Governor Speaks At Consumer Day

By Stephen Carlson

Faced with the prospect of attending the proceedings of Vermont Consumer Day, the reaction of this reporter was vaguely this: "Ho hum, so I have to sit through six hours of lectures on consumer affairs. Better bring along plenty of No-Doz." But when the session was over, he needed, if anything, a tranquilizer. Thoroughly shaken by the events of the day, he was debating whether to buy a pistol and fight back against the merchandisers, or to climb into a hole and stop consuming completely. After extensive consideration, both alternatives proved impractical. Nevertheless, six hours of lectures on how we consumers are being taken advantage of can be a very unnerving experience.

The program, which was sponsored by the Consumer Information Clearinghouse (a UVM extension service), took place in the Lower Waterman Lounge on Tuesday, Oct. 12. The room was lined with exhibits and literature about the horrible things that the merchandisers are doing to us. One exhibit showed two rolls of one brand of toilet paper which contained the same number of sheets as four rolls of another brand. However, the four rolls cost about twice as much. Other exhibits demonstrated how many brand-name companies, dealing in such products as bleach and aspirin, change much more than their lesser-known competitors. Yet bleach is bleach, and aspirin is aspirin.

While wandering about, this reporter was approached by a kind-looking, elderly lady, who asked if he smoked. Always the gentleman, he quickly whipped out his Pall Malls to offer her one, and was somewhat embarrassed to find that she was distributing anti-smoking literature.

The first speaker of the day was Governor Hoff, who said that as a consumer of parking places he couldn't seem to find too many of them near Waterman Building. In a serious vein, the governor said that Vermont is not presently doing anything to protect the consumer; a study should be made to determine what should be done. He cited real estate as a commodity in which consumers have been frequently cheated. As an example, he noted a recent case in which a man bought a piece of property from a private seller which actually belonged to the Fish and Game Dept.

The Governor's speech was followed by a panel discussion with experts in various fields of interest to the consumer. Dr. James Armstrong, Assistant State Veterinarian, pointed out that Vermont has no meat inspection laws. There is nothing, for example, to prevent a producer from slaughtering a sick horse with a dirty axe, then dragging it across a dirty floor to cut up and sell as good meat. Mr. Armstrong found reason for concern, recently, at a Vermont fair grounds where the hamburgers had been supplied by a company which usually only renders dead animals and supplies dog food.

The leading speaker at the afternoon session was Rev. Robert McEwen, chairman of the economics dept. at Boston College and President of the Council on Consumer Information. Rev. McEwen said that the best way to adopt new legislation is to imitate consumer-protecting laws of other states. He quoted many such laws.

In the evening session, the speaker, introduced by Mrs. Shannon McCune, was Mrs. Esther Peterson, who has been appointed by President Johnson as Special Presidential Assistant for Consumer Affairs. Mrs. Peterson, a Vermonter who has a home over in the "banana belt," East Thetford, said that the trouble with most consumers is that they don't complain enough. She objected, for example, to the complex mathematics which must be performed by the housewife in order to determine what is the better buy: one family size package, (16 3/4 oz.) for $.98 or two king size ones, (9 7/22 oz. each) at three for $1.67. Mrs. Peterson has been sent misleading labels, by irate consumers. She cited one which said "machine washable" on one side and "dry clean only" on the other side.

EDITORIAL...

PARENTS AND THE CYNIC

This weekend has been designated Parents' Weekend here at UVM. Our "pitch" this week, therefore, will be directed toward that group.

There have been many new developments since the last organized weekend of this type. We are indeed fortunate in having such a fine and refined, yet down to earth, person as Dr. McCune as our new President. We also have a new Director of Student Activities, and a newly instituted Fraternity Manager's Association. Turning to the physical aspects of the campus, much of the interior of the Waterman building has been remodeled. The IBM Center has been enlarged; the Men's Dining Hall and many of the administrative offices have been successfully relocated. East Hall has been razed, and a "green" which gets greener daily has taken its place. Money has been appropriated for a Life Sciences Building, and plans are in the offering for increased parking facilities and new dormitories, one of which will be a fifteen story coed venture.

If all of you parents had subscriptions to the CYNIC, then this information would be a mere review. What better way to keep abreast of the times and events at UVM than to subscribe to the CYNIC! College is an experience not only for the students, but is also to be shared by you parents. You are an integral part of UVM! Make the most of the opportunities available. Don't just pay the bills, pay attention to what is going on. Below is an appropriate subscription form. Fill it out today and leave it in Billings Student Center.

KEEPING TABS ON KW DISPOSITIONS

Last week's Editorial dealt with Kake Walk Dispositions, the committee itself and the money involved. The appropriations have not yet been approved by the President, and the report is on its way back to the committee. It seems that the President intends to see the money apportioned wisely. Further developments will be presented as they are handed down to us.

Letters To The Editor

Alumnus Praises Debate

To the Editor:

It is now 11:15 on a Friday evening, and I have been moved to write this letter as the result of a news broadcast on a Boston television station.

The date will indicate that this is "Viet Nam Day," and needless to say, the news has been filled with pictures and stories of various campus demonstrations across the country. I was most pleased and proud to hear of the "demonstration" planned for tomorrow at UVM, namely a debate on the issue at hand.

I do not question the right of any student to make his feelings known, and a peaceful demonstration is, in most circumstances, a suitable vehicle. However, as a UVM alumnus, it was gratifying to learn that the present student body has chosen a different, more dignified, and, hopefully, more stimulating avenue of approach to this problem.

My congratulations and thanks to everyone concerned.

Yours very truly,
Robert D. Edelstein
Class of 1958

Students Are Well Dressed

To the Editor:

Last weekend a friend of mine, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts, visited UVM. She commented on the dress of students here. Since UMass is near Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, AIC, and others, comparison is possible.

What were the comments? They were extremely favorable. Why? At Smith it's cut-off jeans and braids (except on weekends). At UMass students registered in bathing suits and girls wear slacks more often than skirts.

Admittedly, I realize things could be "just a little bit better" here when I see a disheveled something crawl into the dining hall or drag itself across campus. I think, however, we have had enough criticism, castigation, and chastisement.

The UMass student made me realize that the situation here is not as serious as we sometimes think. What is needed is less destructive criticism and more constructive comments.

THE SCEPTIC

By Merry Andrews

Last night we saw a sad thing.

Up into the mountains we went, to visit a youth of our acquaintance, who once was gay and free like the rest of us, but whose life now is torn apart by that most deplorable of habits. The world has no use for this boy. People with other sorts of addictions can be of use to society: the alcoholic, after all, gives the Irish something to write about; the drug addict is a useful stereotype for those who don't like colored people or jazz. But what good could a man like this be? What, we ask you, can you do in this world with a fellow who reads?

The sad and frightening thing is that he started out much like the rest of us. He came from a lovely home, and went only to the better schools. As a duck-tailed youth, he took autos apart and frolicked with the neighborhood girls. He watched television and skipped about the streets with his gang; in short, he had all the cultural advantages available to today's middle class. It is, certainly, difficult to understand how this could happen in a land like ours, but it did. One day, alone at home, bereft for the moment of parental guidance, he picked up a Reader's Digest and began to read!

Although many today claim Reader's Digest is harmless and not addicting, we know well that its use leads to use of bigger things.

And in his case that's exactly what it did. He picked up a Life magazine; he found an old copy of Nation. He encountered a book, left about by the careless and lower-class cleaning lady, and read it through, ignoring the handy condensation on the cover. Like the tiny stone that begins the great avalanche, one thing led to yet another, until he spent nearly all his time reading. And he became what he is today: a useless member of our society; a man who spends time thinking, thus frittering away his fine young life.

He sits in an old soft chair, surrounded by the objects of his addiction: back issues of New Republic, bound copies of National Review, scattered pages of Commentary. Books fill the bookshelves intended for potted plants. And he sits there, gazing out at the trees by his home, remarking that they are really sort of nice. He is obviously lost.

It is a sad thing to behold, is it the fault of his environment? Can we, indeed, blame it on heredity? Fortunately, society is beginning at last to recognize it as a disease, not a crime. But the fact remains that his youth was plucked from him by this vile and horrid habit, and that he can be of no use to society today. How, indeed, could he participate in the worthwhile games of life, romping about the college green with his fellows, with not a care in the world? His values have been distorted; he feels it is important to think through things by himself. He has been seduced away from the simple pleasures of our life.

We present the poor fellow's case to you, not to disturb you, but simply as a warning.

We recognize, of course, that next to none of you are in danger of such an addiction. We note with pleasure the stacks of unread periodicals in the neighborhood stores. We are delighted to see that you overcome the temptation of being in the library with all those books, by ignoring them; by concentrating instead on the lovely young women, the curly-haired young men.

Yet the threat is ever there. We all know the insidiousness with which an idea can creep into the mind. We know the frightening feeling of actually wanting to see what's inside a book.

But we say to you now, be strong!

Put down that magazine; close that book. Read only when it is assigned; and then only if you cannot procure a condensed edition. Pursue the important things, and stray never from the paths of righteousness, lost forever to our young friend. And when you feel temptation coming on, persevere; think of him there with his books, needing them desperately, unable to live without them, wasting his life with thought.

And we know you'll come through.

A perfectly serious postscript:

Michael S. Hayton has written the Editor a letter (CYNIC, Oct. 15) saying "why not procure for this great center of learning an honest-to-gosh big time movie projector" on which to show the "impressive film listings" at UVM. It is of course fun to write sarcastic letters before discovering the facts of the matter, but he is in such error here that we won't allow him even that pleasure. What does he pretend to mean by a "big time projector"? Would he suggest buying a 35mm. machine on which to show 16mm. films? He could, if he would care to, go into the Auto Visual Center and express surprise at the sight of 16mm. projectors available for use, which happen to be the latest models made. He could inspect the excellent sound system in Votey and the projector which belongs there. If "two-bit projection...makes mockery of university film fare" it is very probably due to the fact that the projectionists, being people, from time to time make mistakes. But we would strongly suggest that in the future he discover what he is talking about before he complains.

Lawyer Addresses

Student Law Association

Mr. Joseph Wool, a prominent trial lawyer, was the guest speaker at the last meeting of the Student Law Association. Mr. Wool, a graduate of UVM and BU Law School, spoke to the organization about his specialized field.

He began by emphasizing the importance that the individual find the field of law which is best suited to his own interests and abilities. He also gave members some suggestions for their future in the practice of law.

He then described some of his personal experiences in trial courts, pointing out the importance of thoroughly examining all the facts in a case.

After the formal address, there followed a question and answer period. This covered such diverse fields as the need for uniform divorce laws, the issue of Windsor prison, the specialization in the field of law, and opportunities for lawyers in Vermont.

The next meeting of the Student Law Association will be held at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 26th at which time Lyman J. Gould, professor of Political Science, will speak on the "Mechanics of Triumph - How to Get into Law School."

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director of Placement

A Program for the Potential Executive. One of the more interesting and little-known programs, by our students, is the Management Intern Program, designed to attract talented young men and women into management careers with the Federal Service. Potentiality for growth to the upper levels of the Civil Service, rather than a particular background, is the important criterion for these positions. About 20 different agencies, among them Agriculture, Defense, Navy and State, to mention but a few, have made agreements with the U.S. Civil Service Commission to provide special training and development for successful Management Intern Candidates. Management Interns, already at work, in a wide variety of administrative fields, have made rapid progress and are now providing the leadership needed to carry out the vast responsibilities of Federal Government.

Anyone who at the time of appointment will have at least a bachelor's degree or equivalent work experience is qualified to compete for a Management Internship. A candidate becomes eligible for appointment by successfully completing a two part written test. The first part, the Federal Service Entrance Examination is a general ability test, required of all competitors, except those qualifying on the basis of Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test Scores, as described in the Announcement. The additional test, in public affairs and administrative problems, is required of all candidates applying for Management Internships. Those who attain a passing score in the written test will be required to participate in a group discussion on current topics and an individual interview. The process is completed by the attainment of favorable recommendations from faculty members, supervisors, and others in a position to appraise the candidates personal qualities.

Test dates are given in the Civil Service Commission Examination Announcement #369 available in the Placement Office. If you are interested in receiving a Management Intern appointment you should apply as early as possible and no later than January 19, 1966. To apply, use the tear-out application form on the last page of Announcement #369. In the space marked "Title of Examination" write "FSEE, Management Intern Option." Submit this to the Civil Service Office having jurisdiction over the place where you wish to take the written test. A list of these offices is included in Announcement #369. The examination is given in major cities throughout the United States. You can qualify for both FSEE and Management Intern positions, in fact, you may receive offers for FSEE positions before you are fully qualified as a Management Intern. However, it is usually to your advantage to select a Management Internship. Because of the way favorable impression created by previous Management Interns, candidates who successfully complete the Management Intern examination are in great demand by agencies in Washington, D.C. Management Interns begin at Grades GS-7 ($6,050 a year) or GS-9 ($7,220 a year) depending upon their qualifications. Candidates appointed from the FSEE begin at Grades GS-5 ($5,000 a year) or GS-7. If you fail either the written Management Intern Option or the group oral, you are still eligible for many excellent employment opportunities under the FSEE within a month. If successful on the Intern Option, you will be scheduled for your oral examination in February or April. You will receive your final rating several weeks later. Agencies generally make their appointments in the spring and begin their training programs in the early summer. However, some appointments are made throughout the year. Most positions are with the Agency's Central Headquarters in Washington, D.C.

Announcement:

Test for Management Internships will be given only in October, November, January, and February on the Following dates:

Applications must be received by -	For the test that is given on -
October 20, 1965	November 20, 1965
December 15, 1965	January 15, 1966
January 19, 1966	February 19, 1966

Candidates for Management Internships who pass the written tests in October and November will be interviewed during the week of February 14, 1966. Those who pass the written tests for Management Internships in January and February will be interviewed during the week of April 18, 1966.

NEW YORK STATE JUNIOR ENGINEERS' EXAMINATION. All Senior and Graduate College engineers who are possibly interested in full time employment with an agency of New York State should plan to take the Junior Engineers Exam scheduled for November 6 at 1:30 P.M. in Room 125 of the Waterman Building.

PLACEMENT OFFICE TECHNICAL INTERVIEWS. Candidates for BS/MS/Ph.D. in Technology will begin technical employment interviews on November 1, 1965. Candidates must be registered with the Placement Office in order to take part in the On Campus Interview Program. Those students who wish to interview during the week of November 1 - 5, should make arrangements to sign-up on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, October 25, 26, 27 from 4:00-5:00 p.m. and 6:00-8:00 p.m. in the Placement Office. Those employers who are scheduled to interview in the Placement Office during the week of November 1 - 5 include:

Mixes And Matches

By Laurie Frank

Dear All,

The Vermont football games not only supply the mixing of players on the field, they also make it possible for the sororities and fraternities to have after the game social mixers. These mixers often result in the matching of individuals.

Pat Sullivan, '66, of Alpha Delta Pi became engaged to Tim Brousseau, '65, Best of Luck on this fine match.

The girls of Delta Delta Delta sorority are proud to announce the engagements of the following members: Cathy Bennett, '66, to Fletcher Platt, '65, of Sigma Nu; Holly Pember, '66, to Hank Franz, '67, of Bloomfield College; Nancy Poplawski, '67, to Mike Behan, '66, of Kappa Sigma; and Sue Walker, '67, to Steve Fisher of the University of Virginia Law School.

Heartiest congratulations to Douglas Chase, '66, of Lambda Iota on his pinning to Linda Fisk, '67, of Burlington, Vermont, and to Douglas Holland,

Fraternity Row

Greek Week has come and gone; for the majority of students and faculty, the fraternities and the IFC will disappear for another year. That is, they will disappear until something occurs that can cause someone to criticize the IFC or the fraternities. This, perhaps greater than any one other thing, is the greatest problem faced by the IFC, Fraternity Row, sponsored by the IFC, is one means by which the fraternities can explain themselves and defend their actions.

In recent weeks, the IFC has been criticized. Surprised? The IFC did not expect complaints until much later in the year. Let us, however, examine some of them. Greek Week was criticized, not for what it did but for what it did not do. The argument was that Greek Week, in some of its forms, should be extended throughout the year. This suggestion has been studied, and in great part, will be carried out.

The IFC-Self Study was presented and in reality, the IFC has examined itself and found many glaring problems. The entire body of the Sophomore Representatives are meeting every week and trying to reach a program that will correct these mistakes.

Kake Walk Dispositions has been criticized. In some part, the complaint is justified; in others, it is not. The entire concept of giving out money from the IFC to various organizations and institutions may be subject to re-evaluation. These problems will be solved and the results stated in a future column.

These seem to be the most blatant criticism. They are under study. Any organization or person who does intensive and extensive work is bound to be attacked by those that he injures or ignores. It is a common problem of life; we hope that by accepting these criticisms and reviewing them, the IFC will become a stronger and more comprehensive body.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

B.C. Wants Law Students

A unique institute for college upperclassmen interested in a career in law will be conducted at the Boston College Law School on Saturday, October 30, starting at 9:15 A.M.

One of the major features of the program will be a comprehensive analysis of the Law School Admission Test. Three experts on the nature, purpose and interpretation of the Law School Admission Test will explain to students techniques by which those who take the Law School Admission Test may obtain the best possible score. An extensive discussion and question period will follow the presentation by the three lawyers who are highly skilled in the evaluation of the three separate scores which each student receives from the Law School Admission Test.

Other features of the program will include a model class in law school. Registrants for the institute need no prior registration. They will be guests of the University for lunch.

The Boston College - V.M.L. football game will take place at 1:30 P.M. at Alumni Stadium on the campus of Boston College on that afternoon.

Best Wishes for a happy future.

Greeks Plan Drama

Every night in the past few weeks at the Arena Theatre from 7-9, the cries of the Greeks are being heard throughout the campus. No, the fraternities are not staging a rematch of the Greek Week tug-of-war; the rehearsals for the Greek tragedy Hippolytus are underway. These rehearsals present a unique experience for many of the cast members who have never taken part in Greek style theater. The style of acting is a bit different, and it presents an exciting challenge to the student actors. Bill Dixon, a tall, stern Theseus, is playing opposite Judy Guernsey as Phaedra. Hippolytus, the lead, is played by Peter Covette. Peter is an experienced actor who has been a member of the Champlain Shakespeare festival for the past two summers.

Beyond the cries of the Greeks are heard the hammerings of the scene shop. The play is set in Troezen, in front of the house of Theseus, and demands an authentic Greek representation. The set is designed by William Schenk, the new technical man in the theater dept. Mr. Schenk comes to us from Ohio University and is experienced in scene design. He has built a balsa-wood model of his design for the show which will soon be on display. The authenticity of the set will be enhanced by the props and costumes as well. Full head masks are being made to fit each character.

Hippolytus promises to be an entertaining and educational production. The play is scheduled for Nov. 4, 5, and 6, in the Arena Theatre. Tickets will be available at the Campus Store and at the Arena Theater box office, starting Monday, Oct. 25, for $1.50.

Family Associates Aids U.V.M.

Results of efforts of Family Associates are now noticeable on campus, even though the organization is still in its developmental stages. The construction and activities of the group are a refreshing addition to campus life.

Although Family Associates is governed by an executive board, of which Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Roney are Presidents, it is composed of all parents of UVM students. Its purpose is to enrich student life as well as to provide parents with a sense of belonging to the University. Dean Harris and Dean Patzer attend all meetings of the Association, serving as advisors.

The Association was formed in 1963, and for a relatively young organization, its dues-paying membership is large. Seven hundred families pay five dollar dues annually, which is the Association's only source of income.

Two programs are sponsored by Family Associates: Parents' Weekend, and a gift program. Magazines in Billings and in dormitory lounges, encyclopedias, drapes in Billings, and the silver tea service used at many University functions were all donated by Family Associates. In addition, 2500 dollars is contributed each year to the University by the Association. Parents' Weekend, Oct. 22-24, is sponsored and planned entirely by the Association.

BRIDGE CLUB FORMED

There is now a club on campus for Bridge players welcoming everyone—beginners, experts, and all in between. One can join simply by playing in one of the weekly games, which are held every Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Lower Lounge Waterman.

There is no obligation connected with membership in this club. Each person by playing automatically becomes a member in full standing and gains simultaneously the distinction of being known as a bridge player here at UVM.

Having just been organized and given Student Association recognition, the club already has a budget and some funds from S.A. to buy supplies.

Confidence

Like a doctor or lawyer, your jeweler holds a position of trust. Confidence in his advice is in a direct ratio to the degree of professional knowledge he possesses. Membership in the American Gem Society is granted only to a select few jewelers who have satisfied rigid requirements as to gemological knowledge and high standards of business ethics. Our firm is understandably proud to share this honor with only some 900 other firms in the U.S. and Canada.

Select Your Favorite Foods

Steak? French Fries? Strawberry Shortcake? What are your favorite foods? Dinner, Tuesday, October 26, is the time to tell all UVM Saga managers. Saga's Food Preference Survey is a questionnaire to determine what students want on their dinner tables. It is being given early in the school year, to allow maximum use in planning menus throughout the year.

This year's survey will list 143 food items in eight separate categories such as salads, dinner desserts, and luncheon entrees. It takes less than 15 minutes to complete. Students will be asked to register their preferences on a seven-value rating scale ranging from "Like Very Much" to "Dislike Very Much." "This not only tells us what you like most, it also measures exactly how much you like each item," explains Mr. Hagadone. "Then it's each manager's job to see that your favorites are served in your dining room."

After the survey is completed, the forms will be air mailed to Saga's headquarters office in California to be tabulated by electronic data processing. The forms from each school are separately totaled and the results are returned to the managers at each school to help him prepare his menus.

Does the survey work? This is the 10th year Saga has conducted a food popularity poll at the schools. It serves throughout the country. "There is no doubt of its value in helping us provide better, more personalized, and more satisfying menu selection in our schools. We hope every boarder will accept our invitation to participate. Just bring a number two pencil and a preference."

YANKEE CONFERENCE AT A GLANCE

As early competition in the Yankee Conference draws to a close (football and soccer seasons) an evaluation is in order. First, our football team, although flooded with inexperienced personnel will meet last season's Yankee Conference rival, Massachusetts, with an opportunity to gain sole possession of second place for the 1965-'66 season. This success must be attributed to Coach Clifford and his staff who have held this ball club together, even after a disheartening effort against a fine University of Maine team early in the season. This team has come back in successive weeks to defeat its Yankee Conference rivals, University of Rhode Island and the University of New Hampshire. The stature of our team has increased immensely over the past three seasons and, speaking on a note of optimism, a Yankee Conference championship is in sight in the near future.

Turning to another aspect of gridiron activity, the UVM soccer team will face the University of Massachusetts on October 30th at Massachusetts, in a game which would give the Catamount booters an undisputed first place finish in Yankee Conference play. After winning their first six games this season (four over Yankee Conference rivals), our team's rise from obscurity to uncontested success cannot be overemphasized. In only their second season, this team has conquered all foes, and is assured of, at least, a tie for first place in the Yankee Conference. Our hats are off to you, and good luck for the rest of the season.

Catamount Fullback Bobby Mitchell bulls his way over from goal to go for UVM's first score. Cats went on to beat UNH 23-7. (Credit: Davidson, SPS)

By Bob Bloomenthal

The UVM football team gained its second Yankee Conference victory of the year by a surprisingly close 23-7 score over New Hampshire last Saturday. It marked the Cats' tenth win in their last eleven home games. The victory did not come easily, however. The Wildcats put up quite a scrap, especially in the first half.

Vermont did not register a score until less than 3:30 remained in the first half, but they threatened a few times. After receiving the opening kickoff, the Cats drove to the UNH nine before giving the ball up on downs. On this drive, sophomore fullback Bob Mitchell, who played by far his best game of the season, carried the ball on the first five plays from scrimmage. He picked up 41 of the 71 yards he gained for the day on this series of plays.

Twice more UVM drove deep into New Hampshire territory, but a pass interception and a pass which Dick Hebert caught beyond the end zone stopped these threats. Finally, Vermont scored after Hebert returned a punt to the UNH 33. Four running plays brought the ball to the 10 yard line and from there Scott Fitz passed to Jeff Kuhman whose beautiful leaping catch set the ball on the three yard. Mitchell bullied his way for the remaining distance on the next play and after Joe Soldano's kick, Vermont led 7-0 at the half. The Catamounts' killer instinct was aroused, however, on the opening kickoff of the second half, when New Hampshire's Paul Lovullo scooted 82 yards on the return for a touchdown. Beach's kick evened the score at 7-7, but after this play, both teams stayed in New Hampshire territory until 3 minutes were left in the game.

Hebert returned the following kickoff 48 yards to the New Hampshire 43 and from there it took the Cats ten plays to hit paydirt. Mitchell scored his second TD of the game from one yard out, and Soldano's kick made it 14-7. Five minutes later Vermont struck again after recovering a Wildcat fumble on the UNH twenty-nine. Game No. 6 Norwich (Cadets, Horsemen)

October 23 at Burlington

LOCATION: Northfield, Vt.

ENROLLMENT: 1200 (all men)

COLORS: Maroon and White CONFERENCE: None

SERIES RECORD AGAINST VERMONT: 15-35-6

1965 PROSPECTS: "Bright" as former Penn State standout Joe Sabol takes over the controls from Bob Priestley. Sabol inherits 18 lettermen on the plus side but some depleted backfield ranks. The interior line is the strongest asset, particularly at guard where five lettermen return. Joe Roy at QB and Bill Jersey at fullback are the only real veterans in the backfield.

1964 GAME: Vermont 21, Norwich 17. Upset-minded Cadets held a winning hand until final three minutes when QB Scott Fitz marched the undefeated Cats 42 yards and delivered the mail himself the final yard. Win was seventh in row (last game of '63, first six in '64) for Vermont eleven. Cadets jumped into 14-0 lead behind the great running of Tony Campanio. Frank Foerster rambled 35 yards and Ken Andrade converted to cut the margin to 14-7 at the half but Joe Spillane booted a 42-yd. FG to push the deficit back to 17-7 in the third. Great runs by Deane Kent set up second jaunt by Foerster (6) while defense regrouped itself in second half.

offense mark in this game, carried the ball in for the score from one yard out. Soldano made it a perfect 3 for 3 day on conversions with his boot to make it 21-7 at the 10:49 mark of the third period.

The final two points for UVM were scored by the defense, which did an excellent job in stopping the Wildcats in the second half. Sophomore Colin Hurd blocked a New Hampshire punt, and when the ball rolled out of the end zone, Vermont was given credit for a safety making the final score 23-7.

During the final two periods the UVM defense held New Hampshire to 22 yards on the ground and none through the air. It is very difficult to single out individual stars for a team's performance, but names which come to mind for outstanding defensive jobs are Capt. Rusty Brink, who got himself another interception, John Sullivan, Bill Van Bennekum, Bill Wolff, and Dick Hebert. Hebert also turned in a good offensive show by gaining 32 yards in eight carries and making many good returns of punts and kickoffs. Mitchell was the leading ground gainer for the day with 71 yards on twelve carries. Scott Fitz's passing was off as he completed but 7 of 24 passes on a cold day. The running, for the first time this year, however, made up for it.

This Saturday, Vermont opens defense of its State Series crown by hosting Norwich. The Cadets are in the midst of a disappointing 2-3 season, but they always seem to get up for Vermont. They remember last year's game in which UVM came from behind in the closing minutes to win 21-17, and the Cadets will be out to avenge that defeat.

Lane Series Presents...

"Stop the world. I want to get off."

By Judy Beeber

Avid theater goers will be pleased to hear that the musical comedy "Stop the World - I Want to Get Off" will appear in Memorial Auditorium tonight, Friday, Oct. 29, at 8:30 p.m. on the Red Lane Series.

"Stop the World," appeared in London for 15 months before it came to New York, where it scored a tremendous success and ran for 64 weeks on Broadway. It is now on national tour and will travel throughout the U.S. and Canada with its professional cast, starring Jackie Warner in the lead role. The show was written by Leslie Brisson, and English songwriter and film scenarist, and by Anthony Newley, Book, lyrics, music, all were written by the two together. Newley took the one male (and lead) role and directed the show.

The show is called "a new style" musical because it follows no previous pattern of stage entertainment. The leading character, called Littlechap, portrays the life of a commonplace man who learns to climb to undeserved heights of fame and fortune. His entire life is chronicled; from his birth, through his courtship and wedding, his work in his rich father-in-law's business, his rise to fame as an industrial tycoon, his election to Parliament, and his elevation to the peerage as Lord Littlechap. Only at the end of the play does he realize that he has substituted worthless and ephemeral possessions for the important values in life. With this realization, he sings "What Kind of Fool Am I," which was a popular hit in its own right.

Appearing in the role of Littlechap, the only male in the show, will be Jackie Warner, whose career has spanned vaudeville, supper clubs, Broadway stage and television. He has recently appeared on Broadway in "Irma La Douce," "Carnival," and "Wildcat." Supporting Mr. Warner will be a cast of eight ladies: Dana Haskell, Judy Wiler, Arnette, Maria, Michele Conaway, Mara Joyce, Jane Stuart, Meredith Pogue and Judy Jensen.

Seeing the show may not stop the world for us to get off should we so choose; however, it may stop the world enough for us to get a clearer picture of it.

K W Directors Select Assistants

The semester is only half over, but the activities of the Kake Walk Committee are in full swing. The first big social weekend of the second semester is well along in its planning stages. The Directors -- Bob Ostrom, Dave Cohen and Vin DeCesaria -- chose their secretary, Carol Cayward, earlier this month.

The committee is now at full strength with the addition of four assistants. They are Nicholas Rowland, Theodore Rowen, Terry Matthews and Peter Ambrose. Nick is the Assistant Director of Finance and a member of Kappa Sigma. Ted, one of the two Production Assistants, is responsible for the skits plus lighting and sound. He is a member of Tau Epsilon Phi. Terry, the Assistant Production Director in charge of royalty campaign and walkers, is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. Pete, from Sigma Nu, is the Assistant Director of Publicity.

The time and effort contributed by each member of the committee is immeasurable. Since last Kake Walk, the Directors have evaluated that production with hopes of improving this year's program. With the aid of Carol and the Assistants, these hopes will become a reality, and the 69th Annual Kake Walk will be bigger and better than ever.

Poll Ponders Draft Quota

By Marion Robinson

With the October and November draft calls the largest since the Korean War, the nation's draft boards are set to look at requests for student deferments with a more discerning eye. Due to this increase, the CYNIC distributed a questionnaire concerning the limitations and qualifications of the draft.

The Selective Service System will not abandon deferments for college students, but they will be picking up students who are not attending school full time or who are not making satisfactory progress in their classes. This policy will also be followed at the local board in Burlington.

In February, the draft call dropped to 3,000. The Viet Nam crisis shot it to 7,900 in March; 13,700 in April; 15,100 in May; 17,000 in June; 17,100 in July; and 16,500 in August. On July 28 President Johnson announced a September call of 27,000 men to meet the increased commitment in Viet Nam.

Most states had large enough "draft pools" to take care of the increased demands. The 1963 order by President Kennedy stated that married men with no children were not to be drafted as long as single men were available. But the October call was 33,600 and the November call is 36,430... the two largest calls since the end of the Korean War. This call will include men for the Marine Corps. Some states now say that it would be necessary to take married men "sometime in the fall." As you remember, President Johnson stated that married men without children would be considered the same as single men. It was said that the waiting lines formed in Las Vegas. The National Director of the Selective Service System said, "I believe these couples will find they did not beat any deadline. We will get most of them -- in four or five months." In the CYNIC questionnaire 163 UVM students felt that married students should not be drafted, while 124 thought that they should, 89 thought so, if the situation demanded it, but the classification should be low, 38 felt that it should be only the ones without families. One student said, "All men should be eligible for the draft, regardless of marital status to prevent hasty marriages and 'rapid' families in order to avoid the draft."

All local boards are rapidly running out of single men between the ages of 19 and 26, the present induction limits -- which the majority of UVM students feel should be adjusted to 18 and the childless married men are the next to go. After the married men, college students will be the next to go.

The Selective Service has a policy about deferred students. Each student "is considered on his own merits, with the student's course of study, its importance to the national interest, and the student's scholastic ability" as

Demonstration

A demonstration in support of the United States' efforts to contain Communism on Viet Nam is planned for today at 4 p.m.

According to the organizers of the movement, the demonstration is to be "a non-violent display of the responsible attitude of young American adults." Its purpose is to show the world that American policy abroad has the support of the vast majority of the student population.

"It is the responsibility of young Americans to support our government and fighting men, and not to oppose government policies or actions during troubled times," Ralph Grenon, '67, spokesman for the movement, declared. He urged all students to gather at 4 p.m. today (Friday) on the college green, in front of Waterman, for a march through downtown Burlington. The group, hoping to overcome student apathy, expects a gathering of 500 or more.

Campus Mourns Dr. Marston

Mourning for Dr. Frederic C. Marston, Jr., professor of English at UVM, was observed this week. Dr. Marston died Saturday at his home in South Burlington. The American flag was flown at half-mast on the UVM campus. Memorial services were Tuesday at the First Unitarian Church in Burlington.

Though ill for nine months with cancer, he had last spring met a seminar class and, as varsity coach of tennis at Vermont, guided his team to the Yankee Conference championship in 1965.

Dr. Marston joined the Vermont faculty in 1948. He has taught previously as an instructor and assistant professor at Brown University. He was a contributor to numerous scholarly journals, was co-editor of "W.D. Howells: Prefaces to Contemporaries," and was at work on an edition of the correspondence of W.D. Howells up to the time of his death.

Born in Montclair, N.J., Oct. 2, 1914, he earned his A.B. degree at Williams in the Class of 1937; his M.A. at Duke University in 1940; and his Ph.D. at Brown in 1944.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he served as president of the Vermont Alpha Chapter and arranged and coordinated the Triennial Council meeting of the fraternity when the Council met on the Vermont campus in 1964. He was also a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon, and the Modern Language Association.

Dr. Marston served as University Marshal from 1958 to 1964, an office which placed him at the head of formal academic processions of the University.

He was also closely associated with Kake Walk, the oldest collegiate winter carnival in the U.S., which he served as advisor for nine years. He was twice honored by the student directors who ran the gala February show, first with a trophy and secondly with a Kake on his retirement as advisor in 1964.

His interest in and service to student programs also included service as faculty advisor to the Interfraternity Council.

In addition, Prof. Marston coached the University's tennis team from 1956 through the 1965 season, guiding Catamount teams to the Yankee Conference championships in 1958 and 1965 and a tie for the crown in 1960.

Players Present Hippolytus Nov. 4, 5, 6

As Hippolytus enters its final week of rehearsals, excitement at the Arena Theatre is rising. The massive structures of the set are receiving their final touches. The set, designed by William Schenk, consists of a series of platforms, pillars, doors, and stairs. The Arena Theatre has been transformed into a three-quarters arena with the seats at one end removed.

The production of Hippolytus, directed by Ed Feidner, will be an authentic presentation. Exaggerated, overt movements, full vocal quality, head masks, and Greek costumes will help to represent the classic tradition. Although it has undergone many changes, the modern theatre owes its existence to the Theatre of the Greeks. Many of the dramatic conventions which the audience will see next weekend have become a permanent part of our modern theatre.

Following the production of opening night, there will be a panel discussion centering on the topic, "The Greek Tradition, 1965." Included on the panel are Dean Harris, Mrs. McCune, Mr. Greff, and Mr. Caswell. The panel plans to discuss the meaning or lack of meaning of the Greek tradition in our society today. The entire opening night audience is invited to attend this enlightening discussion.

The play is scheduled for Nov. 4, 5, and 6. Tickets are now on sale in the UVM Bookstore and the Arena Theatre.

Parents Welcomed To Campus

By Patti Capron

After a mad dash to clean rooms and procure hair cuts, UVM students enthusiastically greeted the more than 700 parents who came to campus for the third annual Parents' Weekend.

The weekend officially began at 10 a.m. Saturday with registration and a coffee hour in Billings. Here, over 500 parents got acquainted and planned their activities for the day.

The executive board of Family Associates met during the morning and allocated $1,000 to enrich student life. The gifts include: $100 to UVM's Centennial Club, $200 to establish an emergency fund for students, $300 for paintings for women's residence halls, funds to continue the halls' magazine subscriptions, funds for records for Billings, additions to tea services previously donated, and money to establish prize awards for student painting.

LUNCH

Next on the agenda was lunch in the dining hall. Many parents took advantage of this opportunity to eat with their sons and daughters and also to sample the UVM cuisine.

By one o'clock, the skies were getting pretty dark, but that didn't stop the eager parents and students from pouring into the stands at Centennial Field for the Norwich game. Even the heavy rains didn't dampen their spirits, and they watched the Catamounts fight their way to victory.

At 7:15, a roast beef dinner was served to a capacity crowd in the Waterman dining hall. Immediately following the dinner, Mr. Thomas Roney, President of Family Associates, introduced the head table, and Pres. Shannon McCune spoke to the group. He commented on how interesting as well as challenging it is to work with young people and he stressed the fact that he is trying to develop a closer relationship with students. Pres. McCune said that he is available every Wednesday from 1-4 p.m. in his office and after that in Billings.

Around 10:00 there was a panel discussion by the deans at the Arena Theatre, Fleming Museum. Some 300 parents and many students heard four deans: Dean Kidder, Dean King, Dean Essler, Dean Dowe speak on "Academic Stresses as They Affect Students, Faculty, and Parents." Mr. Roney acted as moderator for the discussion.

NEW GRADING SCHOOL

The panel first listened to an explanation of the new grading system and then discussed the effect that warnings have on parents. Dean King stressed the fact that parents should not be upset when their son or daughter gets a warning because most of the time, students will pull through. In fact in some cases, warnings serve as an incentive to students.

The next portion of the discussion centered on the student-faculty relationship. The deans said that the faculty are interested in what students are doing and any problems they may have. Thus students should not hesitate to take the initiative to go and discuss problems or just talk with teachers, advisors, and deans.

It was also brought out in the discussion that parents should accept the fact that their children are away at school and that they have little control over college students. However, parents should encourage their children have confidence in them, and take an interest in their activities.

A reception followed during which parents had the opportunity to talk individually with the deans.

Past Present

The Company's first engine, the Wasp, took to the air on May 5, 1926. Within a year the Wasp set its first world record and went on to smash existing records and set standards for both land and seaplanes for years to come, carrying airframes and pilots higher, farther, and faster than they had ever gone before.

In recent years, planes powered by Pratt & Whitney Aircraft have gone on to set new standards of performance in much the same way as the Wasp had done in the 1920's. The 727 and DC-9 are indicative of the new family of short-to-medium range jetliners which are powered by the highly successful JT8D turbofan. Examples of current military utilizations are the J58-powered Mach 3 YF-12A which recently established four world aviation records and the advanced TF30-powered F-111 variable-geometry fighter aircraft.

Your and the Future

Take a look at the above chart; then a good long look at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft—where technical careers offer exciting growth, continuing challenge, and lasting stability—where engineers and scientists are recognized as the major reason for the Company's continued success.

Engineers and scientists at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft are today exploring the ever-broadening avenues of energy conversion for every environment... all opening up new avenues of exploration in every field of aerospace, marine and industrial power application. The technical staff working on these programs, backed by Management's determination to provide the best and most advanced facilities and scientific apparatus, has already given the Company a firm foothold in the current land, sea, air and space programs so vital to our country's future. The list of achievements amassed by our technical staff is a veritable list of firsts in the development of compact power plants, dating back to the first Wasp engine which lifted the United States to a position of world leadership in aviation. These engineering and scientific achievements have enabled the Company to obtain its current position of leadership in fields such as gas turbines, liquid hydrogen technology and fuel cells.

Should you join us, you'll be assigned early responsibility. You'll find the spread of Pratt & Whitney Aircraft's programs requires virtually every technical talent. You'll find opportunities for professional growth further enhanced by our Corporation-financed Graduate Education Program. Your degree can be a BS, MS or PhD in: MECHANICAL • AERONAUTICAL • ELECTRICAL • CHEMICAL ENGINEERING • PHYSICS • CHEMISTRY • METALLURGY • CERAMICS • MATHEMATICS • ENGINEERING SCIENCE OR APPLIED MECHANICS.

Sinners Howl On Halloween

By Karen Preis
Student Association

A few months ago, while reading through old copies of the CYNIC, some UVM students came across an interesting piece of news about a long forgotten tradition at UVM. It seems that from 1893 when Kake Walk first began until approximately 1949, the Kake Walk Ball was not the formal dance that it is today, but rather a Masquerade Ball which was widely enjoyed and participated in by the entire campus.

Kake Walk Ball as we know it is well established and will remain the same. This year, however, with Halloween Eve falling on a Saturday night, an opportunity has presented itself for the students of UVM to bring back a bit of the past and have fun while doing so.

This opportunity is the Halloween Howl and Rag Picker's Ball which will be held on Saturday, Oct. 30, from 7:00 p.m. until 12:00 midnight at Southwick Gym. These two activities are being sponsored by the UVM Student Association and the Outing Club. The Halloween Howl will be a folk sing featuring well-known campus personalities. Then at approximately 9:00 p.m., Gary and the Sinners will begin playing in the Ballroom for the Rag Picker's Ball.

Admission will be by UVM ID card and costume. Imagination can produce great costumes with little or no expense.

Hazo Speaks On Poetry

Dr. Samuel Hazo, one of America's most noted younger poets, will bring contemporary poetry to the Billings North Lounge Monday, Nov. 1, at 4:15 p.m. He will read selections from his 1965 book of poetry, My Sons in God and from two previously published volumes, and will engage in "dialectic" with his audience on the meaning and techniques of his poems, and of other poetry.

A Marine captain in the Korean War, Hazo is now Associate Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Science, Duquesne University. A graduate of Notre Dame University, he received his master's degree from Duquesne and holds his doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh. In 1965, he was awarded an honorary Doctor of Literature Degree from Seton Hill College, Greensburg, Pa.

In addition to his poems and essays which have appeared in leading journals in the U.S., Canada and Europe, Dr. Hazo has also written Hart Crane: An Introduction and Interpretation, and has edited The Christian Intellectual, an anthology of humanistic studies, and A Selection of Contemporary Religious Poetry (1965) and, in collaboration with photographer James P. Blair, Listen with the Eye (1964).

Hazo believes that poetry is at its best when it is both personal and transcendent, simultaneously exploring inner and outer reality. He is particularly concerned about the poem as a discovery of love and of self.

Fourth in the current Augustine series presentations, Dr. Hazo's reading will be sponsored by the UVM Newman Center. It is open to the public. The next Augustine lecture will be held on Nov. 18, and it is entitled A Dante Memorial to commemorate the 700th anniversary of the great poet's birth.

Debate Results

Two members of UVM's Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club won four debates, losing four in the Brandeis Debate Tournament at Brandeis University in Waltham, Massachusetts, Oct. 21-23. Michael Schoenfeld, a senior from New York City, and Nicholas Danigelis, a sophomore from Burlington, debated four rounds on the affirmative and four on the negative side of the question "Resolved: that law enforcement agencies in the United States should have greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime." This is the national intercollegiate debate topic and is the one with which UVM debaters will be working for the 1965-66 season.

On the affirmative, Schoenfeld and Danigelis won over St. Peter's (Patterson, N.J.), Emory (Atlanta, Ga.) and Army, and dropped a decision to Ohio State. On the negative they won over Illinois State and lost to Holy Cross, Boston College, and Canisius (Rochester, N.Y.). The pair placed eighteenth in thirty-eight schools, with Western Reserve University (Cleveland, Ohio) taking first place and Holy Cross second. Coach on the trip was Robert Carr, director of debate.

Hammond Returns To UVM

Dr. Phillip Hammond, world famous Princeton archaeologist spoke Thursday afternoon in Billings North Lounge. His talk was sponsored by the IFC and was open to the public. Dr. Hammond discussed "Mummies, Camels, and Digging." He was the head of the American Expedition to Hebron last year on which he was accompanied by UVM Professor Jean Davison and UVM students Martha Piche, Bob Bayilet, and John Bradley.

In the fall of 1964, his team won the second annual ECAC tennis tournament, held annually at Rider College, scoring the maximum possible number of points. The championship-flight singles was an all-Vermont final and Dr. Marston's players also won laurels in the doubles.

One of his sons, Winslow M. Marston, was a member of the 1964-65 team and won the Yankee Conference number two singles title this past spring.

Dr. Marston is survived by his wife, Katherine Foster Marston; three sons, Frederic III of New York City, Winslow, a 1965 Vermont graduate, and Christopher R., both of Princeton, N.J.; a step-daughter, Helena E., and a step-son, Julian S. Kulski, both of South Burlington; a brother Randolph B. of New York City; and two sisters, Ann Marston of Hallowell, Me., and Mrs. Alfred Hill of Owl's Head, Me.

Private services were planned at the convenience of the family, with burial in the East Cemetery in Shelburne, Vt. In lieu of flowers, friends may contribute to the Cancer Research Fund, Mary Fletcher Hospital, Burlington.

EDITORIAL...

ONE LAST LOOK . . .

UVM breathed a deep sigh of sorrow, and the flag was lowered to half-mast in memoriam. One of her dearest and most dedicated faculty members had passed away. He was Dr. Frederic C. Marston, Jr., professor of English.

Dr. Marston was more than an instructor here at UVM. He was a monument to dedication, almost an institution in his own right. Even during his illness he never ceased to take interest in and have deep concern for UVM. Last spring, in deep pain, he held his seminar class at his home and even coached the varsity tennis team to the Yankee Conference Championship.

He was deeply interested in students and their way of life. He could not do enough for our undergraduates. In class, he dedicated himself to instilling a genuine interest in studying in even the most lethargic student.

He was also intimately involved in student life outside of class. He exemplified this by entering into all phases of university life. He wholeheartedly participated in academic, social, and athletic aspects.

For six years he served as University Marshal and could always be seen bringing dignity and a smile to any academic procession he led. He also presided over Vermont's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa for some time.

In the social realm, he served as Advisor to the Kake Walk Committee for nine years and also as IFC Advisor.

As varsity tennis coach, he guided his boys to the championship twice, always emphasizing the aspects of sportsmanship and fair play.

UVM does now and will continue to feel his loss for some time to come, just as it felt his dynamic presence these past years. Those of us who knew him personally will be better off for it; those of us who only knew of him will also be better off for knowing that such a man existed.

Even though time and men move on continuously, his memory will always be held dear to all who knew and respected him.

Letters To The Editor

Ignorance Is Bliss

Dear CYNIC:

The Sceptic mentioned the problems of reading. I agree. Reading leads to demonstrations and other communistic activities. The best advice I can give my fellow student is: don't read "communistic" writings like I.F. Stone's Weekly or Fact. You can get all the facts from our "Ministry of Truth," and we must remember that our "Ministry of Peace" always tells us the truth.

Phil Ochs says that in Mississippi "the calendar lies when it says the present time." But we do not have to worry, Washington is not living in the past. It is very much in the future, 1984 that is.

The Arts Minstrels v. Dylan

By Ken Klonsky

Because of their rapid succession, one is tempted to compare the Saturday night Dylan Concert with the first concert of the Red Lane Series. On Monday evening, the New Christy Minstrels appeared in Burlington and proceeded to put on quite a performance.

The difference between Dylan and his entourage and the Minstrels is striking. Aside from the widely differing sounds, appearance is what one most notices. The Minstrels are 10 clean-cut, healthy-looking young men and women who have appeared at the White House, Dylan and his band would attract stares even in Jake's Bar and Grill.

As far as presentation is concerned the Minstrels have it all over most groups in the country. They encourage and usually obtain audience participation. "This Train," "When the Saints Go Marching In," and "Michael Row the Boat Ashore" all had the full support of the crowd. They also gave three amusing comedy routines utilizing two members' talents for making sound effects. Finally, as true showmen, they gave two encores following two curtain calls. In contrast Dylan conversed sparingly with the crowd and was not really master of his audience. It is possible that he was tired but one is more inclined to say that he is no showman.

The Minstrels provided a varied program for their audience including beautiful love ballads, rousing foot stompers, and one particularly unusual song which they recorded this summer at Italian movie maker, Federico Fellini's, request, Dylan, as poet, song writer and folk singer is well-suited to the coffee house but inadequate on a stage. The New Christy Minstrels, however, are true performing artists.

Something is happening.

And you know it's happening, because you've seen it. You've seen them burn their draft cards and squabble over Kake Walk Disposition money; acquit KKK men charged with murder, and complain about nastiness in the Interfraternity Council. It's plain to see there is trouble afoot.

And there has got to be a cause for this trouble, but you don't know what it is, do you? Maybe you think, with our local free presses, that the well-known International Communist Conspiracy is happily directing all the protest movements. Then again, you might feel, with the liberal furry-faced intellectuals, that the Administration is at fault. If you're young, you can blame it on the senility of the old; if old, on the immaturity of the young. If you're in the middle, blame it on each other. But blame it on someone, whatever you do, because we must find the reason for all of these riots.

Then again, what if we found a finger of blame that we could all point together; a sort of meeting ground that would appeal to all of us? We feel that there is just such a universal explanation, and we would like to present it to you at this time. And it's very simple. After all, Americans should rule America, and yet there are foreigners in every stage of our society. Is this not the trouble? Who brings about the unrest we all know these days? Is it not foreigners, who try to pollute us with foreign films, unAmerican books; who expect us to accept Negroes and other oddities? We think we ought to place the nation back in the hands of the American people, to whom it belongs, and keep it there. We would like your help, too, to ferret out these foreigners.

And in view of this, we'd like to show you an article printed in the Cincinnati Times in 1855, in the days when words such as "freedom" and "honor" had meaning in our nation. The article tells of a ceremony of a choice group of Americans, united in spirit, patriotic in feeling, wisely wishing to govern themselves; as such, we hope it may inspire you in your work against foreign elements, dears.

It reads as follows:

President: Who betrayed the American cause in Canada, after the siege of Quebec?

Members: The Roman Catholic Priesthood!

Vice President: Who have always been the foes of liberty?

Members: The Roman Catholic Priesthood!

Secretary of War: Who deserted the American cause, in large numbers, during the dark days of the army, at Valley Forge?

Members: Foreigners!

Messenger of Peace: Who conspired against Washington, and endeavored to overthrow him, while he was sacrificing his all for his country?

Members: Foreigners!

President: Who were the most devoted loyalists to the British cause, during the Revolutionary War?

Members: Foreigners!

Vice President: Who rallied to the cause of the British, at a time when our country was flowing with patriotic blood?

Members: Roman Catholics, leading the foreigners!

Messenger of Peace: Who have, since the establishment of our government, brought immorality, vice and crime into our country, and have rendered even the elective franchise impure?

Members: Foreigners!

Amen.

"Realists" from near and far were gathered together on Saturday night to hear the moanings of their beloved.

No one will deny the show was worth the price of admission. The show, however, was the crowd - not the overworked music on the stage. All the would-be nonconformists, coolies, and beats were there to see what standards nonconformists are conforming to this year.

Among the styles displayed with torn suedes and rawhide were everything from bare feet to hip boots, earrings for the men (vs conventional earrings for women), rotten teeth (vs conventional tooth paste), filth (vs conventional soap), pants with pockets torn off (vs pockets to carry draft cards), and distasteful haircuts of the face and scalp (vs the clean cut look). A good beard will always be a good thing, but a mess will always look like a mess.

The desire to demonstrate the fact that we all have minds of our own is normal. The desire to be a little different can help one to become an individual. But the road to individuality is not to be radically different for the sake of being different. When people are radically different they find themselves in a mess of social freaks. The conforming has been done and the value of individuality is lost.

It is difficult to imagine that Ivy league and neatness could be a thing of the past and that its place could be taken by a studied uncaring appearance.

ATTENTION ALL UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS!

If you are at all interested in your future after your four years here at UVM are completed, you had better make a point of being at Ira Allen Chapel Wednesday, November 10th at 8 P.M.

More will follow on this topic in next week's issue. Be sure to look for it!

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director UVM Placement Service

"THE BIG CAREER SHUFFLE GOES ON ACROSS NATION. (Reprinted from the Burlington Free Press, Thursday, October 21, 1965, Page 36). One half of all our young men who make plans to become physicians when they are high school juniors abandon the idea by the time they finish their freshman year at college. Only one in eight would-be mathematicians at the 11th grade sticks with the plan for more than the next two years and only one in 16 medical technicians-to-be holds to that career objective. A full three out of four boys graduating from high school in this era change their original career goals within one year after graduation. These are a few of the sobering findings just published by the University of Pittsburgh, as part of an exhaustive study for the U.S. Office of Education involving 440,000 U.S. high school students.

The ultimate objective of "Project Talent," which was launched in 1957, is the "identification, development and utilization of the talents of American youth." But much of the preliminary data now pouring out of the university's computers is of major significance to U.S. schools, the U.S. job market, and millions of today's high school students. To the schools, the findings underline the fact that enormous sums of money are being wasted on early career-oriented educations and training. To the U.S. job market, the disclosures flash the threat of future dangerous manpower shortages in precisely the fields hungriest for talent; many of the nation's most fertile careers for future job hunters have the least holding power on today's young men considering these careers. To millions of today's high school students, the study signals the probability that they will dissipate tremendous amounts of energy and time taking courses for which, in the words of the report, "they are unsuited" and which will leave them with only a deep sense of frustration and failure.

Specifically, among the 15,514 11th graders who were asked to report their career plans in 1960, the largest single group -- 3,332 students -- chose engineering. Two years later, when the same group was queried again on career plan, 2,264 had decided on another pur-

A Future Insured

UVM, Oct. 29: All ROTC Senior Cadets are scheduled to attend a meeting with Mr. Douglas Hanau, UVM Placement Director, next Tuesday evening in the Military Science Building. Mr. Hanau will discuss "The Role of the UVM Placement Service in Serving the ROTC Senior in Attaining Graduate School and or Full Time Employment Following Graduation."

Mr. Hanau has served ROTC Seniors with great success since his arrival at UVM in 1962. He contacts ROTC Cadets several times each year at the invitation of the Military Science Department. Mr. Hanau consistently focuses attention on three key career considerations for all male students: Military service, graduate school, and full-time employment. ROTC Cadets, having already elected a leadership role in military service, are in a strong position with respect to employment opportunities. In addition, liberal policies on deferment of active duty make graduate school available for up to five years. The result is a very meaningful interaction between the Placement Service and the Cadet, flowing from the Cadet's security and certainty with respect to military service.

Fraternity Row

Editor's Note: We hope to add to the value of this column by including under its head, articles concerning fraternities and their activities, as well as campus and other activities seen through fraternity eyes.

By Buddy Mandell

In 1962, through the initiation and sponsorship of the Interfraternity and Alumni Interfraternity Councils at UVM, a self-evaluation study was initiated to establish the role and general tendencies of the fraternity system on this campus. The Research Advisory Committee, whose task it was to construct and distribute the evaluation survey, was composed of Dean Roland D. Patzer, Ass. Dean Carl O. Eycke, Prof. Gordon P. Lewis, Prof. Mervyn Perrine, Robert Birney, John Neuenschwander, and Robert K. White.

The immediate factors that brought about the development of the study can be summarized in three interrelated variables. First of all, with advances in higher education, fraternities have become the target of constant criticism by educators and the public in general. Secondly, there seem to have been very few changes in the fraternity system over the past twenty years to complement the progress that has been made in education and the changing needs of campus life. And lastly, a need was seen for obtaining the prevailing opinions about fraternities held by the various groups composing the university community. The actual objective of the study as stated within the body of that work is "to determine how various groups making up the university community perceived fraternities and the fraternity system at the University. The results would assist the AIFC and the IFC in assessing the strengths and weaknesses of their organizations, in fostering an examination of their role in modern university education, and in recommending any desirable changes." The study questioned both student and faculty opinion; each group used separate questionnaires.

It would be impossible to go into detail concerning the actual components of the study, but there are some major tendencies which are

Dear All,
The Halloween ghosts and goblins did not keep the people away from Delta Delta Delta's and Sigma Phi Epsilon's open house last Saturday. Nor did they prevent the crowds from entering Pi Beta Phi's and Phi Sigma Delta's party. The "spirits" accounted for their great success.

Lambda Iota no longer has any apparitions around their house since they initiated their new brothers: Peter Bristol of Waterbury, Conn., Thomas Osmer of Manchester, Vermont, and Douglas Holland of Essex Junction, Vermont.

There is nothing eery about the engagement of Fred Cummings, Jr., '66 to Janice Wherry of Toronto, Ontario. Congratulations to both of them.

GENERAL  ELECTRIC

Pacifist Student Arrested

By Pete Tomasi

David Miller, 22, of Syracuse, N.Y., was arrested on Monday, Oct. 18, and charged with destroying his draft card. Miller, a member of a pacifist organization called "The Catholic Worker," contends the draft is immoral. But, by acting on this belief and by publicly burning his draft card, Miller has made himself liable, under the new law of August 30, for a maximum of five years in prison and a fine of $10,000.

This incident should lead any student who is in doubt about his draft status to find out exactly where he stands in regard to the Selective Service System. The student's first source of information should be his own local draft board. The local draft board is often thought of in a rather vague way as being an agency of the army. This notion is false. The draft board is the locally administered branch of a civilian agency, the Selective Service System. The army is closely identified with the S.S.S. in the public's eye because the army is the traditional agency for the training and utilization of inductees. Rather than avoiding contact with his draft board because of some vague fear, the student should use his draft board as a source of valuable information.

The draft board is not the only agency to which the student may turn. At various times during the year, representatives of the branches of the military make themselves available to the students of this university. The officers of the R.O.T.C. detachment are always glad to speak with any student. There are many programs within the military available to college graduates, and these gentlemen will gladly answer any student's questions about these programs.

Another valuable contact for the student who is curious about his military obligation is the Champlain Peace League. The purpose of the League is to encourage its members in the search for practical, responsible, and creative alternatives to war. At present, the Champlain Peace League is concerned chiefly with the strengthening of the U.S. as a means for the peaceful settlement of disputes, but the League is also very anxious to make sure that the young people of America know all they need to about the provisions of selective service and the alternatives available.

In these times of increased international tension, it is foolish for the student to remain ignorant of his obligations and his alternatives. It would certainly be to any man's advantage to make himself aware of his own position and to plan accordingly.

measuring sticks. The majority of Vermont Students feel that the world situation is not as yet critical. They feel that there are enough bums, dropouts, and flunkies hanging around street corners to cover the draft quota. If the situation becomes critical, they felt that the probationary students should go first. A typical opinion was: "If the man power necessary to hold our position is so great, then taking men from school seems necessary."

Also, as the quotas rise and the age of the draftee drops, boards will not be able to issue deferments for longer than a year. This allows one to finish his senior year and may allow the junior to finish completely, but it probably would not allow the 19 or 20 year old to finish before being called for military duty. Any student receiving an order for induction while in school might be given a 1-S classification which would allow him to finish the year. The majority of the questionnaires were filled out by students who have a student deferment (2-S) and a student reserve deferment (1-D). These two groups totaled 332. 220 had 2-S classifications and 112 had 1-D classifications, out of a complete total of 478.

The first students to lose their deferments will probably be the probationary or borderline students. A total of 299 Vermont Students thought that they should not be drafted because "students and education are as vital as a strong military." On the other hand, 32 students said yes, 64 said if the situation warrants it, and 18 said it depends on grades. A common answer was: "If there is a need for it I don't have a desire to go, but I will if I am needed. It is my country and yours. Will you protect it?"

Deferment Not Assured

Students can no longer be confident that their education will provide draft deferment. The total number of men to be drafted by the Armed Services in November has been increased 10,000 over what President Johnson originally thought would be an ample number, to 45,000 men, the largest peacetime draft since the Korean War.

A new classification, 1-S, has been created, for students who will not start training until they finish the school year. ROTC membership still provides an automatic deferment until graduation.

Medical deferments will not be as easy to obtain as in the past. "The criteria for medically determining 'combat fitness' have obviously changed with the changing techniques of warfare." An analogy has been made between this draft situation and shopping for tomatoes. If there is a limited supply, and want to get as many as you need, you have to buy some with spots.

The Black Cat Is Like You

Suave & Sophisticated

160 Bank St. 3-2295

The graduate students chances of finishing before service varies on whether his study will serve the national interest, health, or safety. Brig. Gen. Henry C. Stanwood said, that he felt the requirement could be interpreted to mean that science, math, and medical students were favored. Medical deferments will also be harder to come by.

The easiest way to get drafted is to be in some trouble with your local board. These are the persons who are found to be "delinquent" because they don't inform the board of their address or status. A change in status has to be reported within 10 days. And just recently, the burning of draft cards, which started as an anti-war-in-Viet-Nam demonstration, is now a federal offense. Many students made reference to this type of demonstration, such as: "I felt that these so called demonstrations against U.S. policy in Viet Nam are disgusting. If it were not for the one time college students who have fought yesterday, who will fight tomorrow, and who may die, those bigots in California and elsewhere wouldn't be free to march. It must be great over there being shot at by people you can't see half the time knowing that back in the United States you are getting such all out support. To me this anti-Viet Nam display indicates a slow rotting disease which is doing just what one would expect. It is advancing the cold war effort."

In 1947, by experience, it was learned that the Army could not maintain a force of 1.5 million men through enlistments. A Presidential task force reported that by paying competitive salaries, the Army could be maintained on a voluntary basis. On the basis of the questionnaire, the majority felt that the draft law should not be repealed. There were 394 students who said that the draft was essential because the United States has to maintain a certain number of soldiers for the proper defense of "freedom" and, as of now, the services can not depend on voluntary enlistment because the American population at draft age "are not mature enough to realize the meaning of freedom."

The questionnaire was returned by over 300 UVM students, 112 are ROTC members.

Parks anywhere

A Honda needs a mere 3'x6' space to be perfectly content. And that puts a spot, about a mile away from space to be perfect. And that puts an automobile on its destination.

There are other sides to Honda, too. Hondas are fiendishly frugal. A gallon of gas will carry you up to 200 mpg, depending on which of the 15 Honda models you're driving. And insurance bills shrink to practically nothing. As for upkeep, a Honda needs little.

The shining example above is the remarkable Honda 50. It sells for about $215*. And there are 14 more models to choose from. Look them over.

Dylan Comes On — Despite Setbacks

By Dick Matheson

Patrick Gym, October 23, Bob Dylan: "Hey, this is really, this is really bad, man. This has never happened before. We might have to cancel it."

"Yeh, I'd sorta hate to, four thousand people," said the bushy-headed sound engineer, trying not to take the singer seriously.

"Yeah, I know, it's not us though. It'd be better not to have it than like this, you know? I mean, it's not us," said Dylan nervously.

Men were rushing around testing wires and flicking switches. Fifteen minutes before the concert was scheduled to begin, the sound engineer ambled out in his green suede boots to the middle of the gym floor.

"O.K., try it again," he shouted with authority.

The five-man band crashed into a rocking beat. Bob Dylan began to sing into the microphone. But the reverberations of the percussion, electric guitars, and organ drowned out the words.

"It's fine when he's singing alone, but you can't understand him with the band," someone said. Men still worked all around the small stage.

"Here, try this," said someone on the stage, handing Dylan another microphone. He spoke into it and the walls almost came tumbling down.

"That mike's a good one for a race riot," the singer commented wryly. On the next attempt with the band, some words could be heard above the din.

"She isn't a woman, she's a man!"

The crowd, which had begun arriving at 6:00 p.m., was chanting and banging on the locked doors. A large window was broken. Finally, some doors were opened and the crowd began to push into the lobby.

Bob Dylan and band retired to impromptu dressing rooms as the crew of gray-jacketed ushers started to seat the audience. Because there were so many reserved seats, it took almost an hour to seat everyone.

Mr. DeTurk of the Vermont Tuberculosis and Health Association, which sponsored the concert, welcomed the audience. He explained that Dylan's plane had been grounded twice the night before, and that there hadn't been enough time to set up all the complex electrical equipment. Finally, an hour late, Bob Dylan entered and the concert began.

In the first half of the program Dylan sang seven songs, accompanying himself on his guitar and harmonica. Among the songs was "Desolation Row," a new song of Dylan's, which seemed to be well-liked by the audience.

After the third song, "Gates of Eden," Bob Dylan's listeners were treated to one of his rare comments. Most of the song derides the hypocrisy and corruption in society, but the refrain says that there are no evils "inside the gates of Eden."

"Eden," said Dylan drily, "is a town in Illinois. Eden is a town that has gates."

After the half-hour intermission the first song was a "shouter" or maybe it was only a "talker" with the volume too high. Anyway, the words couldn't be understood above the sound of the drums and electric instruments. The entire second half of the show was done in a rock-and-roll style, which seemed to displease quite a few listeners, some of whom left. This style followed a trend in Bob Dylan concerts within the last year, a trend observed with concern or alarm by those who would still like to style the singer as strictly a "folksinger."

Bob Dylan is not a folksinger. He is a unique writer and singer, and he is always changing.

Dylan, his writers say, has always listened closely to any music or singer he has had a chance to hear. He has been influenced by as many styles as he has heard.

Dylan himself states, "All I'm doing is saying what's on my mind the best way I know how. And whatever else you say about me, everything I do and sing and write comes out of me."

That "me" avoids publicity. In "11 Outlined Epitaphs," from his "The Times They Are A-Changin'" album, Dylan says essentially: I don't intend to tell reporters who I am or what I like and do. They can tell their readers they can't discover who I am, but anyone can discover who I am by listening to my songs.

Dylan is an expert player of several musical instruments, including the guitar and harmonica. He is a skilled composer of music; an imaginative and intense songwriter, an enemy of hypocrisy and of conformity for conformity's sake.

Perhaps he is too critical of society and human nature, for some people. He does seem bitter, quite often. He does resent anyone infringing on his individuality, and he may be too sensitive about preserving his independence.

But he is sensitive also to what is going on around him. He has the poet's eye and ear. He is an artist, an individual, an intense human being.

People who have heard Bob Dylan sing, either like or dislike his singing style and voice; very few are undecided. His voice is rough, heavy, but expressive. Many people who say they don't like Bob Dylan are objecting to his singing voice and not his songs.

Because of the many abilities of the singer which make him an individual, Bob Dylan is a powerful influence on today's music industry, and UVM can consider itself lucky to have had the opportunity to see and hear him.

apparent in the survey, and which are of particular significance. It is the feeling of both the faculty and the fraternity and independent men that there have been no apparent improvements in fraternities in the past few years. A definite detriment to the fraternity system is the widespread ignorance of other fraternities on the part of fraternity men, and of fraternities in general on the part of non-fraternity men and the faculty. And finally, the conclusion is that the significance of fraternities on this campus will remain at its present level, of, if their significance changes at all, it will decrease.

From an evaluation of the study, one sees that the two greatest factors that will affect the future of fraternities at UVM are the progress of the system itself, and the attitude, presently apathetic, of the administration and faculty toward fraternities. This conclusion was confirmed in an interview with Dean Patzer when he stated that: "In order for the present status of fraternities to improve, they will have to communicate their goals, intentions, and achievements to the power structure and the student body. They must show that they are definitely an asset to the community."

TWELVE IS A MANY-SPLENDORED THING

Today I begin my twelfth year of writing this column in your campus newspaper.

These dozen years have passed like a dozen minutes. In fact, I would not believe so much time has gone by except that I have my wife nearby as a handy reference. When I started this column, she was a mere slip of a girl—supple as a willow bough and fair as the morn. Today she is gnarled, lumpy, and given to biting the postman. Still, I count myself lucky. Most of my friends who were married at the same time have wives who chase cars all day. I myself have never had this trouble, and I attribute my good fortune to the fact that I have never struck my wife with my hand. I have always used a folded newspaper, even during the prolonged newspaper strike of 1961 in New York. During this journalistic period I had the airmail edition of the Manchester Guardian flown in daily from England. I must admit, however, that it was not entirely satisfactory. The airmail edition of the Guardian is printed on paper so light and flimsy that it makes very little impression when one smacks one's wife. Mine, in fact, thought it was some kind of game and tore several pairs of my trousers.

But I digress. For twelve years, I say, I have been writing this column. That is a fact, and here is another: I shave every morning with Personna Stainless Steel Blades. I bring up Personna Stainless Steel Blades because this column is sponsored by the makers of Personna and they are inclined to brood if I omit to mention their products.

Not, let me hasten to state, that it is any chore for me to sing the praises of Personna—as you will agree once you try this sharpest, smoothest-shaving, longest-lasting blade ever devised by the makers of Personna Blades—now available both in Double Edge and Injector style. Personna, always the most rewarding of blades, today offers even an extra reward—a chance to grab yourself a fistful of $100 bills from a $100,000 bowl! The Personna Stainless Steel Sweepstakes is off and running, and you're all eligible to enter. Visit your friendly Personna dealer soon to pick up an entry blank (void where prohibited by law).

And, by the way, while you're at your friendly Personna dealers, why don't you ask for a can of Burma Shave? It comes in Regular or Menthol; it soaks rings around any other lather, and it's made by the makers of Personna.

But I digress. For twelve years, I say, this column has been discussing, forthrightly and fearlessly, such burning campus questions as "Should students be allowed to attend frat-hour classes in pajamas?" and "Should deans be retired at age 25?" and "Should foreign exchange students be held for ransom?"

Today, continuing the tradition, we take up the thorniest academic problem of all: the high cost of tuition. Let me tell you how one student, Lintel Sigafos by name, solved this problem.

Lintel, while still a boy in Straitened Circumstances, Idaho, had his heart set on college, but, alas, he couldn't afford the tuition. He applied for a Regents Scholarship but, alas, his reading speed was not very rapid—only two words an hour—and before he finished even the first page of his exam, the Regents had closed their briefcases crossly and gone home. Lintel then applied for an athletic scholarship, but he had, alas, only a single athletic skill—balancing an ice cream cone on his chin—and this, alas, aroused only fleeting enthusiasm among the coaches.

And then he found the answer: he would get a student loan! Of course, he would have to pay it back after graduation, but clever Lintel solved that, too: he kept changing his major, never accumulating enough credits to graduate until he was 65 years old. Then he repaid the loan out of his Social Security.

Where there's a will, there's a way.

suit. Only 656 had switched to engineering from the other fields, adding up to a "net loss" of 48 percent for the field of engineering. Similarly, huge losses were reported for such talent hungry occupations as scientist, mathematician, pharmacist, dentist, airline pilot, armed forces officer, policeman. The key implications of the Project Talent findings cannot be ducked. The career choices high school students are making today are, in a vast majority of cases, virtually meaningless and so is most of their early specialized education or training. A career choice at this level and under present circumstances is little more than a guessing game. And, mind you, the Project Talent findings follow students only up to one year after high school graduation; surely there is further career—junking and juggling after this time span. "These students," the report concludes, "have been faced with choices they were not adequately prepared to make."

"Clearly, there is urgent need for substantial improvement in early guidance and counseling," adds Francis Ianni, director of research of the U.S. Office of Education. "We must find ways to pinpoint attitudes and aptitudes of our young people early in their lives." If we are to meet the challenges thrown at us by the Project Talent disclosures, we must tackle this question: "Should our high schools postpone pressure on students to choose careers, or should they make far greater efforts to prepare students to make early career decisions? The University of Pittsburgh is now digging into this problem in order to develop a "comprehensive counseling guide" for high school students throughout the nation. It could help fill what is now a yawning educational gap.

SENIOR AND GRADUATE COLLEGE PLACEMENT MEETING SCHEDULED FOR TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

Mr. Hanau, Director of the UVM Placement Service, will meet from 4:00 - 5:00 p.m. in Waterman, Room 239, with all seniors and graduate students expecting to complete a degree in 1966 from the following colleges: Agriculture and Home Economics; Arts and Science; Graduate College. (Seniors in Home Economics and Medical Technology meeting dates to be arranged). If you plan to work sometime between now and the next ten years, you should be at this meeting.

PLACEMENT OFFICE TECHNICAL INTERVIEWS. Those BS/MS/Ph.D. registered students in Technology who wish to interview during the week of November 8-12, should make arrangements to sign up on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, November 1, 2, 3 from 4:00-5:00 p.m. and 6:00-8:00 p.m. in the Placement Office. Those employers who are scheduled to interview in the Placement Office during the week of November 8-12 include:

WHAT'S REALLY WRONG ON CAMPUS

The only thing not changed on campus since the war is human nature. Competition for admission is fiercer; undergraduate temper more excitable. This special Atlantic Supplement discusses students in revolt; the fate of the small college; academic freedom; why some students take drugs—why others drop out; problems of college for Negroes; do women learn anything; faculty pressures and privileges; free speech and much, much more.

Draft Riots Expected

Ann Arbor, Mich. - (L.P.) — Draft riots may disrupt the nation's college campuses, says Associate Professor Ross Wilhelm of the University of Michigan Graduate School of Business Administration. Wilhelm says left wing student groups are planning demonstrations, including civil disobedience, for this fall over Vietnam and the draft.

"While most students support our country's position in Vietnam, the latent anger over the slave labor aspects of the draft is so strong they probably will follow this left wing leadership."

"The tempers of many college students are high enough over the vicious injustices built into the draft system that there is a potential for violence comparable to the Los Angeles riot on American campuses. The draft is foremost in the minds of most college students."

Professor Wilhelm believes that "the draft is just one way to get people to perform military duties" and that a better way is just to get people to perform military duties by increasing the pay and base it on volunteers who join because they want to. The draft is just a substitute for adequate pay, he says.

He reports that the "Students for a Democratic Society," a left wing group, is planning a nationwide student strike over Vietnam during the first ten days of December. During the strike students will leave their classrooms to stage sit-ins and protests at campus military and research installations. He says also that there will be student protests - with local acts of civil disobedience -- at 30 to 40 campuses across the country.

"Actions such as these are as dangerous as smoking in an ammunition plant in view of student attitudes toward the draft," Professor Wilhelm suggests. He points out that student agitators are using the argument that draft-exempt college students have the moral duty to fight against "the coercion of youth into the war machine."

"My own observations lead me to believe that during the past few months almost any effective organizer could have put thousands of college students, on almost any campus, into the streets in a violent demonstration against the draft. Given a time when students are under pressure as with exams, little more would be needed than a group running through the dorms at night shouting, 'let's riot against the draft.' The students rallying to such a cry wouldn't know, nor care, if the ones at the head of the mob were carrying signs protesting Vietnam."

"We should recognize that the civil rights movement has trained thousands of students across the country in the techniques of mass demonstration." Also in recent years we have seen students demonstrate violently over issues of less personal importance to them than the draft -- over the issues involved at Berkeley for example. Professor Wilhelm points out that about 100 years ago, during the Civil War, there were a number of draft riots across the country.

Allen House Girls Hold Tea

Travel, music, food and children were all discussed over cookies and coffee at a student-faculty tea given by the girls of Allen House. The October 19th tea, was given to better acquaint the students with some of their teachers, and their teachers with them. According to Carol Linderman, social chairman, the tea was a success. A large percentage of the invited faculty members attended. Since the girls and faculty enjoyed themselves, Allen House is planning another such function in the near future.

Life Features UVM Doctors

EDITOR'S NOTE: CYNIC has two reporters working regularly to bring the general student some direct educational benefit from research on campus.

By Patience Brooks

Research by two UVM doctors was recently featured in a special issue of a national magazine.

On Sept. 10, Life presented a series of articles concerning the "Control of Life," two of which discussed experimentation done by Dr. R. James McKay and Dr. Jerold F. Lucey, both of the College of Medicine's department of pediatrics.

Dr. Lucey was a member of a team of doctors from UVM and the Columbia-Presbyterian Hospital in New York who performed experimental fetal surgery on monkeys, at the Oregon Regional Primate Research Center in Beaverton, Ore. Such work may well help to revolutionize the techniques used in caring for unborn infants, who now must be treated indirectly. If future operations are as successful as those in the past have been, the means by which many defects, such as conflicting blood types, can be cured will be greatly simplified.

Dr. McKay's project in Cytogenetics originally concerned the relationship of chromosome (the genetic material in white blood cells that determines a person's characteristics) to certain physical defects, but he has also been studying chromosomal abnormalities in parents who have had repeated miscarriages. In either case, all that is required of the person in question is an ordinary blood sample (taken under completely sterile conditions), which must then be processed in the lab. After the separation of the white corpuscles, they are grown in culture medium until the chromosomes become visible (about 68-72 hrs.) The cells are then processed in a complicated series of over twenty steps, and the chromosomes are observed for abnormalities.

This may sound deceptively simple, but the preparation of cells for observance under the microscope takes at least two and one-half hours, if, as Dr. McKay put it, "you are lucky and everything works out the first time."

During his experimentation, he has found that mongolism is caused by an extra #21 chromosome, so that a person has 47 instead of the normal 46, that may be arranged in 23 pairs. Some mongolism is hereditary, but it can also result from an irregularity in the final development of a single egg cell, as was the case discussed in Life.

Dr. McKay proposed a theory in which miscarriages might be caused by a major chromosomal abnormality (similar, in some respects, to that stated above) but he has found that minor irregularities are much more common. With parents who had miscarriages in the first three months of pregnancy, a relatively high rate -- about 20% -- of abnormal chromosomal structure was discovered. These included breaks in the chromosomes, translocations of parts of chromosomes, and even chromosome doubling, but no major defects, as found in the cell of a mongoloid.

Although "chromosome clinics" are still rather limited in number, it is entirely feasible -- indeed, very probable -- that this type of research will become so important to prospective parents as to warrant the establishment of many more such centers. In any case, work such as Dr. McKay and Dr. Lucey have accomplished can only lead to a better understanding and treatment of congenital defects.

Campus Growth Portrays UVM's Heritage

Editor's Note: This article begins a series of campus history: people, places and things. We hope to cover some of the most interesting and least known stories; any particular subjects of our readers' curiosity will be investigated.

The Passing Years

By Peter Hart

A university is more than buildings, more than students and faculty. A university encompasses a spirit, an ever driving, progressive attitude, an undying vivacity. From infancy into an unknown future the Old Mill reflects the spirit of UVM.

Although the University was chartered in 1791, the main college structure was not begun until 1801 on a lot selected by Gen. Ira Allen. This building, constructed partly by timbers felled on the college green, was four stories high with a bell tower and was constructed at a total cost of $35,000. The critical early years of the institution were punctuated in 1814 by war with England during which the college building was seized by the government for use as an arsenal and a soldiers' barracks. Because of this and other matters University President Sanders resigned and advised students to matriculate elsewhere.

With the war over, the government repaired the building and Rev. Samuel Austin was installed as president giving temporary security to the university. Within six years, however, he retired and was replaced by Rev. Daniel Haskell.

On May 27, 1824, the original Old Mill was destroyed by fire, and Haskell was stricken ill both mentally and physically. The financially and organizationally torn university was near extinction.

Although the condition of the university, as well as that of the president, seemed hopeless, the trustees, motivated by the personal loss and the challenge, began plans for a new building. With the cooperation of Burlington area residents, who sensibly were interested in seeing the university remain in their city, the new "Old Mill" was constructed in three distinct segments, each seven to eight feet apart using brick salvaged from the remains of the old building.

The first segment, the North College, was constructed immediately and on June 29, 1825, the Marquis de Lafayette, who happened to be in the area, laid the cornerstone for the South College. The Middle College with its dome and tower, "so long the shining beacon of the whole Champlain Valley," was not completed until 1829. At this time the three-story structure contained 24 student rooms and two lecture halls at each end, and, in the middle portion, the library museum, and chapel which remain in essence today as the office of the World Affairs Council.

In 1846 the three buildings were conjoined at points which today are the front entrance halls. The building remained fundamentally the same until President Buckham's administration began in 1871.

By Buckham's time the university had expanded beyond this single building. In 1863 a new library was constructed where Williams Science Hall stands today, and in 1865 the Vermont Agricultural College was incorporated with the university. This was a period for maturing, organizing, and expanding traditions. Yet, UVM was not quite what one today would call a university. In 1870 there were no more than 60 students, and in 79 years of existence, it had granted less than 1,500 diplomas.

President Buckham's administration saw the addition of Billings Library, Williams Science Hall, Converse Hall, Redstone Campus, the old gymnasium, and Fleming Museum, along with other minor buildings to the campus. The Old Mill was completely renovated and "modernized" on the exterior achieving the appearance it has today. Regrettably, the renovations required the dismemberment of the dome; this, however, was replaced by today's impressive tower. During the following years this tower would be open so that the fine view of the mountains and lake could be seen.

Today the Old Mill has been replaced as the main center of student activity by other large buildings. Within recent years it has been remodeled, expanded, and made functional; yet, it remains the image of UVM's past. No longer can the chapel choir, the jingle of gymnastic apparatus, or the sounds of some weary student reciting the binomial theorem late into the night be heard within its walls. Nevertheless, when one walks through its narrow halls or by its dignified facade, one can sense the spirit of UVM's struggling past while he envisions its bright future.

JOBS ARE OPEN

There are presently a number of baby-sitting jobs open for UVM co-eds, the Financial Aid Office announced Tuesday. Mr. Walker, director of the Office, requests that any girls interested in earning some extra money in this way apply as soon as possible. The office hours are from 9-12 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. daily.

UVM FACES UMass THIS WEEKEND

Amherst, Mass. - Two of New England's highest-scoring teams will collide head on Saturday afternoon when the University of Massachusetts hosts Vermont at Alumni Stadium at 1:30 in a Yankee Conference clash.

Massachusetts, 4-2 overall and 2-1 in the Conference, has piled up 84 points in the last three games for a season's total of 139. Vermont, 5-1 overall and 2-1 in Conference play, has scored 146 points. Thus the Catamounts are averaging 24 points per game to 23 for the Redmen. Defensively the Redmen have surrendered 53 points, or an average of 9 per game while the Cats have allowed 73, or an average of 12 per game.

With undefeated Maine already having clinched the YC championship, UMass and UVM will be after second place. UMass Head Coach Vic Fusia has a Conference record of 19-3 over the past five seasons, but the three losses, all by field goals, have been costly. The Redmen finished second behind undefeated Maine in 1961, and second to undefeated New Hampshire in 1962. Two Conference titles followed but the best that can be hoped for in 1965 is another second.

Vermont has also had great success the past three years. Coach Bob Clifford has produced 18 wins in 22 games. The only losses were to Massachusetts (42-0) and Maine (14-13) in 1963. Massachusetts (28-7) in 1964 and Maine (35-6) this fall. The Catamounts boast one of New England's best defensive performers in center-linebacker Rusty Brink. In Scott Fitz Vermont has a quarterback that owns the school's all-time career total offense record. This fall Fitz has rushed for 186 yards and passed for 488. Halfback Dick Hebert has netted 181 yards rushing and has caught 12 passes for 133 yards and three touchdowns. Tight end Jeff Kuhlman, 6'3", has caught 11 passes for 177 yards and split end Jack Schweberger, 6'2", has caught 10.

Better performances from fullback Phil Vandersea and halfbacks Bob Detore and Don Durkin have helped take the load from the shoulders of soph qb Greg Landry for the Redmen. Landry is having one of the finest seasons that any Massachusetts qb has ever had. He has completed 55 of 94 pass attempts for a .585 percentage and 816 yards. On the ground he has netted 345 yards for a total offense of 1161 yards, that includes five touchdowns. Greg is the only UMass soph to ever reach 1,000 yards in total offense. The hard running and strong blocking of Vandersea, Detore and Durkin have started to give the Redmen a balanced offense. The past three weeks UMass has explored in the second half with 20 points against Connecticut, 23 against Rhode Island and 28 against Boston University. The results were wins of 20-7, 30-0, and 34-18. Defensively Co-Capt. Bernie Dallas has approached his performances as a sophomore, while the rapid development of linebacker Rod Brooks along with the steady play of roving linebacker Dave Kelley have made the Redmen difficult to run against. UMass has allowed only 374 net yards rushing, or an average of just 1.6 per attempt.

Thus, Saturday could develop into a game of duels. Vermont's qb Fitz and defensive ace Brink against their Redmen counterparts Landry and Dallas. Also the running of halfbacks Hebert and Mike Burke against Redmen Vandersea, Detore and Durkin. But the whole issue may be settled by the pass catching of Massachusetts' Bob Meers, 6'3", and Milt Morin, 6'4", versus Vermont's Kuhlman and Schweberger.

It all should add up to an interesting and exciting afternoon of Yankee Conference football action.

ASSISTANTS: Jack Delaney, backfield; Fred Glatz, end; Ted Schmitt, line; Frank Shields, line.
ATHLETIC DIRECTOR: Warren McGuirk
SID: Dick Page (413 545-2439; home 253-7863)
PROMISING NEWCOMERS: Tackle Jim Mitchell; Guard Mickey Bailey; Center Dan Harrigan; Quarterback Greg Landry; Halfback Don Durkin.
1965 PROSPECTS: Although the annual commencement march claimed 18 players including four All Conference picks, this doesn't appear to be the year to count ten for the Redmen. Coach Vic Fusia still has 14 lettermen back including four All YC picks, headed by the "M" and "M" twins (murder and mayhem) Bob Meers and Milt Morin. These two are a line by themselves. They have help, however, and with the rules change, the Redmen may go to platoon football, making them even tougher. Perhaps biggest loss was All Everything QB Jerry Wheelchel although soph Greg Landry may be just as bad news for the already dazed foes.
1964 GAME: Massachusetts 28, Vermont 7. All good things must end and so Vermont's seven-game winning streak did. However, Cats were first Conference team to score on bowl-bound Redmen since Maine turned trick in first quarter of opening game in '63. UMass simply overpowered Vermont with Ken Palm (11) Mike Ross (13), Phil DeRose (87 KO return), and Bob Ellis (1) scoring TDs. QB Jim Brennan marched Vermont to its TD midway through final period, Richie Reynolds bucking over from 1.

Vermont Alumnus Honored

NEW YORK, Oct. 28 - Lee McLaughlin of Lexington, Harold Carlson of Waynesboro and Richard Foster of Norfolk have been honored with nominations by their alma maters for this year's Sports Illustrated Silver Anniversary All-America Awards. They take their places on a slate of 64 candidates -- all cited for their exceptional success in life in the 25 years since their senior collegiate football season of 1940.

Harold G. Carlson, nominated by the University of Vermont, was a three-year letterman and Phi Beta Kappa. He entered the test engineering program of the General Electric Company and worked on the important Loran navigation equipment program. Over the past five years Mr. Carlson has been developing a new concept in electric-power generation for aircraft electrical systems.

The final selection of the annual roster of 25 Silver Anniversary All-America Awards winners is made by a panel of 12 distinguished citizens, the results of their balloting will be announced by Sports Illustrated before the end of the year. Since colleges and universities do not nominate unless they deem the candidate to be of winning caliber, nomination alone is unique and considered to be a special honor.

This year's candidates comprise a roster representing wide and varied fields of endeavor, ranging from major sports figures to nuclear scientists. All candidates dramatically illustrated the purpose of the award, which is "to emphasize the pursuit of rounded human values in which athletics and education are joined."

The Silver Anniversary All-American Awards were created in 1956 by the editors of Sports Illustrated at the suggestion of the late Herman Hickman.

University of Massachusetts Amherst, Mass.

Amherst, Mass., Oct. 26 - A 50-yard punt return in the last quarter for a touchdown that enabled his team to avert an upset helped Vermont halfback Dick Hebert earn the Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the week award. The St. Albans (Vt.) junior, playing all but two minutes of the game, had his best game of the year as the Catamounts recorded their fifth win in six starts this fall.

CATS SQUEAK PAST CADETS 7-6

From the Cat's Mouth

Another season of football at Centennial comes to an end. UVM struggled desperately in the waning minutes of the final quarter to hold on to its one point lead. Don Nelson was instrumental in holding the offensive attack of Norwich. That afternoon he threw the Norwich quarterback for a large loss three times.

The prognosis for the game seemed as if it would be an easy Catamount victory. It would not be hard to figure out that the Catamounts with Scot Fitz as their pilot would be going to the air. The UVM backfield would be cutting those corners, and thus piling up touchdown after touchdown. However, the unexpected happened. It rained. Thus, the Catamounts had to change their plans. They continued to go to the air, however, their efforts were fruitless. Catamount after Catamount tried to turn the corner, but the Norwich cadets were all over them. Rain was the essential ingredient that almost turned the tables against UVM and almost handed the cadets an upset victory. The pouring rain made the ball quite hard to handle, and this accounted for the unusually large number of fumbles.

The Norwich cadets were really sky high for this game and they took an early 6-0 lead. Just when the Cats seemed completely out of it, Dick Hebert ran back a 50 yard punt return for UVM's first and only touchdown of the afternoon. Joe Soldano then came through in the clutch for the one point conversion that made the difference between victory and defeat. The final tally showed the Catamounts as winners, but UVM knew that they were outplayed.

Diamond Men Mark 3-0 Season

By Al Rice

The University of Vermont baseball team concluded their fall schedule with a perfect 3 and 0 record. Vermont played its first game against MIT in Boston and whitewashed the Engineers 11-0. Sophomore hurler Ron Gondek breezed to the win as his Catamount teammates provided him with a solid hitting attack. Coach Lapointe's Catamounts traveled down to Hanover on October 3 to play a doubleheader with Dartmouth College. The Cats once again showed a well-balanced attack to go with some great pitching and triumphed over the Indians 4-1, twice.

The fall season proved very worthwhile, because many new faces came into the spotlight, while last year's lettermen showed a great deal of improvement at their old position or at new positions. The Catamounts have some promising new pitchers to go with some strong returning lettermen. Last year's Capt. Charlie Foster will be sorely missed, but newcomers such as Ron Gondek will help fill his place.

The Catamounts should also be strong in the other positions. Captain Bobby Cronin played shortstop during the three games and looks as though he may provide the Cats with a good fielding shortstop, something that they sorely needed last year.

Bunky Morris has been playing third base, and looks improved over last season. Sophomore Bruce Lombard has been tried at second base. There is a big gap at first base left by the graduation of ALL-East John Tartera. John Packard and Dave Cronin are waging a battle for the job. Another problem will be to determine who is going to replace Mike Behan behind the plate. Rich Aldrich, who has had some experience, has been working at catching so far, but it will take a lot more hard work for him to step into Behan's shoes. Aldrich is one of the hitters, but needs more experience to become a top flight catcher. Looking the most promising in the outfield were Don Pitts, who has hit very well, and Jim McKinnon, who also must be considered one of the Catamounts top batsmen. Dave Wayne and Dave Holten saw much action and should get shots at an outfield berth come the spring season.

The Vermont baseball team which came so close to gaining a berth in the N.E. Regional playoffs last summer, should be right up there again this season fighting for another Yankee Conference title. If their fall play is any indication of the way they will play once the spring schedule begins, then the Catamounts should certainly enjoy another winning season.

Norwich Unsuccessful In 4th Quarter Field Goal Attempt

Stopped for no yardage. The Cadets held UVM to only 33 yards in the first half.

By Bob Bloomenthal

After barely getting by Norwich last Saturday the Catamount football squad will be looking for an undisputed second place finish in the Yankee Conference when they journey to Amherst to face the UMass Redmen. Vermont had the time of its life evading an upset last week, however, as they edged Norwich by the narrowest of margins, 7-6.

In a typical State Series game, the Cadets from Northfield played as though they didn't realize that UVM was a heavy favorite. Playing in the rain, the Norwich defense held Vermont to but 33 yards total offense in the first half and jumped off to a 6-0 lead at halftime. It was the first time all year that the Cats had not scored in the first half.

THE MARGIN OF VICTORY

After Cadet halfback Kevin Flannery scored the Norwich touchdown, the all important extra point attempt was blocked. The first Norwich conversion was good, but a procedure penalty against the Horsemen forced the second attempt.

In the second half quarterback Scott Fitz, realizing that a passing attack was futile under the game conditions, started to run the ball himself to move the Cats. Fitz runs of 12, 14, 7, and 13 yards moved the ball to the Norwich 5 late in the third period. At this point, however, the Cadet defense stiffened and rose to the occasion to stop Vermont.

BRINK NAMED TO ECAC ALL-EAST TEAM

Rusty Brink, the University of Vermont's "All Everything" football player, holds down the center spot on last week's ECAC College Division All East team. Brink, who was the ECAC's All East College Division center last fall, was selected for his outstanding play against New Hampshire in the Catamounts' 23-7 win last Saturday.

In that game, Rusty intercepted his fifth pass of the season and picked up a total of 23 defensive points. The 6-1, 205-pound Methuen, Mass., senior has led Vermont in defensive points for all five games this fall. He is also tops in intercepted passes.

Other nominations for this week's team were quarterback Scott Fitz who became the Catamounts' all-time total offensive leader and sophomore Bob Mitchell who scored twice as the starting fullback.

Another Catamount drive was stopped by a fumble which Norwich recovered on their 20. The Cadets could not move, though and on the ensuing punt, Dick Hebert, getting solid blocking from Paul (Mute) Malone and others, ran the ball back 50 yards for the lone Vermont touchdown. Joe (The Toe) Soldano's kick for the extra point found its mark to put UVM in the lead, 7-6.

The Cadets refused to give up, however, and came right back with a final drive of their own. With only 40 seconds remaining, Norwich quarterback Moskal attempted a field goal from the UVM 17. The kick was blocked by alert sophomore linemen Collin Hurd, though, to save the win for Vermont. Hurd has been doing an excellent job all year on rushing punts, conversions, and field goal attempts.

CATS LOOK TO UMASS

After barely escaping an upset against the Cadets, Vermont will now play the role of underdogs in their encounter with UMass. The Redmen are led by a sophomore quarterback named Greg Landry who has the potential to make UMass fans forget Jerry Welch. He has improved with each game and leads the Yankee Conference in passing. He is also an excellent runner and is one of the leaders in the Conference rushing totals besides.

The Redmen always come up with bruising linemen and this year is no exception. Giant ends Milt Morin and Bob Meers are still around and the interior line has no midgets. Thus, Vermont will be up against a real tough team at Amherst and it will take a tremendous team effort, better than any effort so far this season, for the young Catamounts to come home victorious.

Massachusetts, next week's opponent, placed its sophomore quarterback Greg Landry on this week's University Division team. Landry passed for 116 yards and ran for 115 more at UMass belted Rhode Island, 30-0.

Hoopsters Work Out

The University of Vermont opened basketball practice for the 1965-66 season Friday (Oct. 15) and for the first time since 1940 a different person will be coaching the Catamounts.

Arthur Loche, a 1961 graduate of New York University, replaced John (Fuzzy) Evans this spring. Evans, who stepped down from all coaching, continues to teach in the department of physical education.

Loche will number seven lettermen among those turning out for practice. An eighth letterman -- George Abbott of White River Junction -- is playing soccer and will report later.

Leading the returning players are Co-Captains Layne Higgs of Barre and Milt Goggans of Hoboken, N.J. Other monogram winners back are Russ Boardman, Mattapoisett, Mass.; Bruce Hanna, Union City, N.J.; Tim Hayes, New York City; Mike Karel, Yonkers, N.Y.; and Don Longley, Burlington.

Student March Supports US Policy In Viet-Nam

By Eloise Roberts

Students favoring U.S. policy in Viet Nam staged a parade through downtown Burlington last Friday at 4 p.m. Organized by Ralph Grenon, '67, and Margaret Crane, '68, of UVM, the march was joined by Lt. Gov. John Daley and Rev. Philip Branon of the UVM Newman Center as well as by students from Trinity and Champlain Colleges and Mt. St. Mary's Academy.

Before the march started the group gathered on the College Green where Lt. Gov. Daley spoke briefly. Praising the students, he declared he was proud to see a gathering such as this, which demonstrated once again the concern and dedication of young Americans to the cause of freedom.

He was followed by Ralph Grenon who urged the students to show their whole-hearted support for their government in a crisis such as this.

The group then started out down College Street being joined along the way by more UVMers, as well as Trinity students. Carrying signs saying "All the way with L.B.J." and "Hold the line in Viet Nam," the marchers paraded up Church Street chanting "Fight...Fight...Fight," and singing such songs as "America the Beautiful."

The chill of the day reduced the expected numbers of both marchers and spectators, but Grenon said that he was satisfied with the turnout and very pleased with the enthusiasm of the group. He also commented on the affirmative reaction of the townspeople. All along the route of the march the spectators called out their approval exclaiming "We're proud of you!" and "This is the kind of demonstration we like to see!" Even those in cars who were held up by the parade had nothing but smiles and encouragement for the students.

A small anti-Viet Nam group attempted to counter the demonstration and were loudly booed by the larger group. There were no incidents.

After the march Grenon said that the demonstration accomplished its intended purpose, i.e. to show the rest of the world that the majority of Americans support our nation's foreign policy. He estimated that about 500 students participated in the march.

Murbe Makes Tenure Appeal To Students

By Richard Berk

A petition has been circulated by Prof. Hans Murbe protesting the recommendation of the English department that he not be granted permanent tenure at the end of this academic year. Dr. Murbe has asserted that upon initial notification of the department's decision, the only reason given him was his failure to publish in scholarly journals since completion of his doctoral dissertation in March, 1964, and this is the basis of his protest.

When asked for his reaction to Dr. Murbe's petition Prof. Samuel Bogorad, chairman of the English department, felt it would be unfair to comment on the reasoning behind his department's decision while Dr. Murbe's case is still pending. But, in addressing himself to the general process of faculty evaluation and the granting of tenure, Prof. Bogorad said, "Scholarly productivity is but one of many criteria used in reviewing any faculty member in any department."

It should be noted that recommendations on matters of tenure are initiated on the departmental level, but that these recommendations are then subject to review on several higher levels before anything conclusive is decided. In brief, the department's recommendation is reviewed respectively by the dean of the college (in this case the Dean of Arts and Sciences), the University Policy Committee consisting of faculty representatives of each of the colleges, by the Graduate Dean, by the University Council, which is composed of all of the deans, and finally by the President, followed by the Board of Trustees. It appears that the President's decision is the final one since, as a general rule, the Board of Trustees merely gives official status to whatever he decides in matters of tenure. The English department's recommendation on Dr. Murbe's case has yet to pass through the various stages of review.

When asked why he had chosen to appeal to the student body before going through official channels Dr. Murbe said, "Approximately 80 to 90% of the students I have approached so far have responded favorably to my petition. Such an expression is more than ample evidence of my competence and my reputation as a teacher." Dr. Murbe felt that documentation of this sort would give greater weight to his appeal when he brings it before the various reviewing bodies.

We asked Dr. Cook, Dean of Faculties, whether he felt that the situation at UVM could be accurately described as "publish or perish." His response was, rather emphatically, "No. We do not have a policy of publish or perish. This is an unfortunate slogan." Dean Cook indicated that this was a gross oversimplification of a rather complex decision making process. "Of course," he added, "one thing we review is scholarship, but this is only one factor." He went on to enumerate three main areas, specifically teaching, scholarship and service, as the principle criteria in decisions of this nature. Commenting on the English department's recommendation in Dr. Murbe's case, Dean Cook said, "Prof. Bogorad is a very fair man on such issues. I am confident that he sought the advice of his colleagues in this matter. Out of fairness to Dr. Murbe, I am certain that lack of publication was one factor contributing to the recommendation. But I am equally certain that it was not the only factor."

At the moment, the issue of whether or not Dr. Hans Murbe will be granted permanent tenure remains open. His petition is still in circulation and his case has yet to pass through the rather lengthy process of review. In short, nothing conclusive has yet been decided as we go to press.

Jackie Warner Stops The World

By B. Mandell

In a loud vibrating voice, Jackie Warner yelled "Stop the World!"; the music died down; the stage was darkened and Warner slipped over to the side, at which time a single spotlight beamed down upon him. After a few words of subtle humor on everything from South Vietnam to babies, Warner hastened back into the set; the stage came alive and the story continued.

Warner plays the role of Littlechap, a clown in the circus, who is searching for a new act that will amuse his audience. Unable to find a suitable one, he resorts to telling the story of his life—a sad but true portrayal of how a man can throw his life away because of false values. This seems to be an extremely fitting method for telling the story of Littlechap, because, in essence, his life is nothing but a spectacular act. However, Littlechap realizes his mistake only after he has lost everything of any true value. He then sings "What Kind of Fool Am I?"

Warner delightfully entertained the audience with an almost one-man show in which he frolicked, danced, joked and sang, as his life quickly passed away. However, the one element that truly enhanced the performance was the very effective use of pantomime, which, in a sense, made the show unique. "Stop the World" is only an "almost one-man show" because a great deal of the success of the show is attributed to the fine acting of Dana Haskell, who held the lead female role. Miss Haskell, enacted an excellent portrayal of the women in Littlechap's life, during which she skillfully imitated various foreign accents with excellent diction. She humorously contributes to the hopelessness of the story, and surely displays herself as a very talented young actress.

Warner, who also directs the show, is an experienced actor who got his start in vaudeville. After appearing in leading roles in many off and on Broadway shows, he understudied the role of Littlechap, in the Broadway production of "Stop the World," in which Anthony Newley played the lead role. Although Warner seemed to have mastered the humor and pity of Littlechap, he appeared to have some trouble maintaining the strong English accent that is typical of Littlechap. Newley undoubtedly had no such problem.

"Stop the World" projects a different style to the legitimate theatre in that it tends to get away from the "mass cast, complex plot, straight dialogue music" and in its place, substitutes "simplicity": of cast; of dialogue; and of set.

Players Offer Greek Tragedy

The Greek tragedy "Hippolytus" will be the first offering of the new season for the University Players at the University of Vermont.

The production opens a three-night run on Thursday (Nov. 4) in the Arena Theatre in the Fleming Museum and runs through Saturday.

Following the final curtain on opening night, a panel discussion is scheduled for the Theatre on the topic "The Greek Tradition, 1965." Panelists include Mrs. Shannon McCune, wife of the president of the University; Anna Rankin Harris, dean of women; Donald Gregg, professor of chemistry; and Robert Caswell assistant professor of English. They will discuss the meaning or lack of meaning of the Greek tradition in society today.

Edward Feidner is directing the production. Head masks, full vocal quality and authentic costumes will help to create the Greek, classic tradition.

William Schenk, a new member of the speech department, has designed the sets. Seats have been removed from one end of the Theatre to help provide the setting which is the house of Theseus.

Featured in the play are William Dixon of Malvern, Pa., as Theseus; Judy Guernsey of Schenectady, N.Y., as Phaedra, his wife; and Peter Covette of Brooklyn, N.Y., as Hippolytus, the step-son with whom Phaedra falls in love.

Covett has been a member of the Champlain Shakespeare Festival for the past two summers.

Other cast members include Forrest Bowman of Montpelier, as servant to Hippolytus; Trent Anderson of Hillsdale, N.J., as a messenger; Rae Newcomb of Montpelier, as the nurse; Liz Bradstreet of Amityville, N.Y., as Aphrodite; Carol Scott of Riverside, Conn., and Marilyn Deutch of Bell Harbor, N.Y., as chorus leaders.

Students Work For Viet Peace

By Eloise Roberts

American students now have a new and promising opportunity to combat Communism and further the cause of peace. International Voluntary Services (IVS), a private organization composed primarily of American students, has as its aim the promotion of a more prosperous life, a better education, and stronger ties of friendship and understanding between Viet Nam and other countries.

IVS emphasizes a person to person approach and works closely with Vietnamese youth groups. It began work in Viet Nam in 1957 with a six man agricultural team which has since expanded to some fifty members working in agriculture, English teaching, science education, refugee work and youth work. In agriculture, team members work directly with Vietnamese agriculturalists in education and self-help projects. The English teachers instruct about 18 hours per week and spend the rest of their time helping in many extra-curricular activities. Other students help with supplying the refugees with their basic needs and teaching them self-sufficiency. The youth worker usually has a minimum English teaching load and concentrates his free time on student organizations.

Joining forces with IVS are several national Vietnamese youth groups such as the High School Movement for Social Action and the Voluntary Youth Association. This domestic "Peace Corps" effort has meant such advances as new roads, houses, schools, wells and health centers for about 300 hamlets.

One young Army officer and youth leader sums up the role of students in this struggle:

In South Viet Nam, we are involved in a very complicated war. It is not only a military war, but also a cultural, social economic war. Military power alone will not win this war. We have to go to other frontiers - these of poverty, ignorance and disease. And it is with this prospect that Vietnamese youth have to struggle and find out a meaning for their lives.

Team members of International Voluntary Services work with their Vietnamese counterparts under a two-year contract providing transportation, subsistence allowance, housing, medical and life insurance, one month vacation each year with allowances, and a salary of eighty dollars per month. The most important single quality of volunteers is a desire to work closely with the people of another country to help them solve their own problems.

By Dick Matheson

About one per cent of the students at UVM have their permanent homes in foreign countries. According to Dr. Marvin Durham, advisor of foreign students, however, about three quarters of UVM's some forty foreign students are in the graduate program.

The reason for this, Mr. Durham said, is that most of the graduate students have a fellowship of some kind which makes them more independent financially. The undergraduate foreign students, on the other hand, don't receive any financial aid from the school, and besides travel and other extra expenses they must, of course, pay the higher non-resident tuition rate.

Most foreign applications to UVM arrive via the Institute of International Education, supported by educational institutions, which screens applicants in their own countries. Applicants must have had a suitable educational background, must be proficient in English, and must have proof of the ability to finance their stay and education in the U.S. If they qualify, the students apply to specific colleges and universities recommended by the Institute.

Some students admitted to U.S. schools participate in orientation programs at certain large universities during the summer before their first year in a U.S. school. St. Michael's has a program for teaching English as a second language.

Mr. Durham said there is some interest in the administration in increasing the percentage of foreign students at UVM, not only as a benefit to foreign students but also as a valuable experience to U.S. citizens who may never travel abroad or who might otherwise never know any residents from other countries. There are many problems and decisions to be met before there is any conscious action taken.

Over thirty countries are represented by UVM students who live in foreign nations on six continents. Besides the foreign students who still have their homes in foreign countries, there are many UVM students who were born or once lived in some country other than the U.S. but who are now living in this country.

Club Welcomes Cultural Exchange

By Bruce Goddard

The International Club of UVM will discuss at its next program "The USS Hope," which will take place on Friday, Nov. 12.

The purpose of the club is "to stimulate interest and provide cultural and social exchanges with those people of other nations on our campus . . . with interested persons of our campus community and country."

Through the International Club, people of different countries meet and discuss their ideologies, societies, and cultures. As Dr. Gulshan Ahuja of the Neurology Dept. at Mary Fletcher, and President of the club pointed out, "People can learn more from each other about their various countries than they can learn from all the books written. In the International Club," he continued, "we hope to promote the idea of universal brotherhood among the people of different countries and races."

Discussion at the fortnightly meetings is not the only method of social exchange in the club. Special events held include an international meal, to which every member brought one of his native dishes, and a Christmas party at which members wore their native dress. Last year the festival of the lights, Diwali, was celebrated at a special party planned by the Indian students. Throughout the year slides and movies are shown on different countries; and the club also sponsors lectures on international topics. Next month Dr. Rufus Morrow, head of the Ear, Nose and Throat Dept. at Mary Fletcher, will lecture and show slides on his experiences with the "Ship Hope."

Dr. Ahuja said that membership to the club is open to students, staff, and faculty and even any interested townspeople. He emphasized that the club is an international club and not a foreign student organization, and "international" includes the U.S.A. just as much as any other nation.

At present, most of the members are either graduate students or faculty. However Dr. Ahuja said "I would like undergraduates to take an active part in the club." Undergraduate students, he feels, have more time than graduate students to devote to the activities of the club. He hopes that undergraduates will take an interest in the club and bring new ideas with them. He especially expressed the necessity of getting an energetic and responsible public relations officer.

New members of the International Club will be greeted by peoples of all parts of the world and will benefit immensely from their new acquaintances. Foreign students are here to broaden their outlooks and ours. In the International Club everyone can gain the benefits of this reciprocal education.

Anyone wishing to become a member of the club can contact Miss Mary Gonyea, Secretary of the English Dept. The subscription fee is $2.00 per annum. Further information about the club may be obtained from the Foreign Student Advisor's Office.

Students interested in foreign trade and world business will have an unusual opportunity to discuss current developments and prospects in the international field when Mr. Carl S. Coler, Career Counselor of the American Institute of Foreign Trade (Thunderbird), Phoenix, Arizona, comes to this campus on November 15th.

Mr. Coler holds M.E. and E.E. degrees from Cornell University and an honorary M.S. from the University of Pittsburgh. His distinguished professional career included over 30 years with Westinghouse for whom he hired 9,000 engineers. He served four years as Executive Director of the Society for Advancement of Management and twelve years in U.S. Government assignments in Mexico, Egypt, Turkey, Nepal, and Korea. Mr. Coler has represented AIFT as Career Counselor on more than one hundred American college and university campuses from coast to coast.

The recent affiliation of the Institute with the American Management Association, a leading private enterprise group having a membership of over 32,000 progressive business firms, is of major importance. The AMA has a special division devoted to international commerce and is quite possibly the most influential body in this country representing American interests abroad. This very direct connection with unquestioned leaders of U.S. industry - the members of AMA - is sure to lead to even greater opportunities for graduates of the Institute and will certainly result in more concerns providing a greater variety of posts for graduates.

There is today an increasing demand for young men and women qualified to represent America's expanding interests abroad. Companies want college graduates with such backgrounds as Agricultural Economics, Engineering, Accounting, Social Anthropology, Marketing, Food Technology, Psychology, and Foreign Trade. Two highly successful Thunderbirds had undergraduate majors in Music. Among the more than 1,500 employers of AIFT alumni are First National City Bank, Monsanto, Union Carbide, Chase Manhattan Bank, Hilton Hotels, Goodyear, Sterling Products International, the U.S. Government, and private and religious welfare groups, with activities in over eighty countries.

The Institute's curriculum emphasizes three main fields - languages most wanted by companies (Spanish, Portuguese, French), area studies, and world trade and banking. Language classes, taught by native teachers using the most advanced methods, are limited to eight students. International business courses, presented by scholars with a minimum experience of ten years as executives in foreign lands are tailored to meet the needs of students in classes of seminar size. The training is rigorous, with three to five hours a day on language study and the balance of a very full schedule divided between the area studies and the technical side of foreign trade.

The placement record is an astonishing one. Of students available for employment in 1965, 86 percent were placed before graduation. The salaries received by alumni, together with special allowances for foreign service, run noticeably higher than the average given to personnel having a year of graduate training (similar in length of time to the Institute's Bachelor of Foreign Trade degree); the difference tends to widen over a five-year period.

If interested in the international economic field, students are invited to make an appointment through:

Liberal Arts Majors

Announcing the Professional Qualification Test for outstanding career appointments to National Security Agency

Registration Deadline: Friday, November 26

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1966, don't miss this opportunity to qualify for a rewarding career with the National Security Agency. All liberal arts applicants must take the Professional Qualification Test (PQT) as a prerequisite to NSA interviews for employment.

THE DEADLINE FOR TEST REGISTRATION IS FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26. THE TEST ITSELF WILL BE GIVEN ON CAMPUS ON SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11.

Challenging Career Program Areas

A unique agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA has a critical need for imaginative people. You can make immediate use of your college-acquired capabilities without first accumulating years of "experience." Your specific academic major is of secondary consequence as long as you relish and meet the challenge of extremely complex research problems that frequently will take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge.

You will work on programs of national importance, in such areas as:

- Cryptography . . . the making of codes and ciphers
- Analytic research
- Language research
- Data systems design and programming
- Administrative management (finance and accounting, personnel, training, engineering administration)

The PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office outlines these areas further.

Advancement, Training and Educational Opportunities

NSA promotes from within and emphasizes orderly career development, awarding substantial salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. The environment is academic, and NSA stimulates professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal and on-the-job training in new disciplines and methodology. Advanced study at any of seven area universities is partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

Attractive Location and Other Advantages

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal - you enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Where to go...What to do

First, pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office, the sooner the better. It contains a brief registration form which must be received in Princeton, N. J. by November 26. You will then be mailed a ticket admitting you to the Test on December 11.

Taking and passing the Professional Qualification Test in no way commits or obligates you to anything. But we urge you even if you are not fully certain of your career interests to investigate NSA opportunities now. The Test will be followed by on-campus interviews with NSA representatives.

Please note: You must be a U. S. citizen, subject to a character and loyalty check.

EDITORIAL...

The petition of Dr. Hans Murbe in his fight for permanent tenure brings into sharp focus a much larger issue which bitterly demands examination. The issue, in brief, is that of "publish or perish." It is not a new question, nor is it unique, if existent at Vermont. It has, rather, been a topic of common debate in academic circles for quite some time.

The phrase "publish or perish" has been called an oversimplification. Granted, there are no absolute standards in tenure decisions and, given the subjectivity inherent in this lack of standards, in combination with human nature, we must admit that the term may oversimplify the question in a general contest. Having no access to the reasoning behind the English department's recommendation, we can only say that this may or may not be true in Dr. Murbe's case. In any event, we cannot personally comment on the man's competence as an instructor, one way or the other. We know him only by reputation, but what we have heard is generally good. It is not our purpose to plead his case, nor are we attempting to make a martyr of him. However, as students, we cannot help but sympathize with the higher principle to which he has appealed -- the question of criteria for faculty evaluation.

It appears that UVM is becoming very ambitious in the standards it is imposing, both on its students and its faculty, which is good. There has been much speculation that an attempt is being made to emulate larger universities with larger endowments and larger reputations. This is also fine if the aims of the university are kept in the proper perspective. It is unfortunate, however, that these days the road to academic glory is increasingly through research and publication, sometimes at the expense of good teaching. It should be noted that at many of the schools where research is greatly emphasized, there is an average teaching load of nine hours a week as opposed to twelve here at UVM. It would appear that this university is burning the candle at both ends. In short, one thing is certain -- allowances will have to be made somewhere. But where? As students we are more greatly concerned with a man's teaching ability than with his reputation for scholarship. The "biggest man in his field" is of little use to us if he lacks either the ability or the desire to communicate in the classroom.

It has been argued that a man who does not do extensive research cannot remain abreast of the latest developments in his field and thus cannot qualify as a good instructor. This may be true of certain higher courses where the course is directly related to the research of the man teaching it. But what about the man who simply wants to teach, whose sole enthusiasm is for the communication of knowledge to the next generation? Is it so difficult to conceive of the probability that this man will remain well-informed simply by reading? Must he publish?

We think not, on the rather large assumption that a university's primary function is education.

Some have questioned the wisdom and even the validity of Dr. Murbe's choice of a petition as the best avenue of approach to the question. But regardless of the worth of his methods, the issue remains unobscured by such criticisms. The issue is "publish or perish," and if this is an "unfortunate slogan," it is an unfortunate issue. It is an issue with almost nasty connotations and smacks of a political complexity which students rarely attribute to the academic world. Perhaps this is the rude awakening. We have been told that the principle of granting tenure is partially, if not entirely, designed to protect a man's academic freedom, the freedom to say (or publish) what he pleases. Should this not also include his right not to publish? To the extent that this is true, then, the process by which a man attains tenure imposes restrictions on his academic freedom. As students we have always been just naive enough to believe that academic advancement and the world of the university in general were above politics. We must now reconcile ourselves to the fact of life that wherever there is competition for the rewards that accompany advancement, there are unofficial but generally accepted channels to the achievement of same. Politics is an unfortunate word, carrying with it sinister overtones. But what we mean by politics is simply (and innocently) the methods by which a man gains recognition. We are not muckrakers and this is not intended as a general indictment of any individual or department. It is intended purely as a general observation which must be made about a general system.

Is Dr. Murbe the victim of a misguided system? We do not know. But his case raises certain questions which

Letters To The Editor

Profs Oppose War

Editor's Note: The following statement on Vietnam which four faculty members at UVM signed was published as a full-page ad in the New York Times on Sunday, Oct. 31.

To the President of the United States:

STOP THE BLOODSHED IN VIETNAM

The war in Vietnam is continuing with ever-increasing human suffering, mounting destruction, and diminishing hope for a just and speedy resolution.

A year ago the war in South Vietnam was a civil war, even though opposing factions were instigated, supported, and supplied from the outside, by both the United States and North Vietnam. Today the struggle has become overwhelmingly a war conducted by the American armed forces against a communist-led revolutionary movement.

The people of Vietnam of all political beliefs have been the unwilling and helpless victims of bombs and fire. The American people themselves are undergoing a brutalizing and degrading experience. They are coming to view without concern for the inhuman suffering being inflicted in their name against a defenseless population.

Mr. President, now is the time to put an end to the killing.

It is said that the United States is seeking peace, and freedom from aggression, for Vietnam. Belligerents in all wars claim to seek peace. The real question is what peace terms they are trying to impose, and how. American intervention, both in men and in war materials, is now much greater than the intervention from the North. The terrorism practiced by the Viet Cong is now vastly exceeded by the terror, death and destruction inflicted from the sky by American planes. The only victory to which this massive military action may lead is a conquest of a decimated South Vietnam by the United States. Surely the American people do not seek such a victory.

We ask you to stop the bloodshed now. We ask you to order an immediate halt to the destruction of villages and to the burning of people's food lest it fall into enemy hands. Stop the bombing raids and the waging of offensive military operations.

Let us give the people of Vietnam the chance to work out their own peace, as promised by the Geneva Pact of 1954, regardless of what form of government they may choose. The nations of the world should undertake to guarantee such a peace.

Mr. President, we cannot support your Vietnam policy.

The current threats to investigate protests by students or other critics will not deter us from speaking out against a wrong and immoral policy.

We shall encourage our colleagues, or students, and all responsible citizens to make themselves heard. As for ourselves, we shall continue to exercise our lawful right to protest. We shall oppose your present policy in Vietnam openly and vigorously. Only thus can we do our part in trying to bring about peace and to protect the moral integrity of our nation. Signed:

"... there will be signs and placards, but no whiskers..."

— Burlington-Free Press, October 25

Thank the dear laughing Lord somebody's finally come up with a sensible way to tell a liberal from a conservative. It's going to be so easy from here on in; no more messy fumbling with ideas; no struggling to tell a fellow how you feel. Just walk into a party with whiskers on, man, and you're in (or out, as the case may be).

For heaven's sake, kiddies, it's going to be just grand!

Of course, new systems tend to have flaws (rather like old systems) and this system is no exception. In the first place, we're going to have to rewrite history. After all, you can't go about telling the little school kiddies that Abe Lincoln was a threat to the nation, but what else could he have been with a beard like that? Fortunately for the system, though, there are some who were leftist, and even a bit mad, but who had beards to boot; Jesus Christ, for instance. One couldn't really improve on him.

But there are other little incongruities which one would have to tidy up, to make this lovely system work.

Think, for instance, of the poor little fellow who wants ever so much to be a liberal, but is too young to grow hair on his face. No doubt we'd have to put up with all sorts of messy little marches by his kind, carrying placards demanding "Liberty before Puberty."

Then again, what if one wanted to be a conservative, but happened to like hair on one's face? Mister Lincoln, for instance, grew the fuzziness on his face because some female told him he ought to. Well, that's all very nice, but what would happen to the sanity of the Republican party if Mister Goldwater decided he'd look pleasant with a bit of a beard? Or if William Buckley looked at himself with the shaving cream on one morning, and thought he'd have a go at a mustache? Or if Everett Dirksen let his hair grow long and began cavorting about the capitol that way, looking much like an undernourished wood nymph?

The power structure would crumble; the country would fall. Millions of Americans would begin wandering the streets, no longer able to tell which side they were on. The literary leftists would be bound to protest, which would be dreadful, because how many of us could sleep soundly with visions of a crew-cutted Allen Ginsberg dancing in our heads?

The thing of it is, dears, the fate of the nation depends on control of the length of its hair.

We must, then, preserve the status quo; must continue and enlarge upon this happy little system devised by our free presses; the system of identifying a man's beliefs by his hair. We must do something now, to insure the system!

First thing we could do, is: pass laws to that effect. He who thinks leftishly must wear long hair or fuzz on his face. He who believed rightishly must wear short hair, and must shave oh so carefully. Those who insisted on being deviant and wearing their hair the way they wanted to, could be shipped to small islands off New York, where their influence wouldn't touch law-abiding types.

Meantime, if there was any sort of organized disobedience of the laws, the HUAC could be depended on to investigate, with its customary subtlety:

("Mister X, do you have long hair?")

"Sir, I refuse to answer, and I claim protection under the fourth, fifth, and fourteenth amendments of the United States of America."

The whole thing could become so marvelously simple; this business of identifying a fellow's thoughts by his hair. And it's got off to such a good start already, that we're sure it could be completed in the lovely near future. Why, with a system like this, we could attain perfection! Wouldn't you like that, dearies? Of course you would. So carry on!

You seem quite good at it already.

must be answered. It is high time that the "publish or perish" debate spread from academic to student circles. It is time students were given a glimpse of the methods by which their teachers are chosen and promoted since, in the final analysis, it is the students who pay their salaries and the students who bear the brunt of these decisions in terms of the quality of the instruction they receive.

Now is teaching to be fairly evaluated? This leads us to next week's topic -- the possibility of student evaluation of instruction.

Gould Discusses Law School

Mr. Gould speaking to Student Law Association, Tuesday, Oct. 26, 1965.

Lyman J. Gould, professor of political science here at UVM, was the guest speaker at the Oct. 26th meeting of the Student Law Association. A film entitled "Your Career in Law" was also shown.

The subject of Mr. Gould's address was the "Mechanics of Triumph - How to Get into Law School." According to Mr. Gould the most important step in gaining admission to the law school of your choice, is to honestly answer for yourself the question, "Why do I want to be a lawyer?" The next essential step is to see the work of a lawyer realistically - it's not all trial work a la Perry Mason. He then went on to say that for the undergraduate who is considering law as a career, there is no specific curriculum but courses should include substantial electives in the fields of English, economics and the humanities. A prospective lawyer should never steer away from difficult professors - he should seek out instructors and courses that make one think.

Mr. Gould then outlined the three basic factors that determine admission to law school. These are: overall academic, especially the last two years; scores on the Law School Aptitude Test; and finally recommendations.

The meeting was concluded by an informal question and answer period and a coffee hour.

Mixes And Matches

By Laurie Frank

Dear All,

The cold weather has returned. Along with its snows, it brings the second flow of hour exams and the anxious wait for Thanksgiving vacation.

Best of luck to Alpha Tau Omega on David Hammond's, '67, pinning to Mary Blair, '66, of UVM, and on Thomas Bradshaw's, '66, pinning to Margaret Hutchison, '67, of UVM.

Gary Glynn, '68, of Sigma Alpha Epsilon became pinned to Liz Wood of Conn.

Congratulations to Fred Palmer, '67, of Sigma Phi Epsilon on his recent pinning to Pat Stankevich, '68, of Kappa Alpha Theta.

Phi Delta Theta's Francis Davio, '65, married Alpha Chi Omega's Jean-Marie Martinson, '65.

Lots of luck to SAE fraternity on their new pledges: Thomas Abernethy, '68, Michael Leonard, '68, Donald Patterson, '68, and Pete Nolan, '67.

Phi Delta Theta's new pledges include: Wayne Parenteau, '68, John Whitcomb, '67, Paul Ryan, '68, Hank Projanowski, '68, and Kent Haskin, '67. Phi Delta is also proud of their newly initiated brothers Mike Roberts, '67, and Ken Morey, '68.

Sigma Phi, Phi Delta Theta, and Tau Epsilon Pi, pleased with the success of their Homecoming open house, are looking forward to their next party together. The brothers of Phi Sigma Delta and Lambda Iota made the children of St. Joseph's Orphanage very happy by bringing them trick or treating on Halloween.

Apathy Afflicts The "New Breed"

By Judy Triplett

Apathy is a disease. It is a deadly virus that is nourished by a number of factors, and which attacks drive, ambition, and intellect. In severe cases, the end result is a permanent check in intellectual and social growth; and like any contagious disease, it has its carriers.

Professor Gordon F. Lewis, of the Sociology dept. has given considerable thought to this phenomenon. In an article entitled "The New Breed: A Dissenting View," which appeared in the Sept. 11 issue of "Saturday Review" (recommended to all of you who wish to know why you are the way you are); Prof. Lewis has advanced reasons for student inactivity.

The apathy found on many campuses including, incidentally, our own, is a product of the unconcern of its students, and, in some cases, of the faculty and administration, combined with what Prof. Lewis calls "institutional rigidities . . . that rather successfully prevent any prolonged and cataclysmic student sponsored changes from taking place." These "rigidities" include the following: 1) The "student body is a transitory one . . . and . . . as a group lacks the time to develop the cohesion and crystallize the issues necessary for mounting a sustained attack on well-entrenched procedures in either academia or the society at large." 2) Personal interests of the student, such as housing, job hunting, mate selection, or studying are stronger than interest in collective action. 3) Faculty and administration contrive to discourage any exhibitions that might reflect unfavorably either upon them or the institution.

The attitude of the parents also influences the student. If the parents play an enthusiastic part in civil and national affairs, the student very likely will also. The reverse is also true. If there is a chance that parental disapproval will result in a termination of financial aid, students are apt to think carefully before deciding not to risk disapproval.

According to Prof. Lewis, the size of the institution also influences activity, as does the size and quality of the campus newspaper. On a large campus the absolute number of activists will be greater than at a smaller university, although the proportion of activists to nonactivists may be the same. This condition would provide for a larger nucleus of enthusiastic undergraduates to lead a reform or revolutionary movement, even more so if the students have been selected by the admissions office because they are "oriented largely toward the world of ideas and humanistic values inside and outside of college." A campus newspaper, if it is an effective one, can do much to further the desired reform simply by publicizing it.

(In my discussion with him,) Prof. Lewis pointed out that students are looking for leaders, for heroes who will inspire them to act. The interest, the potential for participation lies dormant in many students, and needs only to be brought out. But it must be brought out by an interested party.

The activist, when he does appear on campus, is by definition a nonconformist and because he is, his peers may not take him very seriously or give him credit for having the abilities for leadership which he possesses, unless he has earned their respect and recognition previously. The Big Man on Campus is not always the one most capable of leadership; even if he has the initiative to demonstrate for what he believes, he may lack the leadership qualities necessary for organization.

These reasons explain the situation, but do not justify it, for the genuinely interested student will find the time to become involved, to seek out the intellectual experience.

UVM is similar to many campuses throughout the nation in that "students do not take full advantage of their educational opportunities, such as forums, lectures, and of the professors themselves." Says Prof. Lewis: "One thing that has impressed me in fifteen years

Classics To Be Discussed

The Goodrich Classical Club is presenting again this year two lectures by distinguished scholars in the field of Classics. This year's lecturers are George E. Duckworth, Giger Professor of Classics at Princeton University, and Sterling Dow, Hudson Professor of Greek at Harvard University.

Professor Duckworth will lecture on Wednesday, November 10, at 8:00 p.m., in 101 Votey Hall. The public and student body are cordially invited to attend free of charge. The lecture is especially recommended to students of literature.

The title of the lecture is "New Thoughts on Vergil." The new thoughts which Professor Duckworth will discuss are certain discoveries, whether critical or approving, has been generally one of astonishment. In a book entitled Structural Patterns and Proportions in Vergil's Aeneid (University of Michigan Press 1962) Duckworth persuasively demonstrates that Vergil constructed the Aeneid, the Roman national epic, on a system of mathematical proportions established according to the Golden Mean Ratio. It was this same Golden Mean Ratio which not only inspired the Renaissance architect, but also apparently Nature Herself, as She fashioned many physical objects ranging from sea shells to man.

Another revolutionary suggestion made by Professor Duckworth is that Vergil's Aeneid was influenced in part by the great Sanskrit epic, the Mahabharata. One of the most compelling arguments for this influence is the light it throws on Vergil's conception of Aeneas' chief Italian opponent, Turnus.

As one of America's outstanding Latinists, Professor Duckworth is widely known as the editor of The Complete Roman Drama (Random House 1942), and the author of a definitive work on Roman Comedy, The Nature of Roman Comedy (Princeton University Press 1952). He also prepared a distinguished critical text of Plautus' Epidicus and an excellent annotated bibliography of Vergilian studies from 1940 to 1963, the sine qua non of any Vergilian scholar today.

Grad School

On Wednesday, November 10, 1965, at 8:00 P.M., in Ira Allen Chapel, a program will be presented by the Student Government Bodies of The University of Vermont, St. Michael's College and Trinity College entitled: PREPARING FOR TODAY'S GRADUATE / PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL EDUCATION. Featured speakers and topics include:

DR. WILLIAM H. MACMILLAN

"Women's Career Planning Three Dimensional"

Today's senior woman, in looking ahead to her future, has to plan for three work-a-day worlds. The first is what I choose to call the training period. This usually lasts for one to three years. Upon getting married, the young woman puts aside her job training, enters the second world of marriage and raising a family, concentrating essentially on living a domestic life. The period tends to last, depending upon the number of children in her family, anywhere from seven to ten years. She now enters the third work-a-day world, which is a re-entry into the job market and picking up the strings of her career, which was started following her graduation from college.

There are many reasons today why women are taking to fulltime jobs, after having established their families. I am sure you have read any number of articles discussing this topic in the various women's magazines. Furthermore, I suspect many of you have your own insights on this discussion, based upon your own family experience. Without getting too involved in looking at the working mother's reasons for holding down a job, one basic cause to effect every American family is the increasingly high cost today of obtaining a college degree. Fifteen years ago a husband's income could sustain the majority of his education bills. Today the working wife is a major contributor to the family income where it concerns abolving the cost of obtaining a college and graduate education.

A report, prepared by the National Industrial Conference Board shows that in 40% of the 6.5 million U.S. families with incomes of $10,000 or more annually, the wife brings home a pay check to supplement the income of the chief bread winner. The rise of multi-wage families also is predicted on the continued increase in the number of married women in the labor force.

An estimated 13.2 million married women - nearly one fifth of the nation's work force - are currently employed or looking for employment. The typical working woman of today is likely to be about 41 years old, with a husband and a growing family. While many work out of necessity, a growing number are seeking to use the skills acquired by higher education and training. The Labor Department estimates that nine out of every ten women will be gainfully employed during some part of their lives. If she is married, a woman can expect to work 25 years. If she is single, she will work forty years. Despite this trend to outside jobs, housewifery is still the main occupation of most American women and about 35 million of them devote their full time to it. However, for the wife who wants to, or needs to work, there are some 446 kinds of jobs open to her. She is most often found in a sales, service, or factory job. The Labor Department also reports some 2,500 women electricians, 5,000 carpenters and more than 12,000 painters and paper-hangers.

No longer can the women college graduate in today's ever-changing world limit herself to the planning of a single career. For her thinking, unlike a man's, in at least this respect, must now become three dimensional.

of teaching here and in Canada is that the proportion of 'committed' students changes very slightly, if at all, from year to year." Students in general do not care about issues that are not right at hand. Or if they do, their feelings are not so strong that they will inconvenience themselves to alleviate them.

Few students are in college out of a sincere desire to learn, and even those whose grades are excellent are, in many cases, earning the grades as prestige symbols rather than learning the course because the subject interests them.

Prof. Lewis made the observation that few students will take an interesting but difficult elective course if it promises to lower their academic average.

When questioned as to the effect of the impersonal college atmosphere upon the student, he further stated that few students expect individual attention, and choose to ignore it when it is offered. The professors here make themselves available at specified times during the week and at other times by appointment. Yet very few students take advantage of this opportunity to clarify an idea or discuss a problem. The professor can only make himself available. It remains for the student to seek out his help. "Professors are a resource, just as is the library. They are here to help you."

From Prof. Lewis' view, the student who makes the most of his college years may not be the one with the best grades or the busiest social calendar. He will, however, be rich in intellectual experience, whether from courses, debates, demonstrations, or conversations with interesting and stimulating individuals, many of whom will be professors - if he takes the trouble to know them as people rather than gods of academia.

War On Poverty Aids Potential Dropouts

By James Concannon

University Lecture Series guest speaker, Dr. J. Earl Williams of the Office of Economic Opportunity, said Thursday night that "as long as these programs exist, I don't see any (financial) reason why any kid can't go to college."

Dr. Williams, former University of Tennessee professor, was introduced by Professor Milton Nadworny of the UVM commerce and economics department. He spoke to a group of about 100 persons.

"Community Action Programs (CAP) and the War on Poverty" was Dr. Williams' subject. Fifty per cent of United States poverty is in the South, much of it caused by unemployed men who are too old to be hired by factories and too young for Social Security. But the speaker also pointed out that poverty is nationwide. He read a letter received from a poverty stricken family in Connecticut, the heart of affluency.

Several programs are already in affect, directed by the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) and other government agencies to deal with the "target population" (poor people). The Job Corps trains city high school dropouts for work; the Neighborhood Youth Corps (NYC) arranges for any dropout to have a part-time job at $1.25 per hour to earn enough to stay in high school; the Work Study Program allows a college student to take a job paid for by a grant; and the VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) Program sends volunteers to work in poverty stricken areas of the United States.

Dr. Williams described Community Action Programs as "an umbrella over other poverty programs." These programs try to get everyone in the community involved in the work. They receive some OEO funds, but are based on local interest and action. In education, the program can take a high school dropout into the Job Corps, which trains him to work. After completing the Job Corps program, he can make enough money to afford to go back to school. The NYC helps him through high school until he can join the "Upward Bound" program to take him into college. The student goes to summer school at no cost during the summer previous to his enrollment to fill in the empty spots in his education. He enters college with government financial aid and enrolls in Work Study Program of the OEO, thus making enough money to stay in college and receive his degree. Dr. Williams said there is no longer any financial reason for anyone missing a college education. There are also opportunities for college graduates to get high salaried jobs with the OEO.

The actual Community Action Program consists of several stages. Local residents are sent to recruit the poor for CAP help. Those poor brought in are given tests of education and work experience. Then they are given literacy training and orientation to a pay-by-the-week job culture. The program finds jobs for the workers, help them move, and counsel them. Retired members of the "target population" are sent to work with orphans in childrens' homes.

Dr. Williams proposes that a "medicare" program be added to CAP. Pensioners would be sent out to inform possible recipients of social security and medicare to tell them of their rights under the laws.

In response to a criticism that the CAP area in Vermont is not a "community" at all since it consists of Chittenden, Franklin, Grand Isle and Addison counties, Dr. Williams said that a "community" this large is necessary because of limited funds for organization, and that a smaller area would be less efficient. He pointed out that the Program in Mississippi includes the whole state as one "community" and is working well with the help of relatively liberal Governor Paul Johnson and the Catholic diocese of Natchez-Jackson.

By the use of any and all of the programs available, the government can now get almost anyone from his present position into a better one, Dr. Williams said.

Company L-12 Pershing Rifles of UVM held a reception on Oct. 27 at the University's Billings Center for the new "Company Sweetheart" and candidate for 1966 Regimental Queen, Miss Carol Anne Jenne. Miss Jenne will represent Company L-12 in competition with representatives of major New England colleges and universities at Boston, Massachusetts next Spring. This event coincides with the Pershing Rifles annual drill competition and military ball.

Miss Jenne is a senior at UVM and a Home Economics major. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Thayer Jenne of 189 South Main Street, Richford, Vermont. Miss Jenne is a sister of Alpha Chi Omega sorority, and a member of the Women's Student Government Association House Committee and the Freshman Orientation Committee. She is the treasurer of her sorority and secretary of the UVM senior class.

Pershing Rifles is a national military fraternity of ROTC cadets organized before the turn of the century by then Lieutenant, later General of the Armies, John J. Pershing while serving with an officer training detachment at the University of Nebraska. The fraternity is associated with ROTC units across the country.

Miss Jenne will hostess Pershing Rifles social functions, assist the Pershing Rifles company commander during weekly drills, promote the image of Pershing Rifles on and off campus, and represent the organization at the Boston convocation next April.

NAME SU

By Alice Dupuis

Professor Frank W. Lidlal of the UVM Music Department attended the annual meeting of the National Association of Music Executives in State Universities (NAME SU) Oct. 8-10 at the University of Maryland.

One of the more important aspects of the three day round of meetings was the discussion of the Arts and Humanities Bill signed into law September 29. The discussion was with a representative of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The bill provides for the establishment of a National Foundation of Arts and Humanities, a National Council of Arts, a National Council of Humanities, a Federal Council on Arts and Humanities, and a National Endowment for each, Arts and Humanities. There is an appropriation of $63 million for the first three years. Dr. Lidlal said this bill "recognized the Arts and Humanities as important in the civilization and development of American civilization as of equal importance with science."

Another development of this realization was the establishment of the Vermont Council of Arts. The main duty of this body is to marshal the art interests in the state, that is, to find out who and what we have and to develop a program to encourage the fine arts. There are three UVM faculty members on the Board of Trustees, Paul Aschenbach, Edward Feldner, and Richard Janson. James Keene is the chairman of the Music Section of the Council. This Council will allocate Vermont's share of the federal funds. Allocations are made on a matching basis.

On the question of a possible fine arts building, Dr. Lidlal said that final comment on this would have to come from Dr. Janson, chairman of the Fine Arts Building Committee. However, Dr. Lidlal felt that "the fine arts deserve better facilities on the campus than they have hitherto had." The fine arts are "not only flourishing but bulging at the seams. They need better facilities to do a better job and to expand service to UVM."

Dr. Lidlal also mentioned that the meetings of the NAME SU are usually held at universities with new buildings and that he would someday like to have the meeting at UVM.

Past Present

The Company's first engine, the Wasp, took to the air on May 5, 1926. Within a year the Wasp set its first world record and went on to smash existing records and set standards for both land and seaplanes for years to come, carrying airframes and pilots higher, farther, and faster than they had ever gone before.

In recent years, planes powered by Pratt & Whitney Aircraft have gone on to set new standards of performance in much the same way as the Wasp had done in the 1920's. The 727 and DC-9 are indicative of the new family of short-to-medium range jetliners which are powered by the highly successful JT8D turbofan. Examples of current military utilizations are the J58-powered Mach 3 YF-12A which recently established four world aviation records and the advanced TF30-powered F-111 variable-geometry fighter aircraft.

Your and the Future

Take a look at the above chart; then a good long look at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft—where technical careers offer exciting growth, continuing challenge, and lasting stability—where engineers and scientists are recognized as the major reason for the Company's continued success.

Engineers and scientists at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft are today exploring the ever-broadening avenues of energy conversion for every environment... all opening up new avenues of exploration in every field of aerospace, marine and industrial power application. The technical staff working on these programs, backed by Management's determination to provide the best and most advanced facilities and scientific apparatus, has already given the Company a firm foothold in the current land, sea, air and space programs so vital to our country's future. The list of achievements amassed by our technical staff is a veritable list of firsts in the development of compact power plants, dating back to the first Wasp engine which lifted the United States to a position of world leadership in aviation. These engineering and scientific achievements have enabled the Company to obtain its current position of leadership in fields such as gas turbines, liquid hydrogen technology and fuel cells.

Should you join us, you'll be assigned early responsibility. You'll find the spread of Pratt & Whitney Aircraft's programs requires virtually every technical talent. You'll find opportunities for professional growth further enhanced by our Corporation-financed Graduate Education Program. Your degree can be a BS, MS or PhD in: MECHANICAL • AERONAUTICAL • ELECTRICAL • CHEMICAL ENGINEERING • PHYSICS • CHEMISTRY • METALLURGY • CERAMICS • MATHEMATICS • ENGINEERING SCIENCE OR APPLIED MECHANICS.

Daniels On Communism

By Eloise Roberts

A conference on "Religion in the Communist Bloc Countries" is to be held this coming week, Mon. and Tues., at St. Michael's College. The keynote address is to be delivered by Robert Daniels, chairman and professor of history here at UVM. Other speakers are: Harold Berman, professor of Harvard University Law School; Ferenc Nagy, former prime minister of Hungary; Zygmunt Broniarek, Washington correspondent for "Trybuna Ladu," the official organ of the Polish United Works' Party.

The roster of speakers is concluded with Kenneth Latourette, an ordained Baptist minister who has taught at the College of Yale in China. Mr. Latourette, the author of numerous books and articles on Oriental culture and the Christian missions in the Far East, will address himself to the subject, "Communism and Religion in China."

The program will be rounded out by a panel at 3:45 p.m. at which all the conference speakers will join in a discussion and question period.

The conference is free and open to the public. It is to be held at the Playhouse at St. Michael's College. For further information and reservations, call John Donoghue, Public Relations Director, telephone 864-7451.

WRA Plans Fall Program

The UVM Women's Recreation Association is now underway with its fall program of activities. The field hockey team meets on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 4:15 p.m. On Oct. 22, the team played Castleton State College in an exhibition game for the Vermont Education Association convention. UVM triumphed, 2-1 in a game which grew progressively more exciting as the closing minutes approached. On Thursday, Nov. 4, the team met Plymouth State College. On Saturday, Nov. 13, WRA is sponsoring a field hockey, bowling, and volleyball sports day here. Skating Club begins Nov. 9 at 7:15 p.m. at the rink in Patrick gym. Everyone is welcome to come for recreational fun and free instruction. A bowling tournament will be held at the Waterman alleys Nov. 8-11 to choose players for the sports day on the 13th. Volleyball will be starting on Nov. 9th at 7:30 p.m. WRA board meetings are held Thursday evenings at 6:45 p.m. in Southwick.

Booters In 3-Way Tie For Yankee Conference Title

When a team leaves a football field having been defeated 41-6, on most occasions, there is little that can be acknowledged in the way of complimentary remarks.

However, Saturday afternoon at Amherst, Mass., there was more shown than could meet the eye. Whereas last year our squad was down two touchdowns at the half and were totally demolished by a second half kick-off return, this year our boys came back from a 16-0 defeat to hold off the Mass. Redmen, and then score. Two succeeding threats by the Cats were stalled by interceptions. The desire was there, but the size and experience were not.

Playing with a team of highly touted sophomores, Coach Clifford and his staff (in a pre-season interview) expressed hopes of a 4-4 season. The team has come a long way since then, and with a victory over a resurgent Middlebury team which upset Norwich last Saturday, will close out the 1965-66 season with a fine 6-2 mark. Looking back on both the Maine and Mass. games, it is evident that a lack of desire did not lead to overwhelming defeats, but rather inexperience. The safety blitz defense used by the Cats against Mass., has been used very effectively by many squads in the country, but, last Saturday, Sophomore Quarterback Gregg Landry riddled the defense for 20 completions and 300 yards. This coupled with the running of Phil Vandersea, the rugged U. of Mass. fullback (who has already received offers from two professional teams) resulted in the enormous sum of 429 yards total offense. Finally, in contract to the Maine Line which I feel just was too aggressive and beat us continually because of hustle, the Cats faced a Mass. Line which was simply too big.

Looking ahead to next year when our entire defensive team will be returning (with the exception of John Sullivan) I am confident that Landry and the U. of Mass. squad will find a determined Catamount squad equal to the challenge.

A final note of regret is the injury sustained by Capt. Rusty Brink. We all sincerely hope that Rusty, who has given his "all" this year as both player and leader, will be able to see some action Saturday at Middlebury. It will be the conclusion of a glorious career of Vermont Gridiron action.

UMASS TROUNCES CATS 41-6

By Bob Bloomenthal

The UVM football squad heads into its final game of the 1965 season at Middlebury this Saturday after suffering its second defeat of the year last week. Now sporting a 3-2 mark, the Catamounts will be out to sew up its third straight State Series crown against the Panthers from Middlebury who could also win the championship with a victory.

In last week's encounter, however, it was UMass and its sophomore quarterback Greg Landry who turned out the victors. Massachusetts simply had too much talent for the Cats as Landry completed 20 of 25 passes for 300 yards, Landry's success spelled defeat for UVM by a 41-6 margin.

CATS MAKE THEIR MARK

The high point for the Cats came early in the second half with Vermont trailing 16-0. Scott Fitz drove the Cats to the UMass 27 and then fired a 27 yard touchdown pass to halfback Dick Hebert for the lone UVM tally of the game. With the Mass lead cut to 16-6, Landry proceeded to throw 10 completed passes in 10 attempts in the remainder of the half, mainly to his M & M ends, Meers and Morin, to raise the final score to 41-6. Meers' reception total allowed him to set a Yankee Conference for passes received in a season.

BRINK INJURED

Despite the score, the real low point for Vermont came early in the game when Capt. Rusty Brink came up with an ankle injury and sat out the rest of the contest. Without the All-New England center's inspiration the

By Al Rice

The UVM soccer team closed a most successful season today against Middlebury. Coach Greig's soccermen have compiled an excellent 7-1 record. Their only loss being a 2-1 defeat to double overtime to the Redmen of UMass.

PERFECT RECORD SPOILED

This past Saturday at Amherst, Vermont was ranked on a won loss and goals scored basis as No. 1 in the country. However, an outplayed Mass team scored the winning goal in the second overtime period, and thus, a chance for an undefeated season went astray for the Cats. Mass was, indeed, outplayed as the figures speak for themselves. Vermont outshot Mass, 16 to 7, and had numerous other opportunities to score, but could not capitalize on them.

The Catamounts pulled a lot of surprises this season. Having had only a mediocre record last season, not much was expected from them by their opponents for the 1965 season. Nevertheless, the team had a lot of confidence in their own ability. Vermont knocked off Maine 7-1 and UConn, 3-0 early in the season, proving that they could stand up against the best teams in the East.

STRONG DEFENSE IS THE KEY

Leading scorers from Vermont going into today's game were outside left Dennis Linnehan, a senior, and center forward Pete Baldwin, a sophomore,

CATS EARN CONF. RECOGNITION

Junior halfback Dick Hebert of St. Albans continues to reap in the honors for his outstanding performance against Norwich Saturday as he has been named Yankee Conference offensive player of the week.

Hebert turned what looked like a major upset into a Vermont victory by returning a Norwich punt 50 yards for a touchdown midway through the last quarter. The Cats edged the Cadets 7-6.

Other Vermont nominations were linebacker Rusty Brink and sophomore Colin Hurd. Brink led a defensive line which regrouped in the second half and held Norwich to -3 yards rushing in the final 30 minutes. Hurd blocked the crucial Norwich extra point attempt in the 2nd quarter.

Fitz is tied for third in passing with Connecticut's Dave Whaley with a .404 completion percentage.

Hebert, Fitz and Mike Burke are tied for fifth in scoring with four touchdowns each.

Cats could not hold the Redmen down although they succeeded in their game plan of stopping the UMass rushing attack.

For their performances in the game, halfback Hebert and sophomore linebacker Colin Hurd received honorable mention on the ECAC weekly team; Landry was named Yankee Conference sophomore of the week for his accomplishments.

PANTHERS NEXT

This Saturday the Cats will try to finish with a 6-2 record at Middlebury. The Panthers have been a hot and cold team all year, with their low point a loss to RPI to snap the Engineers' long losing streak, and their high point last week's 14-12 win over Norwich. Middlebury has a crafty quarterback in Tom Clark and a hard runner in halfback Fred Beamis and they will be out to end UVM's domination of State Series play in the past couple years.

each with 9 goals. Also, contributing a great deal to the attack was inside left John Semler, another sophomore. The defense, which allowed only 1.5 goals a game, was the part of the Cats game which provided the margin of difference in the many close games in which Vermont won. Center halfback Jeff Taft played consistently good ball all season long. Captain Bill Willey, a center forward, came back on defense time and again to break up the oppositions scoring opportunities. Worthy of mention is the fine defensive game played by senior Ted Manning against Mass. last Saturday.

Playing exceptionally well in the nets all year were Vermont's two goalies, Tim Madison and Gerry Abbott. Madison saw most of the action and by examining his average goals (game average 1.5), one can tell that he was anything but vulnerable in the nets. Gerry Abbot saw service in key situations, when, due to strong wind conditions, many high shots when taken at the Vermont goal. Jerry's height proved to be the winning margin in these instances.

The Vermont soccer team, in only its second year of Collegiate Competition, certainly proved to the rest of the Yankee Conference and the rest of New England that they are not only a good team but already must be rated up with the top soccer teams in the area.

Scope Brings Phil Ochs

UVM Darkened For 2 Hours

By Mike Unger

Scope will present "Phil Ochs in Concert" on Wednesday, Nov. 17. The concert will be held at Patrick Gymnasium and will begin at 8:00 p.m. Admission will be free for UVM students and faculty upon presentation of an ID card. Regular tickets will be $1. There will be seating on the floor (bring blankets if you wish) and in the bleachers.

Phil Ochs belongs to the "new breed" of folksingers who are playing such a dominant role in contemporary folk music. Many of the songs he has written are a motivating force influencing a good deal of the political, social, and moral attitudes of the college generation.

Mr. Ochs writes almost all of the songs he sings. They deal primarily with contemporary political events, labor problems, human rights and various other aspects of American society. He does not back away from controversial issues. He has written and sung about Kennedy's assassination, the sinking of the atomic submarine "Thresher", the injustices of the electric chair, and the state of Mississippi, and two talking blues involving the war in Vietnam and the Cuban missile crisis. Perhaps one of his more renowned folksongs is "Draft Dodger Rag," in which he lampoons the attempts of young men to avoid the draft by making such excuses as:

"I'm only eighteen, I've got a ruptured spleen,
And I always carry a purse,
I've got eyes like a bat, my feet are flat,
And my asthma's getting worse
Think of my career, my sweet-heart dear,
And my poor old invalid aunt,
Well I ain't no fool, I'm a goin' to school,
And I'm working in a defense plant..."

Phil Ochs has recorded two albums for Elektra Records, "All the News That's Fit to Sing" and "I Ain't Marching Any More." They are among the leading selling albums in the folk field.

When considering the leaders among the topical folksingers, Phil Ochs rates with the best. He has appeared at numerous colleges throughout the country, in addition to regular appearances in concert halls and coffee houses in many of the large cities of the U.S.

Phil Ochs' appearance at UVM will be free to students on Wed., Nov. 17 at 8:00 p.m. at the gym. He is sponsored by Scope.

Confusion, wonder, delight and annoyance were some of the reactions displayed UVM students as lights all over campus flickered and went out on Tuesday evening.

UVM was darkened for from one to two hours as portions of the northeast lost their power. Students going about their normal evening routines were suddenly faced with darkness.

Though many expressed concern for the outside world, UVM was also a point of concern in the minds of many. There were such problems as darkened corridors and rooms, chaotic dining halls (especially at Marsh), and an untold number of students were stranded in showers or the like. One student is said to have been playing handball. When the lights went out he spent an extended length of time on his hands and knees searching for the ball and then for the door.

The girls at Redstone were locked in the dorms from about 5:30 p.m. until the lights went back on. During their confinement they were visited by a large number of male students, whose object seems to have been a panty raid. Locked doors frustrated their attempt.

On the whole however, most students remained calm and orderly. They showed co-operation with those in charge until power was restored.

UVM Tuesday Night

Evening classes were cancelled. Billings, the library, and several other buildings on campus were closed for the evening in order to use less of the power being produced by auxiliary generators. Naturally, many were inconvenienced, especially those who were studying for exams. The majority were quite happy when lights finally returned.

Vietnam Questions Answered

By Marion Robinson and Bruce Rosen

During this decade the United States is faced with one of the most controversial issues in its history. We are of course referring to the Viet Nam crisis. In recognizing the importance of the topic, the CYNIC distributed a questionnaire seeking the campus' opinion on the value of the current peace marches, their knowledge of the reasons for the war, and how strongly the students were for or against the United States' overall stand in the crisis. For the purpose of direct comparison of opinions and knowledge of the entire situation, those filling out the questionnaire were asked to respond as to whether or not they were currently enrolled in the R.O.T.C. or some form of the reserves. Approximately 200 questionnaires were returned, at least half of them being filled out by R.O.T.C. Cadets. In most respects the answers given by both groups were very similar, but there were a few striking differences which will be brought out in this article.

The first question answered went as follows: "Do you think there is any value in the current peace marches? What do you believe are the real motives of the majority of people behind them?" In general, both R.O.T.C. and non-R.O.T.C. students believe that the peace marches are not beneficial to the American cause. The reasons they give in support of their negative feelings are that marches only serve to lower the morale of our soldiers overseas, make the U.S. government look bad in the eyes of the rest of the world and can be used as an instrument of Communist propaganda. They also show a general lack of faith in the American government. The marches create the false impression that a great number of Americans are against U.S. foreign policy, whereas it is only a small minority of the people who are involved in the marches. Both groups believe the motives behind the marches are a desire for publicity, a form of releasing energy and frustrations, a means for avoidance of the draft. Students said that they are Communist inspired, occur because of a lack of a better thing to do on the part of its participants, and is "the thing to do." The R.O.T.C. students as a whole are more strongly opposed to the peace marches and tend to emphasize that the wish to avoid the draft is the primary motive of those who participate in the marches. Some typical comments of those who are against the marches follow:

"I think a majority of the people marching are young people who are looking for a way to rebel against the norms of society and their parents. It is unfortunate that they cannot find a more constructive way to exhibit their immaturity."

"Those behind the anti-Viet

Nam policy marchers are a group of people who are afraid that they might be called to do their share in the fight for freedom. Those who march in favor of U.S. policy realize that victory is the road to peace, retreat the road to defeat."

"I do not respect anyone who must express his ideas by carrying a sign, whether or not a person supports Viet Nam policy or not. Decisions should be made within the mind and heart of an individual and hence, there is no need for foolish and uneducated mouthing of platitudes."

A minority of both groups responded to the peace march question in a positive manner. Both groups agreed that the only value to the peace marches is a demonstration of one's constitutional rights. The marches are beneficial in that they force the people to look at both sides of the issue rather than blindly accepting U.S. policy without first giving note to any possible alternatives.

"The peace marches make people think about the war in Viet Nam. It also forces the government to explain its policies in Viet Nam as well as making the government aware of the varying sentiments in the country in regards to the war."

"The peace marches give people a chance to express their beliefs, which is an important freedom."

The second question we asked the students was: "To the best of your knowledge, why is there a war in Viet Nam?" Both groups seemed to be well informed and in general agreement as to the reasons for the war. They said we were fighting to contain communism. Some mentioned U.S. public commitment of 1954 to the defense of Southeast Asia, and our own principles of defending our desires for a truly democratic world. Some of the non-R.O.T.C. students believed the U.S. was fighting the war for selfish motives.

"On the surface, it is a face 'the loss of Viet Nam to communism' occurred in 1945" (Joseph Buttinger). All the fighting that has been going on there for the last twenty years has aimed at reversing this historical fact. The U.S. government seems to fight communism with what can be only termed 'crusading zeal' - The U.S. believes that democracy which is perhaps right and at least works to an extent here is the best for everyone (neglecting that it is after all possible that the Communists can make the identical claim), and will force this upon people in a 'we know what's best for you' militaristic, capitalistic fashion."

"There is a war in Viet Nam because of the ever-spreading territory occupied by those countries who advocate a communistic or socialistic form of government."

"We have a war because we believe in democracy and believe it to be the best form of government."

"A war exists in Viet Nam because certain people with enough courage to negate Communism are doing just that."

We next asked the students' opinions as to whether or not the U.S. should continue taking a firm stand in Viet Nam. The R.O.T.C. students agreed that we must continue taking the firm stand that we have been, and they were almost unanimous in their convictions. The most common reasons given for assuming a firm stand were that we must stop the spread of communism right now since the policy of appeasement has failed so often in the past. Quitting now would deal a damaging blow to our world prestige. We must continue to establish faith in our government in the eyes of other nations who are depending on the U.S. for support. We must protect our possessions in the Philippines, and we must keep our promise of protection and aid for countries in this area according to a commitment made by Eisenhower in 1954.

Of the few negative answers received, the following included:

"Let's give up and admit we have failed in the struggle over Viet Nam. We will never really win the war there anyway but shall only increase the magnitude and scope of the war. But, instead of spending money for our own pleasures and luxuries, let us step up our Peace Corp program and others like it and show the world how much we really care about our fellow man. 'Love worketh no ill to his neighbor' Rom 12:10."

"I'd like them to get out because we can't afford to have my husband go. They won't pay him enough to even cover our rent."

A few of the more typically positive answers advocating a firm stand were:

"We definitely should remain in Viet Nam and continue to take a firm stand. If we were to leave, many nations would feel that they could no longer depend on us if they needed similar help. It would also be a victory for the communist cause and communism must be fought everywhere."

"We should definitely continue our stand. It would be ridiculous to pull out now, after shedding so much American blood and committing ourselves as we have. The advance of Communism has to be stopped somewhere - the sooner the better."

"If we do get out, we'll lose face. We told the people of Viet Nam 12 years ago that we wouldn't let the communists take over. We can't leave now. We've got to show them that we're not paper tigers."

Our last question asked the student to rate the overall U.S. policy toward the Viet Nam situation, while also stating whether or not the student had any relatives who are in the Armed Forces at the present time. The categories that could be checked in reference to U.S. policy were "excellent, good, fair, poor, or very poor." Of all students answering the questionnaire, approximately 9% thought U.S. policy was "excellent," 65% thought the policy was "good," 17% believed it to be "fair," 5% "poor," and 4% "very poor." In contrast, 14% of the R.O.T.C. students believed our policy to be "excellent," whereas only 4% of the non-R.O.T.C. students agreed, 71% of the R.O.T.C. students said the U.S. policy was "good," 51% of the non-R.O.T.C. students said the same, 12% of the R.O.T.C. students believed the policy to be "fair," 2% said it was "poor," and 1% "very poor." Of the non-R.O.T.C. students, 25% believed our policy was "fair," 10% said it was "poor," and 10% believed it was "very poor." In most cases in both groups, the persons having at least one relative in the Armed Forces responded to the question on overall quality of U.S. policy in Viet Nam in a more favorable manner.

Al Hirt Comes Friday

At Hirt

By Judy Beeber

The single performer who contributed most to the early sell-out of the Blue Lane Series, Al Hirt, one of America's great trumpet showmen, will appear at Memorial Auditorium on Friday, Nov. 12, at 8:30 p.m.

Hirt has been promoted as "the greatest exponent of jazz of this generation" and a "virtuoso of the trumpet." Musicians like Andre Kostelanetz, Tommy Dorsey and Ray McKinley have traveled from all over the country to hear Al Hirt's trumpet magic. When Hirt is filling his role as entertainer, he enjoys playing for laughs - dancing his great frame around, wiggling hips, waving his full beard in the air and engaging in humorous banter.

Hirt has now passed beyond being a mere trumpeter, or even only an entertainer. He has arrived at that status of a full-fledged personality shared only by international figures such as Dietrich, Garland, Chevalier and Crosby. However, years of training preceded the attainment of such heights.

Hirt's father and mother encouraged Al's love of music. He attended the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music to gain the background which permits him to go from the self-owned Al Hirt Club in New Orleans to the concert stage with the New Orleans Symphony. After training at the Conservatory, Al joined the Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Ray McKinley and Horace Heidt bands. Then he settled down in New Orleans, where jazz reached its heights.

Since that time, Al Hirt has attained popularity through his own achievements. He has appeared in the Dunes Hotel in Las Vegas, Palmer House of Chicago, the Riviera of Las Vegas, Basin Street East in New York, the Creek Theater in Los Angeles.

Hirt has also shared in many television programs in the past years. His appearances have included seven returns to the Dinah Shore Show, ten visits with Ed Sullivan, the Andy Williams and Perry Como Shows and many others. He has appeared in two Hollywood movies, and he starred in the legitimate theater in Kansas City, in the musical, "Carnival."

Hirt's fame does not stop here. He has recorded many songs which have hit the gold record mark of 1 million copies sold. Among these recordings are "Java," "Honey in the Horn," "Cotton Candy," and "Sugar Lips." His singles have competed successfully on the hit charts with Beatles' and Stones' hits. Not long ago, Hirt joined forces with Arthur Fielder, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and made an album called "Pops Goes the Trumpet."

Hirt will appear with his sextet of which the other members are: Joseph "Pee Wee" Spitelero, clarinet; Fred H. Crans, piano; Gerald Hirt, trombone; Lowell Miller, bass fiddler; and James Zitano, drums.

Hirt is one of the few entertainers who rose from relative obscurity to national demand in a few brilliant engagements.

Fleming Exhibits Local Works

By Robert S. Taintor

On display at the Fleming Museum from Nov. 13 through Nov. 29 will be a sampling of paintings by Charles Lewis Heyde. Mr. Heyde was a regional painter, painting primarily in the northern Vermont area in the middle and later nineteenth century.

The earlier paintings by Heyde are quite superior to his later works. His use of color is vivid and the impressions created by the paintings are striking. The landscapes of his early paintings are well forward on the canvas, aiding in the believability and flow of a particular scene. The impressions created by his early paintings are not of a harsh photographic quality but rather are of a pleasant reality.

Heyde's later paintings change stylistically and the impressions they create are the antithesis of his earlier works. The later paintings project a somber, almost passive, mood. The landscapes appear at a distance on the canvas and the use of greys and browns with pale pink skies enhance the feeling of a passive, bucolic way of life. The paintings of his later period are less distinct in execution. It is in Heyde's later period that pink skies, and repetition of certain scenes in a seemingly mechanical fashion reduce his import as a painter.

Although Heyde may not be considered a great painter — he was more than adequate in expressing feelings and moods of a way of life peculiar to this region of the country during the middle and late nineteenth century.

The paintings for the exhibit are on loan to the museum from residents of the greater Burlington area and Hanover, New Hampshire.

Hippolytus Reviewed

The UVM department of speech and drama, along with the University Players, presented Euripides' Greek tragedy, Hippolytus, this past weekend. It was done in classical Greek style with the use of masks; and this bold and daring experiment went over quite well with the capacity audience Saturday at Arena Theatre.

Peter Covette as Hippolytus, "the brightest star of Athens," with the young and tempestuous heart, was overwhelming. His performance was certainly the highlight of the play, marked by his brilliant voice and his expressive gestures. Mr. Covette is an actor of high quality.

Not too far behind Covette was William Dixon. As Theseus, he was nearly perfect and his towering, impressive stature added greatly to his performance.

Judith Guernsey as Phaedra, stepmother and lover of Hippolytus, was adequate. There were times when she came through well, but there were other points at which she was weak. This contrast within her performance was due to inconsistencies in her voice.

In other roles, Elizabeth Bradspies was good as Aphrodite, but Carol Scott was miscast as Artemis, goddess of the hunt. Forrest Bowman was excellent as the Old Servant, Marilyn Deutsch and Elizabeth Ingoldsby were both strong as women of Troezen. Finally, Trent Anderson as the messenger was a little stiff at times, but was otherwise convincing.

William Schenk, scenery designer, and Lynn Breth, costume designer, must be congratulated on superior workmanship. The scenery and costumes, along with Peter Covette and William Dixon, did much to provide director Edward J. Feldner with a success. For Hippolytus, with its universal theme of man's limitations, remained a masterpiece when handled thus competently.

Outing Club

Saturday three Outing Club members journeyed to Middlebury, not to see UVM beat Middlebury in football, but to do some rock climbing and caving at Cobble Hill, some cliffs in East Middlebury.

We explored four dark caves with a very unpredictable flashlight and the cliffs proved to be quite challenging for rock climbing.

This coming Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 13 and 14, a joint trip is being planned with the Middlebury Outing Club to hike in the Adirondacks. We plan to camp overnight near Marcy Dam. If you're interested in going, contact Chris Rosencrantz, Ext. 723.

On Thursday, Nov. 18, in Southwick at 7:00, the Outing Club will present the French Alpine Ski Team in sound and technicolor "Ski Total." Admission is free and open to the public.

Enrollment Hits All Time High

By Marion Robinson

Enrollment at the University for the fall semester is the highest in the University's history. It is the 12th straight year in which enrollment has established a new high here: 4463, or 300 more students than last year. Of the 4464 total, 2610 are residents of Vermont and 1853 are students from other states and foreign countries. Of the total, 1165 are freshmen, 994 are sophomores, 829 are juniors, and 794 are seniors.

This year, admissions saw the largest number of residents ever to enroll as freshmen at the oldest Vermont institution of higher learning. 10.5% of high school seniors, Class of 1965, are here now. The total freshman class is 68% in-state and 32% out-of-state. In past years, the college maintained a 50-50 ratio; but, recently, there has been a marked increase in resident enrollment. In 1964, 60% were in-state; now in 1965, the number has increased by 13 1/4% to 68%. The reason for this seems to be that more Vermont students are "ready" and going to college. Moreover, the college is going to continue accepting qualified Vermonters on a selective basis and out-of-state students on a competitive basis.

The proportion of all students is 58% in-state and 42% out-of-state. The 1964 College Blue Book states that the University of Vermont accepts 50% of all applicants. Also, 46% of the freshmen were graduated in the top one-fifth of their high school class, and 71% in the top two-fifths of their class. The average SAT score for the incoming freshmen was 509 verbal and 542 math (1964).

President Shannon McCune would like to see the freshman class stabilize at 65% and 35%. The college, a state university since 1955, has to accept qualified Vermonters, but out-of-state students must remain in number because they 1) aid the education of the Vermonters, and 2) pay for a large portion of University expenses (if the number of out-of-state students are decreased, taxes have to subsidize the loss).

To express the possible situation, let us assume that 900 Vermont students are accepted for 1966. The maximum class size is set for 1200. By simple subtraction, one can see that only 300 out-of-state students can be accepted and provided for. What is the trend going to be in the future? This situation may create a problem. What is the problem and why must it exist?

On a nation-wide basis, educators expect enrollment to double between 1960 and 1970. 1964 and 1965 seem to be the biggest years. In 1966, the national enrollment will decrease, but Vermont's enrollment will increase. The freshmen of 1966 will be 68% to 70% Vermonters. In figures, this means if the class size is 1200, approximately 840 will be from Vermont and 360 will be from other states. This may not be the permanent situation; if UVM expands, the class size can enlarge. The problem, therefore, is not only in administration policies, but also in the amount of space for classrooms and living quarters. This school needs space. At least until the University constructs more classrooms and dorms, it will by tradition, accept "qualified Vermonters" first, alumni children and then other New Englanders second, and, if necessary severely limit the other non-residents.

One dean here stated the problem by saying that the physical plant is expanding, but, as it grows, more professors are hired — only to be "shoved into 2 by 4 cubicles" which represent offices. When a building goes up, the faculty gets first bid for the space as offices. For better comprehension, the dean suggested a walk through Hills counting the number of classrooms, then the number of faculty offices. Here in lies the core of the problem — lack of classroom space.

UVM's philosophy is that if a college wants to reach a certain goal, namely education for all qualified and interested adults, it must work by steps, gaining and losing a little in different directions each time, yet hoping it has succeeded in accomplishing something toward the set goal. A college exists in the center of a vicious cycle; as it finds more students qualified, it tries to admit more; as a result, still more space is needed. Before the national trend climbs again, the college hopes to have proportionately more classroom area in order to maintain a 60-40 ratio.

EDITORIAL...

In the light of recent developments here at UVM and on campuses throughout the country the argument for student evaluation of instructional competence appears to be a formidable one. The argument, as we see it, and its relevance to the University of Vermont is as follows:

In denying the existence of a "publish or perish" crisis at UVM, teaching was cited as one of three primary criteria by which faculty are evaluated in their consideration for permanent appointments i.e., tenure. This is a very consoling theory and represents the sort of thinking which should guide this university. But the proof of theories is in their practice. We must now ask, "What effort, if any, is made by departments to evaluate the teaching of their members? How many times a semester do department chairmen or other "members in good standing" sit in on the lectures of their instructors? Once? Twice? Five times? Of course this varies widely from one department to another. But an instructor's students sit in on all of his classes (theoretically) and, at the risk of sounding repetitious to those who read last week's editorial, it is the students who are affected most by the quality of instruction and who should, therefore, have something to say about it. Student judgments may lack some of the critical fine points which trained, professional educators incorporate into their criteria. But the point is that students know what they like. They know when they are being stimulated (intellectually) and when they are bored, when their instructor is prepared to teach and when he is not, and when they are being confronted with a man who enjoys teaching as opposed to one who would obviously prefer to be in the library or the laboratory. In short, the students are not complete fools.

For these reasons we feel very strongly that a system of student evaluation of their teachers should be instituted at the University of Vermont. Such a system will serve a twofold purpose. First, it will provide instructors with a picture of themselves which will prove invaluable as a guide to self-improvement if they are wise enough to use it as such. Second, this system will give the student body a voice, though by no means a decisive voice, in tenure appointments and promotions.

Perhaps it would be helpful to mention briefly what has been done at certain other schools. According to the October 25 issue of Newsweek, such schools as Antioch, Bennington and Reed already have student evaluations of teaching on an official basis. In Oregon, teachers in state universities compete for $250,000 in bonuses each year based on their ratings with their students. Yale is on the verge of implementing a system whereby honor and graduate students will offer a critique of their professors upon graduation.

What about the University of Vermont? A Student Association committee is already in the process of formulating some comparable system of student evaluation for UVM. In the not too distant future they plan a trip to McGill for the purpose of observing the system already in operation there. We of the CYNIC have our own suggestion which should largely diminish the danger involved in placing the power of evaluation in the hands of all students, including the irresponsible. It is just this: Allow the top half of all majors to evaluate the members of the department in which they are majoring. Most departments at UVM are not very large and as a result students are generally able to acquaint themselves with the men involved in their field of concentration. This provides them with a more valid standard for comparison than if they were to judge isolated teachers and courses which they had had two or three years in the past. Since all students at UVM major in one department or another, this sort of evaluation will ultimately cover all faculty members in the school.

This is, of course, merely the framework of a potential system and is in need of much refinement. But whether accepted or rejected, one thing is certain: the students must be given a voice in tenure appointments and the promotions of men who already have tenure. Such an official recourse will eliminate the unfortunate necessity for such protests as Dr. Murbe's petition.

President Shows Appreciation

To the Editor:

May I extend, through the editorial columns of the CYNIC, a word of appreciation to students, faculty and staff for the efficient and good natured way in which they responded to the power blackout Tuesday evening.

Many staff members stayed overtime or returned to work to help, and many students and faculty volunteered time and energy toward solving or smoothing the many and varied problems which result when a modern University is, in company with its friends and neighbors, cast into unexpected darkness.

To all who helped meet the crisis so amiably, thank you.

Sincerely,
Shannon McCune
President

March Scored

To the Editor:

The last issue of the CYNIC quoted the organizers of last Friday's demonstration in support of U.S. policy in Viet Nam as being "a non-violent display of the responsible attitude of young American adults." Unfortunately the demonstration was neither adult nor responsible.

An uninformed observer, hearing the oncoming marchers yelling "Fight, fight, fight!", might well have mistaken the demonstration for a high school football rally. After reading such banners as "Yes, Christ would carry a draft card" the observer might seriously ask if the students were supporting our present policy in Viet Nam (and did they know why) or were they simply protesting objections to our policy in Viet Nam.

It is very easy to try to yell down opposition, as the strident atmosphere of this demonstration seemed to be doing. It is less easy to take the responsible position of trying to reason with and convince the opposition that your viewpoint is correct. The latter requires that you know more than superficially what your viewpoint is, what its results may be, and what the arguments for and against holding this viewpoint are.

M.D. LaPrade, Grad.

To the Editor:

It seems every year at the University of Vermont the most avid football fans are the newcomers to the school -- the Freshmen who are so naive as to cheer for their school at a football game. Is this so because upperclassmen are too mature and sophisticated to make noise at a football game? Several upperclassmen have mentioned to me that every time they get up and cheer, fellow students look at him as if to say, "What got into him?" He has no alternative but to guiltily try to smother his lonesome echo among the "quiet din" of the stands, sit down and be sure not to meet anybody's eye. Could it be that upperclassmen bring dates to the games and are so suave and cool that they don't want to appear out of the ordinary to their dates?

This seems to be a problem that few people recognize at this University. Among the few are a small group of Freshmen who bear the symbol of their dormitory. These freshmen show something that a majority of this school doesn't show -- this some-

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director of UVM Placement Service

"Schools Turning To Women for Part-Time Work" by Leonard Buder (Reprinted from the New York Times, November 7, 1965 E 11).

Throughout the nation there are some 3.5 million women college graduates who comprise, in the opinion of many manpower experts, the largest untapped reservoir of able and mature professional personnel.

Many of these women are busily engaged in raising children and have only limited time available for non-family work. Others, mainly those beyond the age of 35, have increasing time -- as well as interest -- for new activities as the demands of home life diminish and change. The field of education, with its persistent teacher shortages, would appear to be a natural area for the employment of housewives as part-time teachers. But this requires a radical change in thinking by many public school administrators and local school boards. Housewives are frequently called upon to serve as teacher aids but suggestions that they be used as teachers on a part-time basis -- and only when they can meet the regular qualifications -- often run into a wall of unfounded prejudices and professional traditionalism.

Last week a report was made available showing that despite continued widespread reluctance to employ part-time teachers, an increasing number of school districts were breaking with tradition with happy results. Some 42 per cent of the 714 school systems surveyed employed women as part-time teachers and many others said they intended to do so. One Maryland superintendent noted enthusiastically: "The use of part-time teachers, especially women, may very well provide a supply of superior people for classrooms." And a Minnesota administrator added, "This may be the help we need." The study was made by a high-level nationwide organization called Catalyst, which was set up in 1962 to help utilize "the unused capacities of intelligent women who want to combine family and work." The chairman of the board of Catalyst is Dr. Thomas C. Mendenhall, president of Smith College and the organization's headquarters is at 10 East End Avenue in New York City. The study was supported by the U.S. Office of Education.

Although a major reason advanced for the employment of housewives by the schools is the teacher shortage, an important finding of the study was that "part-time teachers are more often employed in communities of high socio-economic status where there are fewer teacher shortages" than in the less-affluent areas. This indicates that the college-educated housewives, with their variety of special skills, are being used to improve the quality of the school program and not merely to meet emergency staffing needs.

A Texas educator reported, "We use part-time teachers primarily for the purpose of teaching in subject areas where we do not have a load for a full-time teacher." A New York superintendent noted, by way of illustration, that his school employed a part-time instructor to teach three classes of Russian. The employment of part-time teachers thus makes it possible for many schools to offer specialized courses that would otherwise be economically unfeasible.

Among the most common objection to employment of part-time teachers were that they cause scheduling problems (the view that it is twice as difficult to work out a schedule for two half-time teachers than it is for one full-time instructor) and that they have a higher rate of absenteeism, weaken professional organization and stimulate requests for jobs from unqualified persons. However, the study found that these difficulties were mentioned frequently by superintendents who did not employ part-time teachers and only rarely by those who did.

"It is evident, therefore," the report observed, "that many of the difficulties thought to accompany the use of women part-time teachers may be erroneously assumed by those superintendents who have not employed them, for most of the 'difficulties' are considered insignificant by those superintendents experienced in employing part-time teachers." Mrs. Felice N. Schartz, president of Catalyst, said that a newspaper report on the possibility of part-time teaching, as suggested by the organization, resulted in over 3,000 letters. This, she said, made it evident that the interest in such employment is stifled only by the difficulty of breaking the administrative barrier. Catalyst plans to make available condensed versions of the study, for 35 cents a copy, both to school administrators and college-educated women, who believe themselves qualified for part-time teaching.

Christ would carry a draft card.

Of course. No doubt he would also carry a driver's license, wear crew-neck sweaters, walk fo' de Kake, listen to Lifeline and the Stones, drive a BSA, and drink with the fellows at the Castle.

He was, after all, such an average sort of guy. Which is why they crucified him; he was a moderate. The Romans were forever hanging up solid citizens. Good for the economy.

Well, it that's silly, what did you bring him into it in the first place for? If you're going to put him into your little dare-we-dodge-the-draft controversy, you ought to integrate him into the rest of your games as well. Try it. See if he'll fit. After all, if he's your hero when he's handy; if he's the join-the-navy-see-the-world sort you say he is, he'll fit just fine.

Oh, bring him right on in: the carpenter's boy, smiling, a member of the Class of '69. There are enough folks here who believe he hasn't come yet; it shouldn't be hard. He'd find all sorts of ethnic solidarity at UVM, anyhow.

Look, he's running for Homecoming King; see him there, lovely on the football field, beaming at the Queen? What crown of thorns? He looks ever so much better in the Homecoming crown.

Put him on the CYNIC staff. Make him Scope director -- (what's Scope? You've never heard of it? We didn't think so.)

Could we find him a fraternity? Some of the brothers might not want to pledge him if he keeps up those little jaunts to the desert to starve. But then once he showed up at a house party with Magdalene, he'd be in solid.

He wouldn't really be a big man on campus if he kept treating the ugly, sick, and crippled like humans. But then he always worried so about the opinions of others; no doubt we could take him out of it.

He'd be glad to be drafted, too, if only it meant he'd have a chance to get some VC's. (Who said "Love thy enemy?" We don't know. Do you?)

Now, we don't mean to suggest there's anything wrong with your way of life; with his either. We just wonder what on earth you're using him as your hero for. Why don't you find a god you'd at least speak to if he were here? Maybe Bacchus would carry a draft card. Though he never really wore any clothes, in whose pockets to put the thing. But at least if he went drinking with you, you wouldn't have to apologize for him.

Because if Christ were here, he really wouldn't fit, would he? Come to think of it, maybe he is here.

Lots of oddballs around, aren't there?

thing is PRIDE. I think these freshmen have a reason to be proud; they have something to be proud of -- their spirit. They initiate this spirit in ways most people don't give second thought to; they put a little extra effort into expressing themselves, ways in which those of you who have attended home games have seen.

I thought in the beginning of the year that the spirit shown by the freshmen would become contagious -- it has not. However, the fact that the freshmen are situated on the opposite side of the field is held partly responsible. Some people feel that cheering doesn't make any difference to the team. Have you ever told a joke and had nobody laugh, or given a speech and had nobody applaud? It is the same with a football team, or any other team.

Hopefully, the Freshmen will not be taught the ropes by their superiors who in turn have learned from those before them, and to continue their enthusiasm into the basketball and hockey season, and maybe somewhere along the line, Freshmen, it will catch on.

Respectfully submitted,
Leo Pfeiffer

Dear All,

Our last football game ended in victory for UVM. Now our team can settle down to their studies and rushing smokers. Girl's "formal" rushing has already ended for this semester.

Last week's Halloween spirit filled the air bringing about many social gatherings. The coming of "The Great Pumpkin" was celebrated when Kappa Alpha Theta and Alpha Gamma Rho got together for a Halloween Costume Party. Lambda Iota fraternity had an exchange Halloween Party with Gamma Phi Beta. All the sisters of Delta Delta Delta enjoyed their "Apple Polishing Party" on Oct. 27.

Kappa Alpha Theta sorority held their annual "Parent's Weekend" and entertained their parents with a brunch before the game, coffee and skits after the game, and a banquet that evening at the new Holiday Inn.

Theta had pleasure entertaining the girls of Tri-Delt sorority for dinner on Oct. 28.

All the Tau Epsilon Pi's send best wishes to Arnold Shimmelman, '67 on his pinning to Joann Goldenthal, '68 of Chandler College for Women.

Lots of luck to Ray Benedict, '67 of Lambda Iota on his pinning to Fayre Curtis, '67.

Heartiest congratulations to Alpha Gamma Rho on Howard Wilcox's, '66, engagement to Sandra Hill, '66, of Champlain College and on Armine Wodehouse's, '66, engagement to Virginia Potts of Park Ridge, New Jersey. Alpha Gamma Rho also congratulates Theodore Manning '66 on his marriage to Jane Miller of Union, N.J.

Alpha Tau Omega is proud of their new brothers: Thomas McCormick, '66; Larry Austin, '67; and Reginald Lavole, '68.

Best of luck to Tri-Delt on their new sister Didi Hall, '67.

Alpha Gamma Rho's new pledges include: Richard Pratt, '68; Mark Manning, '68; and Scott Leake, '67.

VERMONTERS JOIN PEACE CORPS

By Judy Triplett

Two UVM graduates, Class of '65, have begun volunteer work assignments abroad.

Phi Beta Kappa Wendy Webster, of Montpelier, received training at Southern Illinois University, prior to a September 25 departure for Senegal, in western Africa. Her studies included French (her college major) and Wolof, the languages of Senegal, and studies in the history, customs and culture of the country. Miss Webster joined the 31 volunteers already there who are engaged in social work, in teaching and physical education.

Allain Bouchard, a chemistry major from Northfield, Vt., is described by Mr. Douglas Hanau, of the Placement Office as "one of our finest representatives to the Peace Corps." Bouchard completed his training at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., where he studied Spanish, Latin American area studies, United States history, and world affairs, in preparation for a teaching assignment in Columbia.

These volunteers join the 10,000 now working in 46 nations of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Despite these numbers, many more volunteers are needed. Persons interested in Peace Corps assignments should complete and submit a Peace Corps application as soon as possible, and take a Peace Corps placement test. Tests will be given on November 13 at 9 A.M. and on December 6 at 3 P.M., in room 616 of the new Post Office Building downtown.

Major Departures In Education - At UVM?

By Marvin Bellovin

President Shannon McCune, while provost at the University of Massachusetts, served as chairman of the committee which developed the basic plan for New College, a new liberal arts institution of higher education being developed under the sponsorship of University of Mass., Amherst,

Smith, and Mount Holyoke. The plans for New College include several major departures from the traditional pattern for a liberal arts college. As a result of Pres. McCune's interest in planning new colleges he, along with other prominent educators, was called upon to participate in a planning conference for a new state university to be established in Orlando, Florida. The conference took place in Orlando, and there Pres. McCune discussed some of his ideas concerning academic programs, administration, and a physical plant for the institution, newest in Florida's growing state university system.

Pres. McCune feels that the example of Florida's great expansion in higher education brings out the whole question of the tremendous pressures of increased enrollments which colleges and universities throughout the country face. Pres. McCune, in an article entitled "The College of the 60's: The Imperative of Major Departures" which appeared in Current Issues in Higher Education, 1960 said "The college which does not meet the challenge of numbers or which cloaks behind the pious premise that it will do the quality job and leave the quantity job to another school, will not easily survive." He feels that one way of perhaps solving the quantity problem is to "start anew." The difficulty of starting a new college are numerous and thus other schools are instead building many small campuses within the realm of the larger university. By building many small campuses, each a community within itself, many universities are able to meet the expansion of students without sacrificing quality for quantity. Pres. McCune feels that Vermont, due to its small population with, also, relatively small increases, can prepare for the increased demands in higher education and plan itself accordingly. Although Vermont does not face as grave a problem as most states in increased enrollment in higher education, it is facing a relatively large increase as shown by graphs and charts. One showed that the number of high school graduates, from 1945-64 has almost doubled. Pres. McCune is confident that the University of Vermont is meeting these pressures through its huge current and planned program of physical expansion. A model which can be seen in Waterman's Memorial Lounge, of the university as it will look by 1970 will eliminate doubts as to UVM's ability and desire to meet increasing enrollment with the necessary and adequate facilities.

Pres. McCune did not elaborate on any of his proposals for major departures from tradition in higher education but, in his article "The College of the 60's," he stated the following ideas: first, independent study, starting in the first semester of the freshman year; second, avoidance of attempts at total coverage, "to realize that we cannot encompass in a college curriculum all knowledge"; third, "abolishing of general survey courses"; fourth, dropping of basic skill courses provided there has been close integration between the high schools and colleges, so that the high school will prepare the student with these basic skills such as "fundamentals of mathematics, laboratory techniques in science, a foreign language and the competent writing and speaking of English"; fifth, breakdown of college classes, with all students taking certain courses together. Lower on the list for major changes Pres. McCune had "changes in our calendars and schedules, our teaching techniques and our administrative practices on. Finally he proposed that more responsibility be placed with faculties and administrators in controlling the destinies of their institutions. However, he realistically is not extremely optimistic about the chance of innovating his "major departures" in public institutions, which are under pressure to conform to existing patterns. But as Pres. McCune knows, UVM in the last few years has indeed expanded into new fields which were previously unknown here. Many of the recent changes are quite trivial compared to the listed proposals; but, they could be a start. Pres. McCune faces social, political and administrative pressures which are usually on the side of the status quo.

BILLINGS IN REVIEW

The stately lump of architecture we now call Billings Center has stood sentinel over the educational interests of UVM students for 80 years. Since 1885 when the building was constructed, students have been musing over books in the majestic aspe, chatting in front of the awe-inspiring hearth, or contemplating the imposing arch-entrance.

Billings stands today a noteworthy testament to the talents of Henry Hobson Richardson the brilliant American architect, and to the generosity and loyalty of Fredrick Billings, Class of 1844, who became president of the Northern Pacific Railroad and who financed the construction of the building. In its early years it was venerated as the finest university library building in New England, and for over half a century it remained the educational heart of the university.

By the early 1950's, however, enrollment had grown and an 80 year accumulation of books had swollen the library beyond its capacity. The need for a new library or an addition to Billings became imperative. Plans for an addition were drawn up; but by 1955 a simultaneous need for a center of student activities arose.

ALUMNI IN GRAD SCHOOL

Of the approximately 600 UVM students graduating in 1965, 324 have returned their graduate information cards to the Alumni Office. Of these graduates, 94 have reported that they are continuing their education in graduate colleges throughout the nation and overseas. The largest number of reporting graduates was 15 for the UVM Graduate College and six for the College of Medicine.

Eight graduates have reported that they are attending law schools -- two at Brooklyn Law School, one each at the University of Chicago, Maine, Cornell, American University, New York Law School, and St. John's Law School.

There are reports from five graduates attending Columbia University and three attending Boston University.

There have been reports from two graduates attending each of the following schools: Simmons, University of Loussanne, Switzerland (one a medical student), Syracuse, Pennsylvania State, Syracuse, Pennsylvania State, University of Maryland (one in dental surgery), University of Pennsylvania, Georgetown University, and the University of Illinois.

One graduate student each has reported from the University of Missouri, Yale, University of Massachusetts, Indiana University, University of Loyola Dental School, Johns Hopkins, Northeastern, University of New Hampshire, New Jersey College of Dentistry, Minnesota Graduate School, Bucknell, Lehigh University, Berkeley Divinity School, George Washington Graduate School of Business, State University of New York, San Francisco Art Institute, Fordham University, Tufts (dental), University of Connecticut, Katharine Gibbs, and Howard University.

Ultimately, it was decided to construct a new library and to renovate the present structure for students' use. This project was completed in 1961.

Within the sumptuous walls of today's Billings are focused new and traditional pursuits of today's student. Gone are the bulging stacks, and in their stead are students engaged in quiet conversation. Education at Billings has changed from one of pure scholarship to one of active sociability.

MAJOR IN AREA STUDIES

The University of Vermont established in Feb., 1962, an unusual program that gives the undergraduate student a rare opportunity for interdisciplinary study. This plan, the Area Studies Program, provides for concentration within a certain geographic area rather than in a specific department. The student approaches the area of his choice from the various disciplines: history, geography, sociology, language, economics and political science. This course of study is intended to provide a truly liberal education and also furnishes preparation for careers in such fields as government service, international aspects of business, teaching and sociological research.

Under this program there are three areas of possible concentration: Russia and East Europe; Latin America; Canada and, new this year, East Asia. Any student in the College of Arts and Science may major in Area Studies just as he would major in some particular department. Through the wide range of courses offered the student learns not only historic and geographic facts but also becomes more familiar with the people themselves, gaining a better understanding of how they think and why they act as they do.

The Area Studies Program has a wide basis in the humanities and social sciences. There are courses offered in ten different departments and all colleges of the university. Forty faculty members representing all participating departments serve on the Area Studies Committee, which coordinates teaching, research and academic planning as it relates to Area Studies. Next semester the Committee will sponsor a series of lectures on Comparative Education with a speaker from each of the areas of possible concentration.

CONCENTRATION IN RELIGION

Since September, 1963, there has been offered a concentration in religion which meets the requirements for a B.A. degree in the College of Arts and Sciences. The field of religion at UVM is in conjuncture with that of philosophy, and it operates under the direction of Mr. Hall.

During the past two decades, well-known universities and colleges have gone from having no department in religion to developing outstanding religion departments. Our own university is in the process of building up its department. UVM has two instructors now, with a third on Sabbatical in Japan. Prof. Sadler will return next fall to offer an area studies program on Japan.

The courses needed by a concentration in Religion are the following, successfully completed: Religion 1 & 2, 101, 112, 122, 201, and two additional courses at the 200 level, plus an advanced related course chosen with the advisor to fit that student's particular needs.

Religion as a major is not the Sunday School religion learned at elementary school age. College-level religion is more sophisticated and its approach is different. Theology and religion are not the same thing. The former studies from a subjective commitment to one doctrine or dogma, such as Christianity or Judaism, while the student of religion objectively studies a world of religions. Religion is more than a belief; it is a culture, a way of life. As such, it needs to be investigated.

The future of the religion major is wide and diversified. There are openings in sociological fields. The new field of comparative religions is opening up fast. At the present, some graduates are studying in India and Japan on fellowships made possible through their interest.

Our religion department is small, but it is growing rapidly, as is the whole field.

DEGREE IN ART PLANNED

At present UVM does not offer degrees in the Art but plans to do so are afoot. Richard Janson, Associate Professor of Art, said that enthusiasm among faculty and students is more than enough to warrant the expansion.

The Art dept. would like to section introductory and advanced courses as it does not have a properly sectioned system at present. The introductory class, which would usually be a prerequisite for advanced work, will include visual design and art history. This introduction will explain what art is and what art's relation is to human experience.

The new art majors will learn about eastern and primitive arts as well as western art. The present art courses will be intensified but at the same time its scope will be greatly broadened.

One of the problems in building this course to degree standard is obtaining more instructors to handle the increase in work. The art department will also need more space and equipment for graphic and ceramic arts. The kiln for ceramics should be ready by next year and the possibility of building an art center is being debated by the powers that be.

Contrary to popular rumor around campus, classes will be held all day Wed., Nov. 24th.

Throughout time, the mating game has been a dominant force in society, an activity in which all participate at one time or another. Man, because of his superior role in the sociological structure, has controlled virtually all aspects of the game. Indeed, until the 20th century, woman was thought of as merely a tool for future generations. Periodically, however, woman asserted her long-overdue authority on man by scheming, calculating, and eventually trampling him until, alas, poor man was vanquished.

Today, a husky woman is often referred to as an Amazon, the reference being quite erroneous since in Greek art, an Amazon was represented as being beautiful. The women warriors in the Greek myth lived in tribes consisting only of women. They were effective warriors, making slaves of the men they captured. When the need to procreate was strong, the Amazons would venture to a coed tribe, mate, and return to their original band, bringing with them only the female offspring. Other instances of female tribal warriors capturing males exist in the historical information of the world.

Another instance where woman has triumphs over man is Leap Year. Every fourth year has an extra day, on which it is customary for woman to take the initiative and propose marriage to the man of her choice. This custom was enacted into law in Scotland in 1288, stating that any man not complying with the rules would have to pay a stiff fine, unless he could prove he was already engaged to another female. Later in the century, France, Genoa, and Florence followed suit with similar laws. A major victory for the females!

Since then, society has seen the development of matriarchies, a family in which a woman is the ruling figure, and polyandrous organizations, in which a woman possesses many husbands. The latter are found primarily in uncivilized regimes.

The 20th century has to date produced a monumental event in the mating game - namely, Sadie Hawkins Day. Al Capp's famous comic strip, Lil' Abner, bore the day when the female population of Dog Patch, U.S.A. united and captured the men of their choice. UVM, in fact, has done the same by establishing M.E.R.P. week. So ladies - Unite!

New Concept In Drama

Upshot is a concept in drama and theater production spearheaded by David Storti, Class of '66 (an English major) and subsidized by the University Players, of which Mr. Storti is a past president and a member of the current executive council. Its function is to produce what cannot be produced in the regular theater, one act and short original plays, and programs with experimental techniques. Performances are once a month, usually the second week.

Upshot is to bring out original talent on the campus. It is always interested in new ideas for the theater. Any valid play will be produced. One thought for the future mentioned by Mr. Storti was a production with no actors, just lights.

The productions, which use no costumes or make-up, are essentially readings. Sometimes lights and blocking are used, but they are not necessary. After each play there is a discussion session in which the audience may ask questions.

These plays are not a show-place for acting ability, and there are no auditions for them unless more people apply than there are parts. There are openings for anyone interested either in acting or in technical work such as lighting, sound, or stage managing. Mr. Storti, who is UVM's only member of National Collegiate Players, dramatists honorary, emphasized that both student and faculty participation are welcomed and both as spectators and as contributors.

One selling point for Upshot is that production takes less time than with regular plays. There are only two or three rehearsals, all read, and the arrangements can be completed in two weeks, whereas a full production takes at least six weeks, five nights a week.

The first play produced by Upshot was "Uhiroi" by Larry. In the works now is an original play by Peter Whalen. Tryouts and rehearsals were begun Nov. 6th. The play will be presented Sunday, Nov. 14, at 2 p.m. at the Arena Theater. The plays are given in the theater or the classroom at the end of the downstairs hall in Fleming Museum depending on which environment better fits the play.

Chaplain Offers New Ideas

By Dick Matheson

A hatful of ambitious ideas has come to UVM with the Reverend John D. Perry, Jr., who was formally welcomed as the new Protestant chaplain on campus at an Installation Ceremony in Billings Center November 3.

Mr. Perry was born in New Britain, Conn., and he says that until recently he had only been in Vermont once, when he stayed overnight with his parents in a Long Trail shelter at the age of ten. He earned his B.A. in philosophy in '62 at the University of Connecticut and his Bachelor of Divinity in '63 at the Yale Divinity School.

Last summer he was the director of a coffee-house study project for the National Council of Churches, and he is now interested in starting a coffee-house in the lounge of St. Anselm's Chapel. A coffee-house, he points out, would provide students and faculty with a place to talk, a place to make friends, and an opportunity for self-opportunity for self-expression, whether it be through reading poetry, singing, or conversing.

Mr. Perry finds that at UVM there are "a lot of people, especially among students, who are already eager to serve their fellow man" through public service, civic-mindedness, and charity. Taking advantage of this spirit, Mr. Perry is involved with starting a new big-brother program, which will be an educational experience to the college students (seminars are planned) as well as an advantage to the children involved.

On the other side of the coin, the young chaplain considers students "less interested, less excited in doing things in and for the university" and he says that this is "one of the major problems I'm going to be working on."

Mr. Perry's position on campus is a coveted one, judging by the fact that he was chosen from some thirty applicants. He apparently intends to make the most of it.

Perception

By David St. John

"We mustn't set a precedent," is what every administrator says when it would mean varying a rule in the slightest way to help you out. "You've got a good case and you can take it to George but I doubt if he can help you."

There was a recent case on campus in which a regularly enrolled student had founded one of our student organizations and was working to keep that organization's programs going. However, due to a financial emergency he was forced to work and carry a very light load of credits. He was still willing to serve the organization he had started as its president but was forbidden to do so, and he also had to give up other posts to which he had also been elected.

The reason given to the student was that "Student groups are for the students and must be run by them." "Even though you drew up the programs and the constitution, guided the organization to recognition, approached its faculty advisor, spent some of your own money, worked to get an office in Billings, flew to Boston for additional information, interviewed the President of this University...etc., etc., you are not a full time student and therefore can not serve as its president until such time as the rules are modified around here." "This may take several months, but because I feel you have a good case you may stand a chance."

Rules we need, but when they are IRON they can cause the APATHY so often spoken of at this school.

In another case, a student who was working with one of the student organizations on campus was trying desperately to find a meeting place. Only the closets were available to this group of about thirty members. Memorial Lounge in Waterman Building was not going to be used for anything but was denied this group because "It wouldn't be well to set a precedent." The assumption was that if one group used the Lounge in this case of emergency, all groups of students would refer back to this example of the use of the staff's private meeting place, and then faculty and staff might have to wait in line to use it in the future.

It came out in the conversation between student and administrator that students in the past had been allowed to study in Memorial Lounge. Now, however, students are permitted in the Lounge only if there are several faculty members there to hold their naughty little hands.

It happens that the students' meeting was to take place this past Tuesday, Nov. 9th, in the evening. As you probably have guessed their retaliation was a "darkness dance" held behind Waterman shortly before what newsmen are referring to as a "tremendous power failure."

Placement Service Relocated

By Lou Blumenfeld

Recently relocated in new facilities in lower Waterman, opposite the center staircase, is the UVM Placement Service. The Placement Service, in the words of Mr. D. Hanau, Placement Director, "is a service, to faculty, to staff, to students, and to employers." In its job program, the Service brings to UVM numerous employers and, in various ways, helps students prepare for obtaining jobs.

Contrary to some popular belief, the purpose of the Placement Service is not to find work for graduating students. Rather it tries to "create a climate in which the senior, hopefully, can function in obtaining...full time employment." Mr. Hanau further informs us that the Service's aim is approached by: conferences on such things as what to expect in an interview, and on campus recruitment program is particularly interesting. This year during November and December over 15 technical employers will visit UVM. From February through early April non-technical employers will take their turn, and throughout the school year representatives from about 35 school systems will be here. In addition to these representatives, the Placement Service maintains files on job openings across the country, covering a variety of jobs and job types.

The Placement Service stands ready to meet any student, as Mr. Hanau puts it, "regardless of year level, background, or major." In fact, the largest complaint of the Service is that all too many students wait until their senior year to seek the assistance of the Placement Service. Again in Mr. Hanau's words,

"the freshman, sophomore, and junior ask, why worry now? The senior comes, in many cases, for only one reason: he has suddenly awakened and found that, come May 23, to use colloquial terms, he ain't gonna be here any more." Thus the senior frantically seeks the aid of the Placement Service.

Unfortunately perhaps, the world is changing rapidly. Fifty percent of the jobs in 1965 were not even heard of in 1950. College graduates have become more and more numerous and employers, as a result, have become proportionally more and more selective. Combining the above two statistics it can be seen that only a college graduate oriented toward a specific job can be in a relatively secure position. Here is a large problem, all too few graduating seniors even know what various jobs involve, even if they have prepared for them. The result is that about eighty percent of all men getting jobs after college will, within three years, change them.

The answer to this problem, according to our Placement Service, is quite simple, but it does require some initiative on the part of the students. The answer is adequate training. Mr. Hanau's dream situation is one in which freshmen, sophomores, and juniors begin to look ahead and start seeking advice. He feels that, through proper planning, the strain of finding a job during the senior year can be greatly eased.

Mr. Hanau stands ready to address any group or, as he aptly put it, "any gathering of one or more students" UVM alumni are equally welcome to participate under the growing Alumni Placement Service.

Some mention should be made of summer employment. The Placement Service's stand on this is that they will help find some summer employment if it is in semi-professional or career related categories.

The conclusion is to be your own, but at least make one. The Placement Service is there. It has its goal, but do you have yours? Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors, if you start now the Placement Service will be overjoyed. Seniors, you may feel a bit short changed, but the Placement Service will welcome you too. Remember, some change is better than none.

Ira Allen Founded Vt.

By Pete Hart

In 1772 a young man of 21, surveying the town of Mansfield in the Lake Champlain Valley, had occasion to camp on a site overlooking both the broad expanse of the lake and the Green Mountains. After viewing this sight the young man, initiated by the area's commercial possibilities, was determined to buy a parcel of this land. So began Ira Allen's affiliation with Vermont from which he can readily be called both "the Founder of Vermont" and "the Founder of the University of Vermont."

Allen was born May 1, 1751, in Cornwall, Conn. He became a land surveyor and was working professionally for the proprietors of Mansfield when he came to Vermont. Within the next 20 years Vermont became an independent state, largely through Allen's efforts. In these years he served as a leader in the first resistance to New York and New Hampshire's claims in Vermont; he was a lieutenant in the regiment of Green Mountain Boys who, along with his more famous brother Ethan, captured Fort Ticonderoga and Crown Point; he called the Dorset Convention of 1776 and participated in subsequent conventions which drafted Vermont's first constitution; and he was Secretary of the Council of Safety which ruled Vermont until the first elections could be held in 1778. It was under his guidance that Vermont flirted with the king to become a royal colony in 1781 to avoid being forced into union with New York. It was also he who participated in the admission of Vermont to the federal union ten years later.

Allen had two plans for developing the Champlain Valley foremost in his mind. One of which was the construction of a canal linking the lake with the St. Lawrence River. This repeatedly met stronger opposition, yet, it still is frequently discussed today.

CATS CLOSE OUT 6-2 SEASON WITH 7-0 WIN OVER MIDDLEBURY

This week we would like to salute the ten graduating seniors of our football team. The men who wore the green and gold uniforms for the last time are Captain Rusty Brink, Scott Fitz, John Sullivan, Harvey Bazarian, Terry Lynn, Bob Murray, Joe Albanese, Laurel Husband, Ed Kiniry and Mike Burke.

It seems that good fortune occurred a few years ago when two families decided to move from Wisconsin to New England. These families were the Brink's and the Fitz's. At UVM these two teamed up and served as a spearhead for the Catamounts bringing about 18 victories in 23 games. These two stars were just about "unknowns" when they arrived. However, these "unknowns" spirited UVM over an unprecedented three-year cycle to 6-2, 7-1 and presently 5-2 seasons.

Scott Fitz earned All State honors as a junior and senior at Stevens High in Claremont, N.H. He was the first basketball player in Claremont's history to surpass the 1000-point career total. In addition to this, he was a regular on the baseball team for three years.

Scott failed to impress any college with his football ability. He was a mere 150 pounds at the time. Fitz decided to take a year of post-graduate study at Kimball Union. It was here that Fitz met Jim Brennan who was "UVM bound" and at this time he too became interested in UVM. Last Saturday "NO 10" departed from the gridiron for the last time. He leaves with the current title of all-time total offense leader.

The man who played opposite Fitz when he attended New Hampton School is Rusty Brink. Rusty, believe it or not, was considered too thin for football. Thus, Lawrence (Mass.) Central Catholic, Boston College, Holy Cross, and Massachusetts gave Rusty thumbs down, when he expressed an interest in these respective schools.

Who knew that these colleges would soon regret their decision, when they learned the hard way that their loss was Vermont's gain. Rusty won, as a sophomore, a berth of the second-team All Yankee Conference. "He gathered honors last fall at a pace comparable to Sandy Koufax winning baseball games for the Dodgers." Rusty also won the honor of being named to All Conference, All State, All New England, and All East.

Rusty's also just about "all everything" on campus. He is President of his class two years in a row, Kake Walk King, Vice President of Kappa Sigma, President of the Varsity Club, and a platoon leader in advanced ROTC.

Murray, Sullivan and Husband are all tackles; Bazarian is a guard; Albanese a center; Burke and Kiniry are halfbacks, and Lynn a fullback.

Sully (Sullivan) has been referred to by head Coach Bob Clifford as, "the best blacking tackle in my four years here." The significance of this compliment can be seen by remembering that Sullivan was a guard until this fall. He made the transition to tackle with a "minimum of effort and a maximum of efficiency."

This year Burke has indeed come into his own as one of the UVM greats. He is presently one of UVM's top ground gainers. He did not achieve the proper recognition in the past because he was forced to run behind Kenny Burton and then Frank Foerster for his first two years.

We would like to thank these seniors for helping to lead UVM to another fine season and to one of the greatest three year's cycles in our history.

Skating Rink Opens

One phase of winter makes its official bow at the University of Vermont on Monday (Nov. 8) — ice.

The ice in the Gutterson Field House will have been completed and the winter schedule for the use of the rink will go into effect.

Faculty-staff-children will have the use of the rink from 7 to 8 p.m. on Monday evenings. Students-faculty-staff may use the rink at 8 p.m. on Mondays, at 7:30 p.m. on Fridays, 1 p.m. on Saturdays, and at 7:30 p.m. on Sundays.

Public skating sessions are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. on Wednesdays and Saturdays, and at 1 and 3:30 p.m. on Sundays.

Men's and women's physical education classes will use the rink on Tuesday and the University Skating School on Thursday

The University of Vermont football squad successfully closed out its 1965 campaign by wrapping up its third consecutive State Series crown with a 7-0 victory over Middlebury last Saturday. It marked the third straight year that Vermont has shut out a Middlebury team.

As the score indicates, however, the victory did not come easy for the Catamounts. The lone score of the game came in the opening quarter when senior halfback Mike Burke broke loose for a 42 yard touchdown jaunt. Burke closed out his football career at UVM with a marvelous performance as he gained 115 yards rushing in the game.

This rushing performance proved to be the difference in the game when the Rusty Brink-led Catamount defense held the Middlebury squad to but 40 yards on the ground. It was the game defensive effort put up by the underdog Panthers that kept the score close, though.

With the close of this season, the Catamounts end what has been the most successful football cycle in the school's history. In the past three years, UVM football teams have produced season's records of 6-2, 7-1 and 6-2 seasons, respectively. The seniors, who finished their careers in Saturday's game were lucky enough to take part in the complete cycle. They are Burke, Capt. Brink, John Sullivan, Harvey Bazarian, Terry Lynn, Bob Murray, Joe Albanese, Laurel Husband, Scott Fitz, and Ed Kiniry. All these men have made tremendous contributions during the past three seasons.

The loss of these boys should not be a total disaster, since there will still be a host of bright talent returning next year. A few of these boys are Dick Hebert, Bob Mitchell, Jeff Kuhman and Jack Schweberger from the offensive unit, and Bill Van Bennekum, Tuck Nelson, Colin Hurd, and Joe Soldano from the defensive unit. Soldano also completed a successful place-kicking season by making good on 19 out of 21 extra point attempts this year.

The School starts its third season with adult classes beginning on Nov. 18 and children's (under 14) classes on Nov. 20.

Additional information may be obtained by calling the athletic office, Ext. 574.

HEBERT YANKON STANDOUT

Amherst, Mass. - Nov. 8 - Vermont halfback Dick Hebert (St. Alban's, Vt.), Maine end Al Riley (Topshfield, Mass.) and Massachusetts quarterback Greg Landry (Nashua, N.H.) have been selected as the Yankee Conference offensive, defensive and sophomore standouts of last Saturday's games.

Hebert averaged eight yards per carry during Vermont's win over Middlebury and one of his six punt returns set up the only score of the afternoon. He also intercepted a pass to stop a Panther scoring threat.

Thanksgiving Recess Begins

By Judy Triplett

Upperclassmen, especially the out-of-staters, will have no difficulty in remembering the Thanksgiving "recess" of last year, which was so short as to be almost non-existent.

Fortunately, the administration became aware of the impracticality of so short a break, when a large percentage of students elected to go home for Thanksgiving in spite of the double cut warnings issued through the faculty by order of the administration.

It was disconcerting to staff and faculty members to observe the relatively few students who had managed to get home and back in 24 hours. Few of these students were enthusiastic or responsive in classes where as much as two-thirds of the class was absent. Faculty, as well as student morale, was understandably low, for the pressures of the short semester schedule could not be relieved in one free day. So instead of coming back refreshed on Friday, students either didn't come back or came back grudgingly, as did the faculty. When you come right down to it, no one felt much like plunging headlong into collegiate activity.

It's November again; it would be evident even without the calendar. The colorful autumn foliage has disappeared, and the dark trees stretch upward their knotted and grotesque limbs. Freezing blasts blow up from the lake, carrying with them the promise of snow.

And we're all getting restless. We're marking the days off on the calendar, becoming uneasy, finding that it's not long enough until finals.

The long Thanksgiving weekend will afford a much needed and anxiously awaited recess in the college routine.

Even a heavy work load, whether it be a term paper to write or hour exams to study for, cannot reduce by much the promise of having at least a little free time, with no curfews or eight o'clocks or quiet hours.

So go home and eat turkey and stay out until two and sleep until ten. Enjoy yourselves. Have a very happy Thanksgiving.

Moscow Orchestra To Appear

Moscow Philharmonic

By Judy Beeber

Michael Kennedy, famous critic of the English "Daily Telegraph and Morning Post," commenting on the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra said, "This is in true Moscow tradition, great virtuosity together with musical sensitivity and a stimulating spirit. The string section of the orchestra has unquestionably attained a high level in rendering colour and nuances." Monday, Nov. 29, at 8:30 p.m., the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Kiril Kondrashin, will make its appearance in Memorial Auditorium on the Red Lane Series. This is one of the biggest and most expensive attractions ever scheduled in the history of Lane Series. Appearing with the orchestra as a soloist will be David Oistrakh, described in the "New York Times" as "one of the half dozen or so authentically great" instrumentalists today; he is taking the place of his son Igor Oistrakh, who was first scheduled to appear. The present visit of the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra to the U.S. is its first, and follows the successes of two other soviet orchestras: the Moscow

State Symphony, presented by S. Hurok here in 1959-60 and the Leningrad Orchestra, which toured two seasons ago. The Moscow Philharmonic will play twelve concerts in New York and twelve outside of New York in cities including Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and others.

The Moscow Philharmonic was founded in 1951 by the conductor of the Bolshoi opera, Samuel Samosud. Under his supervision, the orchestra diverged in two directions at once: Soviet symphonic music and concert performance of operas.

In 1960, Kiril Kondrashin took over the reins of the orchestra. Kondrashin had sharpened his abilities as conductor of the Bolshoi Theater from 1943-56. Kondrashin toured Europe and the Northern hemisphere in 1949 as a symphonic conductor. He was first introduced to the U.S. in 1958 when he conducted for Van Cliburn after the tall Texan's winning of the Tchaikovsky competition. Under the leadership of this man, the Moscow Philharmonic has surged upward since its inception. It is becoming the focal point of Moscow's musical life. Its performances are prominent among the capital's cultural events; it gave the first performances there of Mahler's "3rd and 9th Symphonies," Shostakovich's "8th, 4th and 13th Symphonies," Stepan's "Razin's Execution," and Prokofiev's "Ivan the Terrible." The orchestra has also taken part in modern musical festivals which are frequently held in such cities of the U.S.S.R. as Gorki, Volgograd, Minsk, and Yerevan.

The orchestra collaborates with such renowned soloists as the Oistrakhs, Richter, Kogan and Rostropovich and plays with such visitors as Arthur Rubenstein, Isaac Stern, Glenn Gould, Byran Janis, Yehudi Menuhin and Van Cliburn.

In 1963, the Orchestra toured Yugoslavia, Hungary, England, and France, experiencing enormous success.

David Oistrakh is not an ordinary soloist—he is one of the world's most famous musicians. His tour in North America is being arranged by impresario S. Hurok under the Cultural Exchange Agreement between the U.S. State Department and the Soviet Ministry of Culture.

Colburn Recovering

Professor Francis Colburn with one of his paintings on exhibition at Fleming Museum.

Professor Francis Colburn, chairman of the Art Department, is "improving slowly" at his home. The professor's duties here were forcibly interrupted when he suffered a heart attack in the early part of this semester.

Mrs. Colburn told this writer that it is "assumed that he will return to the university next semester, but we are not certain."

Professor Colburn, a native Vermonter, graduated from Burlington High and from UVM in 1934. He did graduate work at the Art Students League in New York City. Professor Colburn has been teaching art at UVM since 1943. His students admire his talent and applaud his wit; and they learn as much to please him as to satisfy themselves.

Professor Colburn had had paintings shown at Chicago Art Institute; Corcoran Museum in Washington, D.C.; Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh; National Academy of Design in New York City; Whitney Museum in New York; Pasadena Art Institute; Herron Art Institute in Indianapolis; Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston, and in travelling shows through-out the country.

He has given one-man shows in New York, Boston, and at various colleges including Amherst, Williams, Bennington, Middlebury, Smith, and the University of Maine.

Prizes for painting were awarded him by the Palace of the Legion of Honors (1946), Institute of Contemporary Art (1949), and Fleming Museum (1950).

We of the CYNIC join with all who know Professor Colburn, in wishing for him a thorough recovery, and we hope that he will be with us again next semester.

How We Rush

Rushing is the life-blood of the fraternity and sorority systems. It is the way in which each individual house reproduces itself, and is thus the means by which both systems are perpetuated. Although the basic purpose is the same for both fraternity and sorority rushing, the rushing procedures for fraternities and sororities are quite different.

Fraternity rushing begins in September, when IFC representatives hold informal discussions with interested freshman men about rushing and fraternities in general. Saturday night of Homecoming weekend, parties at all the sixteen fraternity houses are open to freshmen. For the rest of the semester, the individual fraternities hold rushing smokers at their own discretion.

UVM's Pershing Rifles Company of the ROTC Brigade represented the university during Burlington's Veteran's Day Parade. Here, Cadet Peter McGregor leads the "P.R.s" past the Smith-Goldberg reserve center which is named for two UVM alumni who were lost in action in conflicts past. Military Ball Queen Joyce Heilthy and Pershing Rifle sponsor Carol Jenne also participated in the parade.

Recommendation Process Streamlined

Until last month, a pre-Medical or pre-Dental student could request initially only 10 recommendations from the Pre-Med/Pre-Dent Advisory Committee. After the student had been refused by five graduate schools, he could request an additional five recommendations. Often the student was refused by some medical or dental colleges too late to apply to others. This year the Committee, composed of Dean Norman London (Arts and Sciences) and Prof. Charles Bond (zoology) as co-chairmen, and Dean Roland Patzer, Prof. Donald Gregg (chemistry), Prof. Som Nath Ghei (psychology), and Prof. Milton Potash (zoology), has greatly streamlined the internal mechanisms.

According to Dean London, "The procedure for handling recommendations, mostly a clerical and secretarial one, has been revised so that all restrictions as to number of recommendations per student have been lifted. A student may now request any 'reasonable number' of recommendations, and they will be sent within five days of his initial request."

Two most prominent examples of how the internal procedures have been streamlined are: 1) the use of the Xerox reproducing machine to replace the individual typing of each recommendation, and 2) the use of opaque projectors at meetings to replace the circulating of printed records which must be read. These new procedures enabled the committee to finish its work on Nov. 9 this year, two weeks earlier than in previous years; next year the committee hopes to finish by Nov. 1.

The purpose of the Pre-Med/Pre-Dent Advisory Committee is to evaluate each senior candidate for medical or dental school in the fall. The recommendations sent are not favorable for every particular student, but are known by the medical schools and administrators of the Medical Colleges Association to be very honest. The University of Vermont's Pre-Med Committee's evaluations are highly rated because of their honesty, and a great deal of weight is placed upon them in the judging of candidates by medical schools. Medical and dental schools generally look at a candidate's overall average, math-science average, Medical (or Dental) College Aptitude Test, committee evaluation, interview, and extra-curricular activities, in nearly that order.

This year 47 students have requested recommendations from the Pre-Med/Pre-Dent Advisory Committee.

S. A. Sponsors Employment Interview Program

A program on The Employment Interview for Summer and Full-time Jobs, sponsored by the Student Association in conjunction with the Student Government bodies of Trinity College, St. Michael's College and Champlain College, will be held on Thursday evening, Dec. 2, at 8:15 p.m., in UVM's Ira Allen Chapel.

The free, public program, features two keynote speakers and a panel discussion moderated by Mr. Douglas Hanau, Director of UVM Placement.

Mr. Edward Powers of New England Telephone Company.

Speaking on the topic: "Preparing for and Taking the Screening Interview" is Mr. Edward Powers, General Employment Supervisor, New England Telephone Company. Mr. Powers graduated cum laude from Boston University in 1941 with a major in Business Administration. During W.W. II he was stationed in the Pacific theater, serving as a Major in the Corps of Engineers. Mr. Powers joined the Telephone Company in 1947, working in various assignments throughout the New England area, primarily in the Accounting Department. For the past few years assignments were in the areas of management development and management training. Presently he is active in the employment field - non-college and college graduate hiring. In his remarks, Mr. Powers intends to outline the types of interviews and the purpose behind an interview.

Mr. Robert Schuyler is Assistant Director of Marketing, College Division, McGraw Hill Book Company. He graduated from Cornell University with a B.S. in 1941; served in the U.S. Navy during World War II and was released in 1946 as a Lieutenant Commander. Mr. Schuyler was employed by Standard Brands, Inc. prior to joining McGraw Hill in January 1947 as a College Representative in Ohio and Michigan. He has represented McGraw Hill in district, regional, and national sales manager capacities over most of the United States and has held offices in American Textbook Publishers Institute and is affiliated with several academic/educational associations. Mr. Schuyler will talk on "The Follow-Up Interview" and discusses some of the problems and end results of such an interview.

Mr. Robert Schuyler of the McGraw Hill Book Company.

Two panel members round out the program. Mr. William Keough, Jr., Superintendent of the Burlington Schools, will discuss interviewing for elementary and secondary school teaching positions; while Miss Margaret Long, Personnel Program Administrator for System Engineering, Data Processing Division of IBM will present the women's point of view on interview taking. Questions will be invited from the audience and a major part of the panel will address itself to interviewing for summer employment.

All students, faculty and staff are cordially invited to attend.

Save some leading questions for Xerox

(They can lead to some pleasant surprises.)

Especially in R&D.

When our representative visits your campus, take advantage of an interview session to probe beneath the surface of a company that means many things to many people. Because it never stops coming up with new surprises.

Don't be too surprised if he gives you a complete run-down of our fast-growing research and development groups without mentioning an office copier. Xerox copiers are a reality. Their research and development took place many years ago.

Ask him what we mean when we say that the real business of Xerox is graphic communications. Draw him out on how we came to start a revolution in office copying, and transformed this success into an interdisciplinary assault on the global information explosion.

Let him explain LDX (Long Distance Xerography) — what it is today, and what it implies in the context of tomorrow's integrated computer/communication networks. Learn the roles of chemistry, physical optics, mathematical analysis and systems engineering for new products still as much as a decade away from the light of day.

Then, if you're intrigued enough (and there's time enough), let him ask a few leading questions of his own.

KW Poster Rules Announced

The rules for the Poster Contest of the Sixty-Ninth Annual Kake Walk are as follows:

1. Posters are to conform to the measurements of 14 inches wide and 22 inches long. They are to consist of no more than three colors, and in this case black and white are considered colors. They must be original and be constructed so as to leave adequate space for pertinent information such as where Kake Walk is held and at what time.
2. Posters must contain the words "69" (either written or in numerals), Kake Walk, University of Vermont."
3. Posters will not be accepted with personal or fraternity names or initials anywhere on the poster. The name and address of the artist should be attached on a separate piece of paper.

4. The poster contest is open to individuals representing fraternities or sororities as well as all members of the university. An individual may submit as many entries as desired. The posters will be judged on their artistic merit and ingenuity.
5. All entries are to be wrapped and submitted to the Kake Walk Office in Billings Center and slid under the door. The deadline for submitting posters is Dec. 21, 1965 at 5:00 p.m. No posters will be accepted after that time.

Debates To Be Held

By Robin Frost

The University of Vermont's Twentieth Vermont Invitationals Debate Tournament will be held this Friday and Saturday, Nov. 19 and 20.

Forty schools from nine states and Canada will debate five rounds on the topic, "Resolved: that law enforcement agencies should be given greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime." The tournament is intended to be educational rather than competitive, since no trophies will be awarded and decisions will be announced at the banquet to be held Saturday night in Marsh Dining Hall.

An interesting point is that Invitationals is organized and run by 450 non-debating UVM students. This included the Pershing Rifles, who provide transportation, and students serving as chairmen-timekeepers.

Students and the general public are invited to attend the debates which will be held in Waterman, Lafayette, Pomeroy, and Votey at 6:45 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. Friday, and 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m., and 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

The Day That Was

JOHN FITZGERALD KENNEDY
(1917-1963)

This photo was taken in September of 1958 when Mr. Kennedy visited Vermont.

By Mary Ellen Anderson

It was Fri., Nov. 22, 1963. News bulletins flashed across the country, "The President of the United States is dead." John Fitzgerald Kennedy, our 33rd President was assassinated by the bullets of a rifle. The world was stunned and speechless. "Why did such a young, energetic man die in such a violent and mad way?" they asked.

Dallas, Texas. People were excited and happy. President Kennedy was there and they were going to show him how enthusiastic they were. The motorcade had begun and was progressing at a moderate rate between the crowds on both sides of the street. All of a sudden a shot rang out above the cheers of the crowds. The motorcade speeded up. Panic stricken people fell to the ground. In a few minutes Kennedy's lifeless form was carried into the hospital and those fatal words were pronounced.

The country became a nation of mourning. Flags were lowered to half mast. Churches held requiem services. All regularly broadcasted television and radio programs were cancelled and the next three days were dedicated to this tragic event. Messages of sympathy poured in from all over the world.

This air of grief and sorrow similarly prevailed UVM. As one student commented, "It was as if the campus was dead." Classes on Monday and Tuesday were cancelled. Gloomy students went home only to face the same atmosphere there. For them the ensuing days were a time for questions. Who killed our President? Why did he do it? What will happen now? But the question that stood foremost in their minds was, "Did it really happen? Is our President really dead?"

Everything happened so quickly that day — like a shot in the dark. It was a sunny day in

But what are the thoughts and feelings of the world now, two years later? It is certain that the original shock and horror has disappeared, but the memory of President Kennedy lives strong. His name evokes feelings of love and respect. Undoubtedly these feelings will continue for many years for we lost a truly great man.

Man Searches For God

By Sue Winters

The Uphot play, "White Shade of Isolation," written by Peter Whalen and directed by David Storti was well attended on Sunday afternoon. The play, with blank verse monologues and well constructed dialogues, was based around the concept of the Mass. It presented a contemporary isolationist viewpoint on religion.

The leading character, Frank, played by Forest Bowman, is a young man with almost no identity. In his search for the meaning of life and for a way to make a sacrifice to God, he tries to attain his spiritual happiness through other people. He wants to define himself in relation to the people he meets — a woman of the streets, a drunkard, a homosexual — in order that these people might lead him out of loneliness. However, as Frank rejects, and is rejected by other human beings, he realizes that he cannot reach God through humanity. He must make his search and his sacrifice alone. In the final scene of the play, he is accepted by God, and therefore he is no longer alone.

In the discussion period following the stage reading, several people stated that the portrayal of the climax was insufficient. One person felt that if Frank had finally reached man and then turned back to God, that the climax of the play would have been more forceful. Other critics felt that the ending was not plausible because Frank's transition from loneliness to enlightenment was too rapid.

However, the audience of over 100 people received the play well, and most observers did understand its ultimate meaning — in contemporary society, man is not and does not want to be an isolated being — but that in order to find God he must become isolated.

YOU, TOO, CAN BE INFERIOR

The second gravest problem confronting college students today is inferiority feelings. (The first gravest problem is, of course, the recent outbreak of moulting among sorority house canaries.) Let us today look into the causes of inferiority feelings and their possible cures.

Psychologists divide inferiority feelings into three principal categories:

1. Physical inferiority.
2. Mental inferiority.
3. Financial inferiority.

(A few say there is also a fourth category: ichthyological inferiority—a feeling that other people have prettier fish—but I believe this is common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the easiest to understand. Naturally we are inclined to feel inferior to the brawny football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not. Look at all the people, neither brawny nor beautiful, who have made their marks in the world. Look at Napoleon. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lassie.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a package by looking at the outside. (Sometimes, of course, you can. Take Personna Stainless Steel Blades, for example. Just one glance at that jolly blue and white package—so bright and pert, so neat but not gaudy—and you know it has to contain blades of absolute perfection. And you are right! Personna gives you so many shaves per blade it takes a math major to count them. And they are luxury shaves—smoother, comfortabler, kinder to the kisser. Moreover, Personna comes both in Double Edge and Injector style. And as if this weren't enough, Personna is now offering you a chance to grab a fistful of $100 bills from a $100,000 bowl! The Personna Stainless Steel Sweepstakes is off and running, and you're all eligible to enter. Visit your friendly Personna dealer today to get details and an entry blank.)

But I digress. Let us turn now to the second category—mental inferiority. A lot of people think they are dumber than other people. This is not so. It must be remembered that there are different kinds of intelligence. Take, for instance, the classic case of the Sigafos brothers, Claude and Sturbridge, students at a prominent Western university (Dartmouth). It was always assumed that Claude was the more intelligent just because he knew more than Sturbridge about the arts, the sciences, the social sciences, the humanities, and like that. Sturbridge, on the other hand, was ten times smarter than Claude when it came to tying granny knots. But no matter; everybody looked down on "Stupid Sturbridge," as they called him, and looked up to "Clever Claude," as they called him. But who do you think turned out to be the smart one when their granny almost got loose and ran away? You guessed it—good old Stupid Sturbridge.

We arrive now at the final category, financial inferiority. One way to deal with this condition is to increase your income. You can, for example, become a fence. Or you can pose for a life class, if your college is well heated.

But a better way to handle financial inferiority is to accept it philosophically. Look on the bright side of poverty. True, others may have more money than you have, but look at all the things you have that they don't—debts, for instance, and hunger cramps.

Always remember, dear friends, that poverty is no disgrace. It is an error, but it is no disgrace.

EDITORIAL...

What are some of the common faults committed by a candidate interviewing for summer or full-time employment? In preparing for a job interview, who are some of the people that might be in a position to help one evaluate his qualifications?

If you do not already know the answers to these questions, or you want to find out more information about these and related topics, then Thursday, December 2 is a date to be remembered. At 8:15 P.M. that evening the Employment Interview Conference will be held in Ira Allen Chapel.

Topics such as campus interviews and the home office interviews will be discussed. Of vital importance to Education majors will be the portion of the program dealing with teaching. Such questions as, "in interviewing a school system for the first time, what are some of the things I should look for?" will be answered. Women students will be particularly interested in hearing their viewpoint discussed by a woman recruiter from IBM.

For those students seeking part-time or summer employment, a panel discussion will concern itself with this topic. Such questions as the following will be answered: "As a write-in candidate seeking to obtain a summer job, what are some of the points a letter should contain in order to make a favorable response?"

This conference should prove worthwhile to all UVM undergraduate and graduate students. We urge each one of you to take note of this date and to attend. It is your future at stake; no effort to insure a good one should be spared.

Letters To The Editor

St. John Lacks Objectivity

To the Editor:

Mr. St. John's latest article was a marvelous piece of disinterested reporting.

Are we to learn the identity of the noble student who gave so freely of his executive talents in order to rouse us from this dreadful apathy, which, according to various CYNIC columnists, threatens to submerge us all?

Cynic Staff Praised

To the Editor:

I have wanted to let you know how the CYNIC had improved this year, articles, editorials and general tone. This seems a good time to do it because the CYNIC should be complimented and especially the writer, Marion Robinson, in the way the article "Enrollment Hits New High" in last week's issue was written.

No one knows more than I do of the problems and complications involved in trying to tell about in-state and out-of-state admissions. She certainly handled the topic very well and thereby gave considerable worthwhile information for all concerned.

Please convey my thoughts to her and best wishes for the continued high level reporting and editorials of the CYNIC under your able leadership.

Prof Criticizes Petition

To the Editor of the CYNIC:

The open letter reprinted in last week's CYNIC from the New York Times, which bears the signatures of four of my colleagues, seems to call for some comment.

The signers, in highly emotion-charged language, ("Unwilling and helpless victims of bombs and fire" (surely a bit redundant), "Inhuman suffering inflicted ... against (sic!) a defenseless population," etc.) call upon the President "...to put an end to the killing." As usual in such effusions, no effort is made to suggest how this is to be done. Do the signers of the letter suggest that U.S. forces in South Vietnam capitulate to the Viet Cong? Or a fighting retreat to the beaches, a la Dunkirk? — These would seem to be the only methods to end the fighting unilaterally. As far as a negotiated settlement is concerned, the United States government has stated its willingness to negotiate often and clearly enough. It has gone about as far as it possibly can (considering that we recognize the Saigon government as the sole legal authority in South Vietnam, and that to depart from the position would be to abandon, beforehand, the main point at issue) in making clear that it would not object to Viet Cong participation in such talks.

These overtures have been repeatedly and brusquely rejected by Hanoi and Peking, most recently in a statement made this week. It would seem to be quite clear that these are the only parties which insist on military victory as the only solution to the conflict. The United States simply does not demand an unconditional surrender. It has never in recent

By Merry Andrews

If nobody minds, we'll be nice for a week. Not that we're feeling especially benevolent; just that there are a few folks on campus we'd like to compliment for one thing or another. One of them is Peter Whalen, who happens to have written a play. Maybe it's not remarkable either to be a Peter Whalen, or to have written a play. But we're going to remark anyway, because it's a good play.

It happens that it was read at an Upshot presentation in the Arena Theatre Sunday last — attended by a small and rather long-haired group. That was too bad, really; the smallness (not especially the long hair) of the audience. In fact, we got the distinct impression it was an invitational thing; a private show in somebody's drawing room.

It wasn't, though, because we know it was mentioned to you on the bulletin boards. But there weren't many of you there, were there?

Now, we can see why you wouldn't watch a play written by some Greek who favored chastity in moderation, or again by some very-dead English bard who wrote long and rather obscure sentences about various and sundry kings.

But what about this thing? If it came from you people, and what he's come up with might have surprised you, accustomed as you are to being told you're no good, it seems that Peter Whalen can write. Now, maybe that's a foolish talent to have in our gentle little world; fortunately, Peter doesn't seem to have noticed yet if it is.

Anyhow, the play, directed by David Storti, and titled "White Shade of Isolation," concerns a young Whalen-ish man called Frank, played pale-gold and effectively by Forrest Bowman. His long spells of blank verse were beautiful, but maybe too much personal poetry for Sunday afternoon stage. In fact, they seemed foggy. The dialogues barked, but were also subtle; they talked back to themselves, and were good.

It seems Frank is naive, insists on being an individual; is lost in the neighborhood nobody knows. He finds less reality in contacts with men than in his crying tries at contact with God. And he's left God to find meaning in man, demanding it from what he meets in wandering: an old prostitute, a bum, a homosexual, and the young girl Lizzie. He finds about as much meaning as can be expected. And finding none, he returns, ritually, to whatever God is, in a very effective ending.

We didn't expect a first play to be too subtle; Peter's isn't. But we didn't expect a first play to be well-structured or so effective either; Peter's is.

It just happens to be a good play.

They say that with some luck and some re-writing, the thing may be produced in full later this year, by the University people. Perhaps you'll come then, even if you've got to sit with the hairy folks?

Meantime, we would like to congratulate Peter Whalen and Upshot on what they've done, and what we hope they'll keep doing. And we hope you'll sometime see it.

The thing is, little people, it's all about you.

FRUSTRATION

By David P. St. John

Your neighbors and mine are among the most prejudiced and brain-washed people in the world. They think that because they were born into a certain religion, it is the best for them, and they must hold on to it. Their baseball team is the best one, a certain car is the best car, and they live in the best neighborhood and country.

You and I however, realize that any of us might have been born into any family, observing any religion, having any set of customs, living in any locale or country — don't we? DON'T WE?

You and I are very wise when we decide to improve ourselves by looking for and examining new ideas and beliefs, right?

What if we could be so wise as to seek a true religion?

1. Our parents might go to pieces because other religions are for other families, not ours.
2. Our ancestors might turn over in their graves.
3. We might be disinherited.
4. We might learn all the "false" things about other religions.
5. We would acquire a real education.
6. We would substitute understanding for narrow-mindedness.
7. We would substitute thus for suspicion.
8. We would become more compassionate.
9. ... 10. ... 11. We would possess the true values of life. Have I made my point?

Obviously, this is the only true religion. Isn't it a shame that Utopia does not exist?

years taken such a position. Unconditional surrender is the demand of the opposition.

In view of our clear legal and moral commitments to South Vietnam and neighboring countries, of our interest in maintaining non-hostile governments in them, and of our credibility as a great power and alliance partner all over the world, surrender must be unacceptable to this country. Whether or not previous administrations were wise in committing us so strongly to the South Vietnamese position, whether or not the present government of South Vietnam is well beloved by its people or anyone else, whether or not innocent people get hurt (they usually do, especially in guerilla campaigns) whether the Viet Cong are wholly or only largely under the control of Hanoi — these are interesting conversation topics, but they have absolutely no bearing on this simple proposition.

As for the touching eagerness with which the signers bare their breasts to persecution — they must have been greatly disappointed by the recent statements by Secretary Rusk and Sen. Kennedy specifically upholding their right to take any position they like. No one in authority has ever threatened to prevent anyone from speaking his mind on

Placement Barometer

WHY A CONFERENCE ON THE EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEW FOR SUMMER AND FULL-TIME JOBS? New since my own college days, and later when traveling the road of experience as a recruiter for Union Camp Paper Corporation, the Bell Telephone Laboratories, and now as your Director of Placement, have I heard of any subject about which there is more misconception than the employment interview, and I have talked with many candidates for employment. By the same token, I do not know of any subject that is more pertinent to your obtaining a good summer job or a full-time position; however, whether or not you are successful in your quest, depends upon two factors: 1) your past record of accomplishment and 2) how you respond in an interview. The record you are supposed to be doing something about. As to the interview, I invite you to come and submit your questions to a panel of experts. You probably will not like all of what you are going to hear, but I can promise you that it will be straight fact and that you will have all the answers you need to know to successfully carry off the interview. I hope you, Mr. Freshman; Mr. Sophomore, and Mr. Junior will be there; for I can assure you that such a program will not be held next year. I feel fairly confident that Mr. Senior will be present because he is already beginning to grow nervous. I know the women will be present. By the way, students from Champlain College, St. Michael's College, and Trinity College are coming, so you had better plan to arrive early.

this issue. It has been pointed out that certain statements may have certain effects, such as a stiffening of the Communist position and a consequent prologation of the war. No one can deny that this is in the realm of possibility. But we are willing to pay even this high price for free speech. Organized draft dodging and other efforts designed actively to sabotage policies of the United States government, which are clearly supported by an overwhelming majority of the American people, are a different matter. They should not be tolerated. A democracy can function only if decisions taken after due discussion by the representatives of the majority are accepted by the minority, even while it tries to change these decisions by further debate.

Messrs. Spinner, Sobers, Berger, and Johnson constitute less than 1% of the UVM faculty. It may be useful to keep this fact in mind when forming an opinion on the weight of petitions such as these, which look impressive indeed when published in the New York Times with hundreds of signatures collected in all parts of the country. This minority certainly has a right to speak its mind. The majority has a right to disregard its views.

Views From The Front

The Students and Faculty
University of Vermont

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen,
Some of the clippings from the Burlington Free Press and Vermont Sunday News have made their way here.

I, and others here appreciate your stand behind the U.S. policy in Vietnam. For a while, it almost seemed as though we were alone. It is apparent now that it is quite the opposite. Perhaps more apparent is that there never was any serious opposition to U.S. policy. Perhaps "journalistic amplification" gave us this impression.

I'm not too well versed or knowledgeable in Philosophy, but my experience both in Europe and here has been that Violence and Death and misery are synonymous with Communism. How people can back communism is beyond me, regardless of any political aspects or one-sided legalities. Because of the American Freedom of the Press, which considers atrocities in bad taste, a truer picture of the Viet Cong is not seen. Maiming of children is a favorite terrorist act of the VC, and I have seen prisoners who cried they were so happy to be free. There seems to be some kind of underlying belief among some that Vietnamese prefer Communism. I think one would have to go fairly deep into what is left of the "iron triangle" or "war zone D" to find a Vietnamese who honestly prefers Communism. However, they are seldom to be found when the shooting starts. An unfriendly village is usually a village of maybe 50 peasants and one VC -- with a gun.

Again, our thanks for your backing. It is encouraging, and our respect for your "guts."

Dear All,

The brothers of Alpha Gamma Rho send their best wishes to Robert Foster, '68, on his pinning to Nancy Draper, '68; to James White, '68, on his pinning to Mary Lou Daniels, a freshman at Concord State Hospital; and to Bruce Douglas, '67, on his pinning to Brenda Shepard of Middlebury. AGR is also pleased to announce Pete Foulkes, '67, pinning of Nancy Quinn, '68, and of Clayton Gage's, '67, pinning of Jody Jackson of Elies Beauty Academy.

The sisters of Alpha Chi Omega wish to extend congratulations to their Susan Twombly, '67, and Phi Mu Delta's Doug Towne, '66, on their engagement.

Best wishes to Judith Schumacher, '68, on her pinning to Steven Tilton of St. Michael's College.

Alpha Gamma Rho now has four new brothers: Peter Foulkes, '67, Jack Lindley, '67, Clayton Gage, '67, and Harmon Willey, '67.

The Alpha Chi's are very proud of their four new pledges: Alison Bristol, '67; Susan Patch, '67; Jill Taylor, '68; and Georgia Welsh, '68.

Have a happy Thanksgiving vacation!

Fraternity Row

By Carl Lisman

This week, Freshmen and interested upperclassmen are invited to join in the first formal rushing period of the year, sponsored by the Interfraternity Council and the 16 member fraternities. The purpose of this program is to allow all interested students to become acquainted with the fraternity system at UVM, as well as to permit the fraternities to determine who is and who is not interested in each specific fraternity.

Although it is not mandatory, as it was in past years, for all students to attend all 16 member institutions, it is strongly urged that interested students visit as many of the houses as possible. All fraternities will be open.

This semester has been devoted to introducing the fraternity system to the Class of 1969. Open houses, open parties (during Homecoming), smokers, were held with the idea that the fraternity system has nothing to hide nor nothing for which it should be ashamed. The goal of fraternities at UVM is a well-rounded one of social, academic, and physical development.

All three qualities are stressed, for it is felt that a man possessing only two of these traits is lacking.

This weekend starts the chain of events which is culminated in the first month after mid-semester vacation. After the students return, a second and final mandatory rushing program will begin, to be followed by banquets and final bids. Students who have now a specific desire to join one fraternity are urged to attend more than just that one house, for it is the opinion of the IFC that a choice cannot be made after visiting one fraternity. Students who have now no interest in fraternities are equally urged to attend the mandatory smokers if only to substantiate reasons for not joining. The IFC is asking freshmen to rush, whether or not they are all interested in fraternities.

In any case, all decisions are personal. No pressure will be exerted on any one student. The IFC can only hope that by presenting the rushing program that the final decisions will be the right ones.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

DANTE REMEMBERED

This year the 700th anniversary of Dante Alighieri, one of the world's greatest poets, is being celebrated. UVM, in a program sponsored by the Newman Center, will be joining the world wide celebration. Dr. Armando Citarella of St. Michael's Modern Language Dept. will be the guest speaker at the Nov. 18 Augustine Lecture.

Dante was not just a poet, although he is probably most remembered for The Divine Comedy. He was also an active civil servant holding down various government offices in his native Florence. He incorporated many of his political ideas into his Comedy.

Even to those who have not read Dante, his name and aspects of his writing are familiar. His name, like that of Shakespeare, conjures up a certain image in the mind of the listener. T.S.

Elliot has said that "Shakespeare gives the greatest width of human passion; Dante the greatest altitude and greatest depth. They divide the modern world between them; there is no third."

The program on Thursday will begin with a short film "Wings to Italy," which emphasizes the city of Florence, Dante's birthplace. A taped translation by John Ciardi of parts of the Comedy will follow. Mr. Ciardi, a professor at Rutgers, has written one of the better translations of the Comedy. After a lecture on how to read Dante will be given by Mr. Armando Citarella. He will use as a point of departure the episode of Francesca and Paolo. There will also be tapes of 13th century music, followed by an informal discussion with Mr. Citarella. Coffee and Italian cakes will be served.

Conference On China To Be Held

A New England weekend conference on, "China: Revolutions and Continuities," which is being sponsored by Goddard College, will take place on Nov. 19, 20, and 21 at Goddard College in Plainfield, Vt. The purpose of the conference, in the words of the conference committee is, "to seek understanding of contemporary China, based not on a narrowly political but rather on a broadly cultural and historical approach; to understand the continuities implicit in a 3,000 year history, as well as the discontinuities of an industrializing and revolutionary nation; and importantly to explore the reality that underlies the myths through art forms, through the visual impact of films, and through first person eyewitness accounts."

Some of the high points on the weekend agenda are: Friday, Nov. 19, 2:00-3:00 p.m., "Introduction," Goddard President Royce S. Pitkin; 3:00-4:30 p.m., Chih Meng, China Institute of New York-Demonstration and Lecture on "Chinese Music: An Expression of the Culture; 8:00-10:30 p.m., Pat Watson, reporter on the weekly program "Document" for the Canadian Broadcasting Company; will present his 1965 documentary film "China Today," to be shown for the first time in this country. 10:30 General discussion with Pat Watson. Saturday, Nov. 20, 10:00-11:00 a.m., Dr. Louis Halasz, formerly with the U.N. Office of Information, will speak on "The U.N. and China." Dr. Jonathan Mirsky, Dept. of Oriental Studies, University of Pennsylvania, recently returned from Vietnam, will speak on "China and America in Southeast Asia" at 11:00 a.m. 8:00-10:00 p.m., Wing-tsit Chan, Professor of Chinese Philosophy and Culture, "Trend in Chinese Thought and Culture," Sunday, Nov. 21, 10:00-12:00 a.m., Dr. Mirsky; Russel Johnson, American Friends Service Committee, returned from 4 years in S.E. Asia; and a spokesman from the State Department; "Confrontations in Asia."

All conference sessions will take place at The Haybarn Theater, Goddard College. Registration fees are: Adults: $2.00, Students: $1.00, meals: $1.25. For more information contact Horace Briggs, 205 Old Mill.

Pershing Rifles Establish Award

UVM, Oct. 22: Ten Pershing Riflemen completed requirements for a new "Counter-Guerilla" patch at the unit's meeting last night. Authorization for wearing the patch was provided by Col. L.G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science. The concept of a distinctive insignia is in line with the emphasis being placed on counter-guerilla tactics by the Department of the Army.

Pershing Rifles is a national military fraternity organized before the turn of the century by their Lieutenant, later General of the Armies, John J. Pershing while serving with an officer training detachment at the University of Nebraska. It is associated with R.O.T.C. units across the nation. The UVM chapter sponsors several military activities but has focused attention upon their new counter-guerilla unit since last Spring. In order to qualify for the new patch, cadets must demonstrate proficiency in: Patrolling, first aid, compass and direction finding, day and night movement, cover and concealment, battle drill, communications, and hand to hand combat. In addition, a candidate must participate in counter-guerilla maneuvers and a week-long Survival School.

The following cadets have earned the Counter-Guerilla patch: Peter McGregor, Walter Cooper, James Willard, Michael Day, Norman Boyden, David Wilkins, Daniel Aher, Eric Bauer, Lawrence Clark and Thomas Lackey.

Why?

By Amy Hamlin

Last week, the women students housed in the Mason-Simpson-Hamilton complex were aroused at 3 a.m. by a bleating, ear-shattering sound known as the fire alarm. And like the good sports they are, every student leapt out of a warm bed, trundled down stairs, and stood outside in the usual night air of sub-freezing temperatures and whipping winds. Each girl's name was read from a list, and once all students were accounted for, another buzzer rang, and the cell-mates returned to their quarters. It must be a very satisfying, and at the same time a ludicrous experience to see some 1000 human beings jump at the sound of a buzzer, and move uniformly as robots, to a predetermined destination. Little do the organizers of these monthly fiascoes know that about twenty percent of the students awakened never returned to bed, because their soundest sleep had been broken, and it was therefore inevitable that they be awake for the rest of the night. In addition to losing what may as well be called a night's sleep, many girls became chilled, resulting in all sorts of contagious illnesses such as colds, sorethroats and the like. Going from a warm bed directly into Vermont night air is not the most advisable way to stay healthy.

To all intents and purposes, the fire drill procedures at UVM should be revised. Each girl upon arriving at UVM learns from the fire captain on her floor the exact procedures to follow in case of fire. After the first drill, all the rest are the same. Virtually nothing is learned by the participation, one would assume, involves the time necessary to empty a building. But haven't the average evacuating times been the same for years? And why are there no drills in classroom buildings? Is Simpson Hall more susceptible to fire than Old Mill? If a serious fire ever did break out in the middle of the night, or at any time for that matter, it seems highly unlikely and far too idealistic to expect each student to say to herself: "Now I must shut the window, and next pull up my blind, oh yes, my washcloth, and how could I possibly forget my flashlight? Oh well, can't find it anyway." Any person in her right mind would get out of the building as fast as her legs could carry her—forgetting all routine supposedly cemented in her mind.

Since fire drills are of little or no value to the student, in fact often proving to be detrimental to her health, and since virtually nothing is gained, but paradoxically everything lost, what else can an observant conscientious person do but to revise, if not eliminate altogether the ritual of the fire drill?

Election Shows Republican Trend

By Lou Blumenfeld

It is understood that all students of this campus are already fully informed of the results of the major city and state elections of the past two weeks, and have thoroughly analyzed the results. Therefore, this article will serve merely as a review.

Without a doubt the biggest news is New York City where Republican Independent Lindsay defeated both the Democrats and the Republicans. It must be remembered, however, that Lindsay is definitely a Republican.

The effect of Lindsay's election concerning the state of New York is twofold. First, the Republican Party has obviously been strengthened, and second, some competition has been created for Governor Rockefeller as the leader of the G.O.P. in New York. Also important is the apparent absence of any challenger to Robert Kennedy's leadership of the Democratic Party.

Nationally, Lindsay's victory placed him in contention for national laurels. The effect for the 1968 elections should be obvious.

Philadelphia, traditionally a Democratic stronghold, was the scene of an upset which could take on major significance. Arlan Specter, a Democrat who ran as a Republican Reformer, gained election as District Attorney. The significance in this case is double. Not only did a Republican (Democrat turncoat) win, but he rebuked the Democratic Machine in doing so.

In Louisville, Kentucky and Toledo, Ohio, as in Philadelphia, Republicans invaded traditionally Democratic urban strongholds. A possible trend seems to be developing and one can be sure that it has the G.O.P.'s blessings.

Gubernatorial contests were held in New Jersey and Virginia this year, and in both cases the Democrats were, as expected, victorious. In New Jersey, Governor Richard Hughes defeated his opponent, Senator Wayne Dumont Jr., in such a landslide that he pulled the Democrats into control in both houses of the legislature for the first time since Woodrow Wilson in 1913.

In Virginia, Mills Godwin Jr., aided by an unusual coalition of Negroes, organized labor, and Senator Harry Byrd's Conservative machine, emerged victorious. The major significance here is obviously the mentioned coalition.

The overall results of the elections, nationally, was the rejuvenation of the Republican Party, at least to some degree. The recovery, necessitated by the Johnson landslide of a year ago, is certainly not complete, but G.O.P. leaders are optimistic.

Said Governor William Scranton of Philadelphia, "The adage that Republicans cannot win in big cities is out the window." He, of course, referred mainly to New York and Philadelphia.

A. Searle Pinney, Republican state chairman in Connecticut stated, "We have ample reason to feel the Republican Party is now on the right track."

This optimism is perhaps well founded. One might note that most major victors did not embrace the Goldwater brand of Republicanism. The results of this will not be known for a few years, but maybe, and just maybe, come 1968 we can revert, nationally, to a two party system. It just could be that the elephant still lives.

Political Gamble Taken

With an unusual consistency, Canadian voters again elected a parliament in which no one party gained the majority. This has defeated Prime Minister Pearson's plans for obtaining a clear cut victory for his Liberal Party.

However, the Liberals won 129 seats to the Conservatives 99, and the slight margin should be enough to keep the Liberals in control of the government.

The Liberals gained in the Quebec area, but lost six seats in the Atlantic provinces. As was expected, the Conservatives, led by Mr. Diefenbaker, did well in the prairie provinces. The New Democratic party also gained a few seats, and although they are as yet a small party they can probably play an important role in a coalition government.

Mr. Pearson has been criticised from several corners for holding an election in the first place. But it was a political gamble by which he hoped to gain a decisive victory and a strong government. It was a gamble in which the players neither won nor lost.

Of The Fittest

By Judy Triplett

All of the annual, exotic, culinary marvels were undergoing final preparation in the kitchen. Mother and Sister were busily bustling around, putting the finishing touches on their Thanksgiving dinner. The roast had just been removed from the oven, and its enticing aroma pervaded the house.

Father and Brother lounged comfortably in the family room, making the usual stilted, cordial conversation with the once-a-year Thanksgiving relatives. They congregated every year to feed and to give thanks together. It was the same as eating with strangers, though. They never really saw enough of each other to become fully acquainted. Therefore, there was uneasiness and suspicion just below the surface of their amiableness.

Every year they rotated, each taking a turn providing the feast, for times were hard and food was expensive now. Meat was no longer as plentiful as it had been. There were reports, in fact, that the species was rapidly approaching extinction, that in a few years there would be none to be had anywhere at any price.

It surely would seem strange, having a different dish for Thanksgiving dinner. Why, Father could not even remember a time when anyone ate anything else on Thanksgiving. It surely would seem strange.

Sister had prepared a place for each guest, using the family's finest holiday settings. She very carefully put the special silver platter in the center where everyone could see the roast, and where every one could reach it equally well. The delicacy was the favorite of almost every one, and should any one be given a smaller share, there would be a terrible scene. That had happened two years ago, and a guest had been killed in the scrap.

A heated political argument was building up in the family room just as Sister went in to announce that dinner was ready.

As they took their places, Mother and her helpers carried the roast in. They then took their own places. Father led them all in giving thanks that they had managed so well over the past year, and in the hope that they would have a year more.

As they finished, a signal was given and each darted into the center, tearing frantically and furiously at the roast, each viciously pecking at the others, fighting them in the struggle to obtain a greater share.

In a few seconds all was still. Feathers and blood remained as evidence of the fury of the conflict. Some guests had been hurt. Mother began to clear away the places.

The scattered remains of a small human skeleton were the first she threw out.

New '66 Chevelle SS 396 Convertible and Sport Coupe.

Equipped with a Turbo-Jet 396 V8, special suspension and red stripe tires.

These cars weren't meant for the driver who is willing to settle for frills.

They're engineered from the chassis on up as no-compromise road machines.

Standard output of the new Turbo-Jet 396 V8—which powers both models—is 325 hp. This remarkably efficient power plant is also available in a 360-hp version.

So much for what happens on straightaways. How about curves? You ride on a special SS 396 chassis—with flat-cornering suspension and wide-base wheels.

A fully synchronized 3-speed transmission is standard. Or you can order a 4-speed or Powerglide—also Strato-bucket front seats, center console and full instrumentation.

Sound like a car you could get serious over? That, as you'll see at your dealer's, is precisely how Chevrolet engineers planned it. Seriously.

Undergraduate Receives Award

Among the undergraduate students enrolled at The Merrill-Palmer Institute in Detroit during the first semester of the present school year is Lucy J. Burnap. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Burnap of Pelham, New York and is currently studying at the University of Vermont at Burlington.

The Merrill-Palmer Institute is the only center of its kind devoted to teaching, research, and community service in the special fields of human development and family life. Students in education, the behavioral and social sciences and related fields come from all over the world and from more than one hundred cooperating universities and colleges across the United States. They receive credit for their work at Merrill-Palmer toward their degrees at their cooperating institutions. Following her studies at Merrill-Palmer, Miss Burnap will be returning to the University to complete her degree.

Research On Campus

The University of Vermont, along with the U.S. Army Research Office and the Geigy Chemical Corporation, sponsored a recent international conference on arthritis and rheumatism. Held in Stowe during the week of October 10th through the 16th, the series of seminars dealt with "Biophysics and Physical Chemistry of Connective Tissue."

The University's Rheumatism Research Unit is studying relationships between salt, water, and the connective tissues, and the roles that these elements play in arthritis. Drs. Bland and Lipson felt that a great deal was gained by bringing together scientists from around the world to discuss and share their knowledge and findings.

Fifty scientists from many corners of the world took part in the meeting. Attendance was by invitation only, and the participants included eminent scientists from Britain, Scotland, Scandinavia, Europe, New Zealand, Tasmania, and the United States.

More than twenty-four papers were presented, covering areas such as tensile strength, viscosity, macromolecular structure, and lubrication of the body's joints and supporting structures.

Drs. John H. Bland and Richard L. Lipson of the College of Medicine, department of Medicine, planned and organized the conference.

Profile Tests Kept Secret

Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors must wonder sometimes about the results of the class profile tests they took at the beginning of their freshman year, but most will probably never see them.

Dean Patzer said that most of the results could not be released now for fear that they would "contaminate" students' opinions. The profile tests are part of a long-range study of UVM students. A senior test will be given to classes which took a freshman profile test and the results will be compared.

Dean Patzer said that the purposes of the study are to find "what kind of student we have" and "what kind of impact UVM has on students"; in general, the study should find "what effects four years of college education have on students."

The fear of "contamination" of opinions is reasonable; if students knew what their class was credited with saying as frosh, they might react against it on their senior test and make an answer different from what they

MERP WEEK COMES TO A CLOSE, OR DOES IT?

By Buddy Mandell

No, "Merp Week" is not a type of South African jungle virus, as an outsider might suspect upon initial contact with the word. However, certain epidemic-like tendencies of this untraditional tradition would make such an outsider not far wrong. This recently introduced tradition, Merp Week by name, has brought the idea of Sadie Hawkins to UVM, and with it a reversal of the social trends of campus life.

From the female point of view, Merp Week is an opportunity to play the lead role; to ask out the boy of her choice; and, in a sense, find out exactly where she stands. Technically, Merp Week should be an opportunity for a girl to meet a boy who she doesn't really know, but would like to. In practice, however, it usually turns out that the boy who a girl merps would have probably asked her out anyway, and the idea behind Merp Week loses some of its significance.

In spite of the weaknesses of the tradition, the male students on campus don't seem to oppose the idea of getting treated to a movie, or to dinner, or to coffee, or getting picked up for a date, or all of these "punishments." In reality, it seems that to males, Merp Week, has much more economic significance than it does traditional significance. In addition, the situation becomes one of jest and revenge, if a boy should happen to get merped by more than one girl for the same night. This is his only opportunity to rattle off the long list of phony excuses that he has collected through his experiences. A girl must find it odd to hear such sincere excuses as: "Well, I don't go out with girls that I don't know"; or "I'm so sorry, but I'm going home that weekend..."; or "I'll have to meet you before I can accept a date..." or "You should have called sooner, because I was just asked out five minutes ago -- maybe some other time -- O.K.?"

"Hi! Are you busy tonight?" (I know he isn't!)

"Yes, but I'd love to go out!" (I'll play it cool!)

"Knock-knock" (This is outrageous!!)

She: (Just like rushing.)
He: "What lovely eyes you have."

She: (He never studied before, where did he get these books??)
He: (Suffer, dear.)

Waterman doors will never open easily.

He: (Now she knows what I go through.)
She: (Keep smiling honey, the week is almost over.)

"One cream, two sugars... or was it two creams, one sugar?"

(Good-night, Sweetheart!!)

With the opening of the 1965-66 basketball season just around the corner, a critical appraisal of the team and its aspirations for the new season is in order. When evaluating a competitive squad in any sport, the blunt of failure is usually placed upon the coach.

Seldom are there complimentary adjectives with regard to a coach or manager of a losing team. However, such will not be the case at UVM this year. Art Loche, the new basketball coach has come to UVM with a vitality and willingness to succeed seldom envisioned by even the most seasoned coaches. Upon his arrival here in late August, Loche has set up a basketball program which will prove attractive to the finest ballplayers in the country today. Furthermore, his reputation and past experience at New York University will afford him the finest recruiting possibilities available. With a somewhat enlarged budget, the 1965-66 edition of UVM "hoopsters" shape up as follows. In the backcourt, Ken Spalter, Bruce Hanna, and co-captain Layne Higgs will divide game time. Up front, Russ Boardman, Bill Librera, and co-captain Milt Goggins promise to see the greatest amount of action. Rounding out the remainder of the squad ace Mike Karol, Sandy McCloed, Bruce Lombard, Don Katz, Titus Hale, and Don Longly.

According to Coach Loche, "Our boys will have to substitute brains in place of brawn and ability." The success of this strategy will be evidenced Dec. 1, as the Catamounts take on Dartmouth College at home.

Danish Gymnasts Come To UVM

The Danish Gym Team, on a 12-month, world-wide tour, will perform at the University of Vermont on Nov. 19.

Their Burlington appearance is sponsored by the men's and women's departments of physical education at the University. The performance starts at 8 p.m. in the Patrick Gym with the doors opening at 7. There will be no reserved seats.

The Danish team consists of 24 performers -- 12 women and 12 men -- selected from the most skillful gymnasts in Denmark. The average age is 20. Some are students, others represent a number of different careers. They have all taken a year off without salary of any kind to participate in the tour.

This is the seventh world tour and all have been organized and directed by Eric Flensted-Jensen. The first tour was in 1939 while last year the tour included two performances at the New York World's Fair.

The program includes a variety of modern rhythmical gymnastics vaulting and tumbling, and folk dances in colorful native costumes.

Charles Christensen, chairman of the men's department of physical education, said the Danish Gym Team is among the finest in the world.

"Over the years, they (Denmark) have been the leaders in the field of physical education, particularly in rhythmical and medical gymnastics. Their show will help to demonstrate how physical education can be an art and anesthetic form.

Intramurals Shape Up As Tight Race

INTRAMURAL SCOREBOARD

By Bob Bloomenthal

The intramural sports competition has been off to another fast and furious season under the capable direction of Mr. Norm Strassburg. Thus far, only a few events have reached completion and the race for the Campus All-Sports Trophy is tighter than ever. A report on these events follows:

TOUCH FOOTBALL

There were three leagues in the fraternity division with Delta Psi, Sigma Phi Epsilon, and Kappa Sigma emerging as league victors. In the fraternity playoffs Kappa Sig came out on top by beating Delta Psi, 20-6.

The independent champ was MAT, as they beat Chittenden 4th in a playoff by a 12-8 margin. In the all-campus championship playoff, the strong Kappa Sig squad whitewashed MAT, 34-0, to carry off the touch football title.

TENNIS SINGLES

The fraternity division of the intramural indoor tennis tournament was dominated by Phi Sigma Delta as three Phi Sig made it to the semi-final round. The tournament winner, however, was SAE's Bruce Hanna as he defeated Ashley Louis of Phi Sig, 6-2, 7-5, in the finals. Hanna then proceeded to beat N.W. Wetherbee of Austin, the independent victor to cop the all-campus championship.

BOWLING

There were three leagues in this year's bowling competition and the winners of these leagues were Tau Epsilon Phi, Delta Psi, and Sigma Phi Epsilon. Sig Ep had the closest battle as their worst record was equaled by Alpha Tau Omega and Lambda Iota, but Sig Ep was ruled the victor on the basis of total pinfall. At press time, the three league winners were playing off for the campus championship.

BASKETBALL

The always exciting intramural basketball season is now in progress. There are four leagues this year, with two fraternity and two independent divisions. Although the season is only about half over, the title contenders have already been narrowed down. In League A, Sig Ep and Phi Mu Delta, the defending campus champion, are staging quite a battle for first place. League B contenders are Delta Psi, SAE, and Kappa Sigma. MAT leads League C with a 2-0 mark and the Converse Cubs and Willis 4th remain on top in League D.

RINKMEN PREP FOR OPENER

The University of Vermont will tackle its most ambitious hockey schedule this winter since resuming the sport three years ago. The Catamounts have added home-and-home contests with powerful state rivals Middlebury and Norwich, and have picked up Colby and Hamilton for the first time.

Vermont opens its 19-game schedule on Dec. 1 with an afternoon contest at home against New Hampshire.

Jim Cross, a wing on Boston University's 1960 NCAA team, is serving as interim coach, replacing Bill Ruffer who resigned.

Six lettermen are included among the 25 players vying for spots on the squad. They are forwards John Rutledge, Scotia, N.Y.; Marshall Stevenson, Potsdam, N.Y.; Ozro Swett, Dixfield, Me.; and Henry Uihlein, Milwaukee, Wis.; and defensemen Jim Klode, Milwaukee, Wis., and Bob Snyder, Glenview, Ill.

Stevenson and Swett have ranked 1-2 in scoring for the past two years and along with Uihlein give the Cats a tested line. Three sophomores -- wings John Semler, Salisbury, Conn. and Lee Roy, Denmark, Me.; and center Curt Tobey, Kenilworth, Ill. -- give Vermont another proven line as they spent part of last year playing with the varsity when Vermont was granted permission to use freshmen.

The defense and goalie's jobs appear wide open although junior Don Henson, Providence, R.I., seems to have the inside track for the net job at this time.

The 1965-66 schedule: Dec. 1, New Hampshire; 3, at Hamilton; 8, Norwich; 11, Connecticut; 28-29, Third Annual Yankee Conference Tournament at Durham, N.H.

Jan. 8, Williams; 5, at Connecticut; 24, at Boston State; 29, at Colby; 31, Boston State.

Feb. 3, at Salem State; 5, Middlebury; 9, at Norwich; 10, at New Hampshire; 19, American International; 22, Massachusetts; 25, at Middlebury; 28, Salem State.

New York City Opera To Perform Wed.

"The Barber of Seville"

By Judy Beeber

Opera buffs, your moment is coming; the Lane Series will present the New York City Opera in their production of "The Barber of Seville" on Wednesday, Dec. 8, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. The "opera buffa" by Gioacchino Rossini will be presented in English instead of traditional Italian. The opera will be under the direction of Julius Rudel.

This is the 42nd season of the New York City Opera, a company which has regularly performed at the New York City Center. In 1966, they will move to their new home, the elegant New York State Theater in Lincoln Center cultural complex, where its neighbors will be the Metropolitan Opera House, Philharmonic Hall, Juilliard School of Music, and Vivian Beaumont Theater.

In the past two decades, the New York City Opera has produced 115 operas in all languages, including 7 new works commissioned by Mr. Rudel under the Ford Foundation. An eighth new American work is "Miss Julie."

This season, the City Opera will tour 19 cities and will present a total of 26 performances. The tour will play in New York, Detroit, Cleveland, Ann Arbor, Philadelphia, and other cities. Three opera productions, one a double bill, are being presented on this tour: "The Barber of Seville," "Carmen," and the combination of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci."

What has brought the New York City Opera to the forefront has been its willingness to revive obscure or forgotten works. Two recent notable examples would be last spring's rendition of Shostakovich's "Katerina Ismaelova" and this season's "The Flaming Angel." The Opera Company has also in the past given artistic life to "Turn of the Screw." It has revived the 3 one-act operas of Puccini and performed operas by Monteverdi.

In its 22 years at City Center, the City Opera has grown from a nine performance season of 3 operas, "Tosca," "Martha," and "Carmen," to over 100 performances a year of some 30 operas. In each season, Mr. Rudel gives opportunities to over 40 young artists, American and Foreign.

The stars of the cast will be Gene Ballard as Count Almaviva, Sherrill Milnes as Figaro the barber, and Nadja Witkowska as Rosina, the ward of Dr. Bartolo. Anton Coppola will serve as director, making his first appearance in Burlington. The story takes place in Seville around the 17th century.

Howard Taubman of the New York Times reviewed the opera and said that it is "smoothly professional, without fanfare or social trappings."

Parking Charge Eliminated At Mt. Mansfield

Commissioner of the Department of Forests and Parks, Perry H. Merrill and Sepp Ruschp, President and General Manager of the Mt. Mansfield Company in Stowe, announced today that negotiations have been completed eliminating the 25 cent parking charge collected by the State of Vermont at the entrance of the Mt. Mansfield Ski Area.

REASON GIVEN

The new proposal was presented for approval of the Board of Forests and Parks headed by Chairman Roland Keenan of St. Albans, Vermont. The Mt. Mansfield Company operates ski facilities in the Mt. Mansfield State Forest. "The reason for the change, is to serve our guests better and eliminate any unnecessary inconvenience" Ruschp stated.

Under the new contract, State of Vermont crews and equipment will continue to perform the maintenance of the parking area.

REVENUE FROM FEES

Parking fees collected by the State of Vermont have amounted to $12-15,000 annually. This sum will now be paid to the Department of Forests and Parks by the Mt. Mansfield Company, based on a percentage of the gross revenue realized from the ski lifts within the Mt. Mansfield State Park.

The new policy will provide smoother traffic flow within the ski area, and eliminate traffic congestion at the entrance of the Mt. Mansfield Ski Area.

Murbe Resigns

Hans Murbe, assistant professor of English, to whom tenure has been denied, has submitted his resignation, which will become effective at the end of this academic year.

"After the executive committee had considered the appeal and decided not to recommend tenure, there seemed to be no use in appealing to any higher level," Murbe told the CYNIC this past Wednesday. He feels that all higher levels in the administration will abide by the decision of Nov. 22.

According to the Burlington Free Press, when Murbe was first told that the committee had not recommended him for tenure, he appealed to the student body requesting them to sign petitions if they did not feel a professor should be reappointed with tenure on the basis of his publications.

(Murbe stated that Dr. Samuel Bogorad told him he was not recommended mainly because he had not published, which led him to raise the "publish or perish" issue.)

The Board of Trustees is scheduled to meet Saturday, and will act on Murbe's case. Before the case reaches the board, it passes through the hands of the dean of the academic college, in this case, Arts and Sciences, the University Policy Committee, and the University Council.

Recommendations can be made at these stages, and can reverse the department's decision, although in most cases the decision stands.

Murbe felt that once the department decision was reached, there was no point in appealing at any other step in the process. He spoke Tuesday at Phi Mu Delta, stating that although his case is closed since his resignation, the issue is still alive.

Murbe said he may speak second semester on the "publish or perish" question, at a Scope sponsored lecture.

Scope Will Discuss Tenure

Recent events have brought the problems of tenure, promotion, and professor evaluation to the attention of the UVM student body, and, in response to this recent awareness, the Student Association Senate is sponsoring a panel discussion entitled, "The Standards and Procedures of Professor Evaluation." The purpose of this discussion is to help the student to further his understanding of the processes involved in the evaluation and promotion of UVM professors. It will take place Monday, December 6th, in the North Lounge of Billings at 8:00 PM.

Dean Cook, Professor Kent, Dr. Gregg, and Professor Daniels will each present a brief speech concerning the steps of professor evaluation in the area of The Dean of Faculties, the Chairman of the Policy Committee, a representative of The American Association of University Professors, and a Department Chairman respectively. A question and answer period will follow.

Work In Europe

GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG: Adventurous students now have an opportunity to work in Europe and earn as much as $400 a month. Among thousands of available jobs, most of which require neither previous experience nor knowledge of a foreign language, are resort work, sales work, hospital work, office work, farm work, and camp counseling.

Wages and working conditions are the same as those of the Europeans with whom the young Americans work. To encourage working in Europe the American Student Information Service (ASIS) is awarding travel grants ranging from $250 to $1000 to all job applicants.

Interested students may obtain the ASIS 36-page booklet containing every job category available in Europe as well as wages, and working conditions by sending $2 (for the booklet, handling and air mail postage) to Dept. XI, ASIS, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

Get That Tiger Off Your Radio

By Stephen Carlson

Sooner or later, most everybody is confronted with the age-old question: "Can a college woman find happiness with a twelve-year-old radio station?" If you really want to impress the next person who asks you that question, just say: "Yes, if that station is WRUV."

WRUV is better than ever this year. One might state the case mildly by saying "Man! This station is the greatest thing since bread, God, and sex!" A more excitable observer might suffer a heart attack while searching in vain for superlatives with which to describe the station. The point is, if you didn't like WRUV last year, give it another try this year. And in case you are ignorant of WRUV, the frequency is 570 kilocycles, it's completely student-operated, and it's closed circuit.

But the big news at WRUV this year is the development of a brand new, separate radio station, WRUV-FM (90.1 megacycles). If you're searching for the bizarre, look no further, friend. For example, who ever heard of a Vermont radio station that broadcasts opera? Or one that features a program on poems from Old English? Or one that presents locally produced plays, interpretations of literature, and panel discussions by the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club! And — get this — no commercials! (Listeners may never find out, for example, whether or not Tom Sweet ever recovers the electric Milky Way machine.)

If you want to impress upon your friends that you are a culture vulture, you can receive your very own program schedule, suitable for framing, just by sending a post card to WRUV-FM, Pomeroy Hall, University of Vermont. But if you really want to amaze your friends, why not join the staff of WRUV-FM? Present plans call for expansion from a six-hour broadcast day to a twelve-hour day. That means twice as many announcers, continuity writers, and opera singers. (That, by the way, is an earnest plea. For details on necessary qualifications, pay, number of hours, etc., contact Prof. William J. Lewis of the speech department.)

But one final word of advice. If you ever do happen to wander into the building which houses WRUV and WRUV-FM, you will see a large poster which reads: "Put a tiger on your radio," below which is a handwritten scrawl — "Put a catamount on your condensor." But disregard the poster. Protect that loveable contraption at all costs from carnivorous beasts — you may want to use it this year.

UVM Wins Debates

By Robin Frost

At the 20th Annual Vermont Invitational Debate Tournament November 19-20, UVM, with eight teams in competition, won 33 debates and lost 9. Five of the UVM teams were undefeated, one of them being the only undefeated affirmative team in the tournament.

The tournament drew debaters from 36 colleges and universities coming from nine states and Canada. Fifty-three debates were going on simultaneously with 212 debaters participating. The topic for debate was "Resolved: that law enforcement agencies in the United States should be given greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime."

In the varsity division, the affirmative team of seniors David Waite (Springfield) and Craig Nelson (Greenville, Maine) went undefeated. The two defeated Mount Holyoke, Massachusetts, Bowdoin, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and Stonehill (Massachusetts).

The affirmative team of sophomore Nicholas Danigellis (Burlington) and senior Michael Schoenfeld (New York City) was also undefeated. They won over Eastern Nazarene (Connecticut), C.W. Post (New York City), Maine, Brooklyn College, and Southern Connecticut State.

The third undefeated varsity team were negative debaters Robin Frost, a sophomore from Haydenville, Massachusetts and Robert Brooks, a senior from Trumbull, Connecticut. Teams representing Emerson (Boston), Bates, McGill, and Southern Connecticut State bowed to the pair.

Affirmatives Ronald Dechene, a senior from Beverly, Massachusetts, and Robert Bullard, a junior from Barre, won over Army and lost to Williams, Bates and Dartmouth.

The UVM "extra" team of Burlington seniors Norman Snow and David Webster defeated Harvard, St. Anselm's (New Hampshire), and Colgate and lost to Bowdoin for a 3-1 record.

In the novice division, two of the four undefeated novice teams in the tournament represented UVM. The freshmen negative team of Robert Gordon (Burlington) and George Phillips (Florence) won all five rounds, defeating McGill, Rochester Institute of Technology, Massachusetts, and Plattsburgh, and NYU Heights.

Also undefeated were novice negatives Sheryl Parker (Springfield) and Priscilla Goekmeyer (Middletown, N.J.), both freshmen. The two won decisions over Williams, Royal Military Academy, Rhode Island College, NYU Heights, and St. Michael's.

Four wins and one loss were credited to the freshman affirmative team of Donna Loizeaux (Whiting) and Virginia Metayer (Waterbury). They defeated NYU Heights, Hartford, McGill, and Norwich, and lost to Army.

Novice affirmatives Ramona Goddard of Orwell and Allan Michaud of Hardwick won over New Paltz (New York) and lost to St. Lawrence (New York), State University of New York at Albany, Maine, and New Hampshire.

The results of the tournament were announced at a banquet held in Marsh Dining Hall Saturday night. UVM President Shannon McCune and Dr. Robert Huber, chairman of the Speech Department, spoke briefly to the debaters. Entertainment was provided by Lois Dodge and Mike Woodard, singing folk songs, and Betty Smith and Tony Mastaler, blue folk singers.

All Systems Go For Ski Lodge

All systems are once again go for the proposed University of Vermont Outing Club ski lodge.

The project appeared destined to have to wait out another year when the lowest bid received for the proposed lodge was $21,000 higher than the $70,000 fund goal authorized by University Trustees.

Refusing to give up the dream of having the lodge for the current season, Outing Club students and University staff investigated the possibility of a "packaged" type lodge, and met with representatives of several different firms.

The result is that the H.J.P. Corporation of Williston, Vt., has been authorized to begin construction on an 85-foot log cabin specially designed to provide the facilities originally planned for the lodge. William S. Cowles, Jr., of Shelburne, will be consulting architect on the project for the University.

Cost of the lodge, which incorporates all the features of the earlier plans plus some additional features, is about $66,000. A proposal will be made to the December meeting of the UVM

Trustees asking approval of inclusion of alternates which would bring total cost to $77,400.

The log cabin will include a full basement, with direct entry from the outside. The first floor will include a large cathedral ceiling activities room, an equipped kitchen, dining area, den, a caretaker's suite, plus a guest room with bunk accommodations for 12.

The second floor will offer bunk room facilities for 48, divided into separate units of 24, each with its own bath facilities.

The $77,400 figure includes cost of built-in bunks with mattresses, and built-in window seats.

The fund drive for the project is continuing. Nearly 500 students have pledged their $35 deposit fee for the fund, and alumni members of the University's Boulder Society, which honors outstanding senior men students, are also beginning an appeal for funds for the project.

The lodge is being constructed in Jeffersonville on a site purchased by the Outing Club with Outing Club and past Kake Walk funds.

General Electric is an easy place to work.

All you need is brains, imagination, drive and a fairly rugged constitution.

Oh, yes. Something else that will help you at G.E. is an understanding of the kind of world we live in, and the kind of world we will live in.

There's a lot happening: The population is continuing to explode. The strain on resources is becoming alarming. At a time when men are being lured by the mysteries of space, we're faced with the task of making life on earth more livable.

There's a lot happening at G.E., too, as our people work in a hundred different areas to help solve the problems of a growing world: Supplying more (and cheaper) electricity with nuclear reactors. Controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams. Providing better street-lighting and faster transportation.

This is the most important work in the world today: Helping to shape the world of tomorrow. Do you want to help? Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Guest Editorial...

Ken Klonsky, a junior from Rockville Center, N.Y., is the CYNIC'S Activities Coordinator.

By Kenneth Klonsky

Al Hirt, immense and jovial trumpeter, appeared for the Lane Series on Tuesday, November 16, in Memorial Auditorium. Needless to say, he and his highly talented sextet performed flawlessly and professionally. However, the performance was marred, as all Lane Series performances have been, by the auditorium itself.

The music reverberated off the ugly blue walls in horrendous fashion. Memorial Auditorium is a gymnasium, at best a high school showplace, where the importance of acoustics was not highly emphasized by its builders. When one gazes up at the basketball backboards he is reminded of this pitiful fact. In short, Memorial Auditorium is no more a place in which fourteen expensive, professional shows should be seen than is the Sahara Desert for a goldfish.

It is time that a music hall was built in Burlington. The hall is a necessity, no more or no less than Centennial Field or Patrick Gymnasium. Burlington will be no more than another town on the way from New York to Montreal, without it. As the largest city in Vermont, it must take the step to bring culture in beautiful surroundings to its receptive populace. And UVM must provide the initiative to the city because it is UVM that brings the talent here. A person living in or around a big city laughs at Burlington because all he can see downtown is The Flynn, The Strong, The State, Pizza By Charles, Valade's, The Castle etcetera, ad infinitum. Some of the hysteria would obviously cease if a music hall stood in place of bleak, dingy Memorial Auditorium, with its hard-backed movable seats.

So Al Hirt was great but he played in a dump. For UVM to move forward as a school and for Burlington to advance as a city, something must be done about constructing a beautiful music hall. As some people are disgusted when they have to play basketball in a dirty, old cage, others are revolted when they have to see Al Hirt or David Oistrakh in a dump. Surely there should be as lasting a monument to the culturally minded as to the athletically oriented at UVM. If not, the University will continue to be a small-minded school in a small college town.

Letters To The Editor Schmokel Scored

To the Editor,

In regard to Professor Schmokel's letter in the CYNIC of November 19, I can only marvel at the touching confidence which he has in the willingness of the Johnson Administration to negotiate its way out of Vietnam. I would hope that his views have been modified after the recent disclosures that peace overtures from North Vietnam were rejected because the "sensitive antennae" of the Secretary of State decided they were not "sincere." I fear, alas, that these were the same "antennae" which led Dean Rusk to believe that the Cuban people were about to rise up against Fidel Castro at the time of the Bay of Pigs fiasco and which led him to conclude that all fifty or so Dominican Communists were about to take over the Dominican Republic a few months ago.

STOP BOMBING

The Letter to the President which I signed made it clear that the bombing of both North and South Vietnam should be brought to a halt and the American arms build-up terminated. It did not call for an immediate withdrawal of all American forces though this should certainly follow fairly rapidly once negotiations have started. The U.S. troops are, after all, the only significant foreign army in Vietnam. Bombing North Vietnam (contrary incidentally to our traditional opposition to retaliatory raids when someone else is the culprit) has failed if its purpose was to break the will and spirit of the Ho Chi Minh regime for as Senator Aiken observed in the Senate on April 21: "Those people over there, I suppose, are not in a mood to negotiate when they see everything they have worked for being blown to pieces by a huge air fleet. Instead of capitulating, they seem to be consumed by a greater hatred for the United States."

CONVERSATION TOPICS

Now I do not believe for a moment that there will be an American Dienbienphu (Chinese intervention could change everything) since American firepower can destroy both parts of Vietnam. But for what purpose? And here I come to the most extraordinary part of Professor Schmokel's letter. He takes the surprisingly unhistorical approach that the reasons for American aggression in Vietnam are simply "conversation topics" while the only item of importance is to defend the reactionary and repressive regime of Nguyen Cao Ky.

As for myself, I can think of nothing more important than our reasons for intervening in Vietnam. For Vietnam is but a part — a large part indeed — of a generally anti-revolutionary commitment which has come to be at the center of American foreign policy. What a tragedy that a country which has a revolutionary heritage of its own should be so chained to outdated slogans that it finds it impossible to play an affirmative role in the social and colonial revolutions which are sweeping the world and seek only to fulfill and to realize that great revolutionary trinity of "liberty, equality and fraternity." Instead — and I borrow from Alexis de Tocqueville — "we have obstinately fixed our eyes on the ruins which may still be descried upon the shore we have left, while the current sweeps us along, and drives us backward towards the gulf." Only self-deception allows us to ignore the fact that a large portion of the world looks upon us as Metemich was regarded in the 19th

Editor's Note:
Merry Andrews, who will be our Sceptic columnist for this academic year, is a member of the University Staff.

By Merry Andrews

"The example of America must be a special example... not merely of peace because it will not fight, but of peace because peace is the healing and elevating influence of the world and strife is not. There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as a nation being so right it does not need to convince others by force that it is right."

— Woodrow Wilson, 1915

"In view of our clear legal and moral commitments to South Vietnam ... of our interest in maintaining non-hostile governments in them, and of our credibility as a great power ... all over the world, surrender must be unacceptable to this country."

— Wolfe Schmokel, 1965

Progress is a lovely thing.

We have grown up, darlings, from a nation dependent on independence and other silliness, to a sophisticated land of men who know the joy of dying in a war our government has not declared, for a cause no one can prove is just.

Ah, the blessings of maturity. Simply look how we've progressed, dears, in only fifty years. (And what untold heights might we reach in yet another half a century?)

Why, in the days of our foolish youth, we fought a war to end all wars, and next a war to make the world safe for democracy. But, thank some god or other, like children we've grown up. And our wars have real purpose now.

The future, at this rate, is going to be just grand. Only thing is, we seem to be running out of people. Four hundred men is the average dead, darlings, in one week, in that jungle. Which is of course not to mention wounded. At this rate, it rather seems we might mature ourselves out of existence, as it were.

But no matter. Such a clever bunch as you are will no doubt figure out something to do when all the men are gone.

And by the way, we'd like to make a suggestion. (Not one of those foolish immature early-American pacifist suggestions; you're far too perceptive to accept them.) A real suggestion. Simply this: when you've got rid of all your men, there is no need to stop the fighting. One need only begin drafting women.

After all, there was a time when the females of the land fought for the right to vote, and got it. But do you realize, kiddies, that half our population sits idly by nowadays, deprived of the delightful right to die?

It's unfair. It's a deprivation of one of the most precious rights of mankind. Dying for something or other.

We would like to suggest that the government launch a huge campaign for the drafting of the womenfolk.

Auntie Sam needs you.

Or "The Marine Corps Builds Women." Which sounds vaguely obscene, but no matter.

Just draft women. Marriage matters no more if you're a man; why, then, if you're a wife?

Perhaps some day, skipping hand in hand, we could all grow up and go to the wars. Because this one will go on perhaps ten years, they tell us. And Yankee ingenuity no doubt will produce other muddy places, other wars.

And in another half century, we might manage to be all gone to the wars, leaving no one, really, to live in this land of our foolish youth. Though perhaps the Indians would want it back.

century — the defender of the status-quo and counter-revolution. What a strange assortment of allies we have acquired in our defense of the so-called "free world." Neglecting the traditions of 1776 we have made no attempt to understand the revolutionary nationalism of the newly developing countries. Fearful of change we have often allowed Communists to take over these movements of default.

Until the release of that spirited attempt at "capitalist realism," the White Paper of February 1965, it was normally accepted that an insurrection or Civil War was being fought in South Vietnam because of the oppressive administration of the late Ngo Dinh Diem who failed to carry out either the reunification elections of 1956 as provided by the Geneva Agreements (former President Eisenhower is quite clear in his memoirs about the tremendous popularity of Ho Chi Minh) or a program of needed social reforms. But when it became apparent that the dictatorship which we supported in Saigon was in the process of vanishing with little more than a whimper, the advocates of "falling dominoes," "preventive war," and "brinkmanship" decided that the true enemy was no longer the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam. No, it was not possible that the people of South Vietnam would withdraw their support from the Saigon regime which we supported — and by definition, of course, we support only "freedom." It must therefore be the result of outside interference — Hanoi, Peking or Moscow. What would our statesmen do without the so-called international Communist conspiracy? This tired canard neglects the astonishing changes which have taken place within the world Communist movement in the last decade. The split between the Soviet Union and Communist China, Titoism and the whole idea of "polycentrism" means that the old view of international communism as a monolithic structure controlled from Moscow is no longer tenable. The ironic effect of our aggression in North Vietnam may well be the re-establishment of unity in the Communist bloc which, I should think, the last thing most Americans would desire though it would greatly simplify matters for those people who prefer a conspiratorial interpretation of history. Ho Chi Minh is a Communist but he is also a Nationalist and is not likely to take orders from either Moscow or Peking.

I would urge President Johnson and Professor Schmokel to consider words uttered in April of 1954 — the French position in Vietnam was rapidly collapsing and the fall of Dienbienphu was imminent — by the then Senator Lyndon B. Johnson. Senator Johnson stated that he was "against sending American G.I.'s into the mud and muck of Indochina on a blood-letting spree to perpetuate colonialism and white man's exploitation in Asia."

Sincerely yours,
Thomas J. Spinner, Jr.

Letters To The Editor

Cynic's Attitude

To the Editor:

I returned to Burlington recently, and I happened to get hold of a copy of the old school newspaper, so I decided to let you know what I thought as I read it. Mary Nye mentioned apathy in her letter. It seemed it can't be too bad, because there were four letters to the editor, which is better than a lot of times I can remember. I was glad to see there are some positive things in the paper, like Merry Andrew's column, which gave a review of a play, without just cutting it up. I don't see why they call the column the Sceptic though, because it makes it sound too critical. I don't see why they call David St. John's column Perception either. The title under it would be more appropriate, which is Frustration. He asks, "Have I made my point?" It seems to me the point is that the CYNIC has had enough of this sort of stuff in the past, and should be congratulated on the positive attitude it seems to have now.

Sincerely,

J. Randall Brown

Article Criticized

To the Editor:

In her article, "The Day that Was," Mary Ellen Anderson displays a striking talent for the chiche-ridden. One hopes she is writing a parody of a parody on Walter Winchell.

Unfortunately her information was garbled. The "air of grief and sorrow" swung quickly to one of hysterical rejoicing with the announcement of the cancellation of classes. The country mourns a great American, who deserves far better tributes than articles such as this one.

...More Criticism

To the Editor,

Mr. St. John claims that we are awash in a sea of apathy. Crusader-columnist Andrews is trying to pull us out. Last week she scolded us grimly for our weak intellectual appetites.

As I trudge through her column, I am strongly tempted to say, as Nelson Algren said of Simone de Beauvoir, "Will she ever quit talking?"

Sincerely,

Mary Ellen Nye, '66

Outing Club Lodge Being Built

To the Editor:

A log cabin ski lodge is now under construction near Madonna Mountain; the existence of this lodge is entirely creditable to the efforts of the Outing Club. It is both unusual and encouraging to see such an impressive product result from the efforts of a campus organization, more so because this project is an extended one, having been started in 1959.

Outing Club members who have spent much time and effort working on this project deserve more credit than one would think before knowing all the facts. Planning the building of a lodge such as this one is in itself a good-size task, but these students started with nothing, save the idea itself, and for five years have been working toward their goal.

A year and a half ago Outing Club petitioned to the Board of Trustees, and was granted permission for a fund drive for $70,000; the estimated cost of construction of the lodge. The drive is being run by Roger Ketcham, '65, who has been working on this project with Mr. George Clerkin, adviser to Outing Club, for the past three years.

Kake Walk has appropriated funds; SA has appropriated $5,000 for construction and $3,000 for first-year operations; a large anonymous donation has been made, and a pledge of one has been given under condition that the lodge be finished by January; approximately 500 students have pledged their $35 deposit; and Outing Club and Boulder Society are now contacting past members, hoping that they may also want to contribute. The response from the student body has been surprisingly strong and quick. As of November 8, approximately $60,000 in funds was available for the project, almost enough, and hopefully the lodge will be ready for use in January.

Mr. Clerkin accounts for the continued interest in the project over the years in the fact that Outing Club's interests are the same each year — hiking, skiing, boating, — and remain the same for both old and new members. Other organizations change as their members change each year, bringing with them perhaps a new philosophy and new interests.

Now the plans have been realized, even bigger and better than initially expected. Mr. Clerkin was kind enough to show me the blueprints for the lodge, and it is really a magnificent project, and one which is and will be a credit to all who have worked for it, including both Outing Club members and the students who came through with donations, they certainly deserve to be proud of themselves.

The lodge is being set up on four acres of land in Jeffersonville, on highway 108, about two miles from the ski area. The Outing Club selected and bought the land, and chose the design for the lodge. There is a kitchen, conference room, sleeping quarters for 62-64 skiers, and plenty of parking space near the highway. There will be a nominal charge to students for spending the night. Madonna Ski Area has granted a discount to Outing Club members for the lifts.

Much credit should be given to those students who have backed this project, and continued to push ahead when opposition presented itself and even the press discouraged them. The Outing Club deserves our praise and our respect, and has proven that college students are not always apathetic, even here at UVM.

Sincerely,

Judy Triplett, '68

Concert Features Christmas Spirit

The annual Christmas program, put on each year by the UVM chorus, will take place this Sunday, Dec. 5 at 4:00 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel.

The concert will include performances by the girl's chorus, which numbers about 20, the mixed choir, which includes about 50 voices, and a third group, the men of the choir, of which there are about 20.

Opening the program will be the girl's chorus singing six carols from the Austria-Tyrol region with accompaniment that includes a piano, a harp, and in one song, a flute. The mixed chorus, coming next, will sing six traditional songs from several lands, all accompanied.

Following a short intermission the men from the mixed chorus will perform three spirituals and assorted Christmas songs. A special Christmas cantata based on Christmas carols — "The Feast of Christmas," by Desmond MacMarion, sung by the mixed choir, will end the formal program. This work will feature six soloists, also John Atwood, a student, will be at the piano.

The concert will be preceded by a prelude of hymns played, on the organ, by Chris Nichols, also a student, and a few carillon numbers.

Following the program refreshments will be served in Billings and the choir will be there to lead the Christmas spirited in a medley of familiar Christmas carols.

Mixes And Matches

By Laurie Frank

Dear All,

I hope you all had a nice Thanksgiving vacation. Winter formals are almost here — make the most of the last big event of this semester.

Heartiest congratulations to Allen Cummings, '66, of Lambda Iota on his pinning to Tina Henn, '66, of Gamma Phi Beta.

All the girls of Alpha Delta Pi send best wishes to Barbara Clark, '67, on her pinning to Roger Lyman, '65, of Acacia, now attending McGill; to Ellen German, '68, on her pinning to Bill Burling, '67; and to Cindy Parker, '66 on her engagement to Hank Dubois, '65, of Theta Chi.

Lots of luck to Denis Apple, '67 of Tri Delta on her engagement to Edward Bailey, '66, of Tau Epsilon Pi.

Best wishes to Marv Feit, '67, of Alpha Epsilon Pi on his engagement to Perry Gross of Dobbs Ferry, New York. Pete Lamb, '67, also of Alpha Epsilon Pi was lauded to Nan Feldman, '69.

Lambda Iota is proud of the following new brothers: Tom Adams, '68; Dave Holton, '68; Allen Cummings, '66; and Steve Curliand, '67. Other new brothers include: Denis Brochu, '68; Don Kruger, '67; Steve Sachs, '68; and Carl Wallin, '68.

Best of luck to Alpha Tau Omega's new pledge, Donald Chase, '67.

The brothers and pledges of SAE would like to congratulate Ed Perry, '67, on his engagement to Miss Patricia Ann Sovey of Bristol, Conn. and Becker Junior College.

Alpha Epsilon Phi enjoyed their tea in honor of David Bain, the new student director.

... aerospace of course. The need for its investigation, exploration, utilization and control make it the preferred space for any power determined to defend its position and interests.

At Grumman we are designing tactical, commercial and scientific vehicles whose missions range from ASW to space stations. Our products include:

- OV-1 Mohawk—Electronics surveillance aircraft for a variety of ground forces.
- S-2E Tracker—Carrier based package of highly specialized ASW electronic systems.
- E-2A Hawkeye—Sophisticated carrier or land base earlier warning aircraft.
- A-6A Intruder—Locates, tracks and destroys targets obscured by weather or darkness.
- F-111B—Supersonic Aircraft of a revolutionary character.
- OAO—Orbiting Astronomical Observatory
- LEM—Lunar Excursion Module to land astronauts on the moon.
- Gulfstream & Gulfstream II—Turboprop and fanjet corporate transports.
- EA-6A—All weather tactical electronics intelligence aircraft.

Grumman with its wide range of programs is virtually a continuous seminar in a technology as boundless as space itself. Here then is the opportunity for graduate engineers who can accelerate their careers by participating in some of the most advanced technical programs of our times.

Stafford Addresses Students

Congressman Robert T. Stafford, Vt. GOP Representative to U.S. House, spoke on "The Lawyer in Politics" Nov. 19 at an open meeting sponsored by the Student Law Association.

Mr. Stafford, a well known figure in Vermont politics and most notably a former governor, began his talk by giving a brief summary of legislative processes. He then went on to say that many congressmen are lawyers, and that lawyers compose a large part of the professional staff as well.

Another interesting aspect of the talk was the Representative's description of an average congressman's day. Then, after speaking about several pieces of new legislation Mr. Stafford concluded the informal address by answering questions.

On Nov. 23, following a short business meeting, Dean Godfrey of the University of Maine Law School spoke to the Student Law Association on the role of the judge in our legal system. Mr. Godfrey received his BA at Harvard, his LLB at Columbia, and held a Ford Foundation Fellowship at Harvard Law School. Judge O'Brien will speak at the Association's next meeting, Dec. 7, on the topic of Probate Law.

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director of Placement

Since November 1, employers have been visiting the Placement Office to recruit our BS/MS/Ph.D. candidates in the Graduate and Technology Colleges. While it is still too early to predict how our 1966 "technicals" will fare, some of the predictions around the country are worthy of note. From the West Coast the most notable change in graduate student recruiting will be that, for the first time in many years, science graduates may not receive the highest salary offers. Ph.D. economists will receive better offers than their peers in engineering and science. This is due to a simultaneously strong demand for economists from government, universities, and industry. Demand for engineers and scientists will remain strong, but selective. In the midwest government employment is not attracting as well as it did a year ago, and sales opportunities for engineers are going begging. Any trend prediction is difficult because of the Vietnam situation, but if the country does not go into emergency action and we are able to maintain business as usual, your writer looks forward to another all-out recruiting year, in which more employers will visit our campus to compete for this year's graduates. The trend to continue in school after a bachelor's degree appears to be in high gear on campuses generally. Although more science/technical employers request advanced-degree-holders than previously, the number of opportunities will lessen as the supply of those who qualify increases. Salaries will no doubt continue to follow the pattern of the past with employers, feeling that by offering more, they will attract the candidates they want. All types of engineering degrees will be in high demand in the year ahead and if defense industries accelerate under government pressures, it is safe to assume that the recent trend away from this type of career will show a reversal. To date, over 95% of our seniors in Technology have had one or more job interviews. The reaction on the part of our technical employer recruiters is that this is one of the best groups seen at UVM. In subsequent articles I shall attempt to appraise the non-technical and our women graduates of the pending employment market.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

PLACEMENT OFFICE NON-TEACHER REGISTRATION DEADLINE. Employment interviews for all seniors and graduate college candidates who expect to receive a degree in 1966, excluding Technology, will occur in the Placement Office from February 1 through March 18. The complete schedule of employers visits will be mailed to the campus address of all registrants during inter-semesters. The deadline for filing Registration Papers if you intend to take Campus Interviews, is 5:00 P.M. Friday, December 10, 1965.

G. FOX & CO. INVITES UVM SENIORS AND JUNIORS TO CAREER DAY PROGRAM. On Wednesday, December 29, 1966, G. Fox & Co., of Hartford, Conn., will hold its annual Career Day Program. All students who are interested in retailing as a career are invited to attend. Those interested should stop by the Placement Office in lower Waterman and pick up Program Invitations. This program is worth attending.

THE BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS HAS FLOWN THE COOP

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery.

I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Knut Fusco.

Knut, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A," was awarded his B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, his M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and his D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Cutworms) in only four.

Academic glory was his. His intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was he happy? The answer, alas, was no. Knut—he knew not why—was miserable; so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, he was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that he flung himself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by, a liberal arts coed named Nikki Sigafos came by with her Barbby doll. She noted Knut's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said Nikki.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Knut peevishly.

"All right, I will," said Nikki. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy stuffing your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant, gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

Knut shook his head.

"Have you ever watched a sunset? Written a poem? Shaved with a Personna Stainless Steel Blade?"

Knut shook his head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now," said Nikki, and gave him a razor, a Personna Stainless Steel Blade, and a can of Burma Shave.

Knut lathered with the Burma Shave and shaved with the Personna and for the first time in many long years he smiled. He smiled and then he laughed—peal after peal of reverberating joy. "Wow-wow!" he cried. "What a shave! Does Personna come in injector style, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Gloriosky!" cried Knut. "And does Burma Shave come in menthol, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Huzzah!" cried Knut. "Now that I have found Personna and Burma Shave I will never have another unhappy day."

"Hold!" said Nikki. "Personna and Burma Shave alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Knut. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said Nikki.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Knut. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said Nikki and removed it.

"Land's sakes, what a relief!" said Knut, now totally happy, and took Nikki's hand and led her to a Personna vendor and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Knut is a perfectly fulfilled man, both intellectually and personalitywise. He lives in a charming split-level house with Nikki and their 17 children and he rises steadily in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, he became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, he was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and he published a best-selling book called I Was a Slippery Elm for the FBI.

News Around The World

During Thanksgiving weekend 615 people lost their lives in automobile accidents throughout the country. This is 61 more road deaths than for the same time last year.

.....

The war in Viet Nam gets bloodier, but Defense Secretary Robert McNamara thinks that we are beginning to win. He said that more U.S. troops will be needed as the result of "a clear decision by Hanoi to escalate infiltration." Exactly how many more men will be sent to Viet Nam is not known but the Administration promises to put everything necessary into the war effort.

.....

The cost of the war in Viet Nam coupled with cost of the programs for the "Great Society" will send the 1967 budget above the record mark. The word is that the budget will hit the 107 billion dollar mark.

The Sino-Soviet split may have reached the point of no return. Peking has threatened to break from the world communist movement and start a new movement separate from Russia. The break would result from the feeling that Russia is straying from the "true" Marxist-Leninist ideals and is not militantly anti-capitalist enough.

The meeting of a world disarmament conference not later than 1967 has been approved by the United Nations. The U.N. has invited Red China to attend the discussions.

Politics—French Style —deGaulle

By Carolyn Seigel (in France)

How different the French presidential campaign is from the American! de Gaulle announced last week, as was generally expected, that he would seek another term of office, thus making official the campaign for the election on December 5. Other major contenders for office have been campaigning ever since they decided to run or since they consolidated their backers. There are many things that are strange in this campaign, but the strangest of all is de Gaulle's peculiar influence over the people.

Last week when de Gaulle announced his candidacy, he told the French people that he was still irreplaceable. He said that if he were re-elected "the future of France would be assured definitely." He went on to say that if he were not re-elected one could expect France to "crumble" (that was approximately his word), and succumb to worse confusion than ever before. This statement strikes me as unbelievable.

IDENTIFIES WITH FRANCE

de Gaulle seems to have an almost mystical identification with France. He tries to convince his public that he represents the destiny of their country, and by the reaction in the press, I think he is still succeeding. He seems to be considered a hero, representing the greatness of France, stability, prosperity, and peace. He is a father figure, and appeals especially to women voters. It seems that the average French peasant swallows whole what he says.

Everyone — followers and critics alike — admires his political style, and no wonder. This man is marvelous to watch. It is incredible that someone in his position gets away with what he does. I cannot imagine President Johnson or any American presidential candidate doing or saying the same things.

The reactions to his speech were somewhat mixed. No one was surprised at what he said or at how he said it. Newspapers supporting him ran banner headlines, and I read that the UNR pledged its continuing support. Of course his critics, especially the opposition politicians and the opposition press, accused him of the usual arrogance and of "confusing his own destiny with that of France."

I think you would be interested in one comment from La Marseillaise, a Communist paper, which we examined in my government class. It ran something like this: "France, according to de Gaulle, is ultimately going to fall apart, since in all practicality he is not going to be President forever. When he ceases to be the head of state, France will fall into the depths of chaos that he predicts. Of course, they don't say that many of de Gaulle's programs have as their goal year 1967, and not the end of time."

It's an odd, but fairly well-accepted fact that even those who have objections to de Gaulle will vote for him in the end. This is true, according to my government professor, because they will realize what the opposition is or lacks.

THE OPPOSITION

A word about the opposition, which is a rather amusing group to watch. It includes at least five other candidates, all of whom have said their objective is not to win, just to organize a good solid group of voters for apres de Gaulle. The only one who seems to have a chance to get a share of the vote is Francois Mitterand, a Deputy of the Democratic Left Coalition in the National Assembly. He has been given the backing of the Socialist and Communist parties and seems to be an active campaigner. The rest are mostly nonentity types except for Tixier-Vignancour, who is ultra-right.

The other night I saw a newsreel at the movies on the election which presented short sketches of all the candidates. One candidate as shown shooting darts, another playing tennis, a third riding a horse, a fourth working on a farm with pigs, and a fifth lecturing in an empty classroom. The focus was on their family lives. However, de Gaulle's sketch showed him with Queen Elizabeth, General Eisenhower, for whom the French have a high regard as a General, and President Kennedy. Incidentally, all the candidates are given equal time on radio and television which the government pays for.

MOURNING CLOTHES

Tixier-Vignancour and Mitterand are quite popular here in Southern France. When de Gaulle's portrait was on the screen, there was a good deal of booing and hissing, but there was laughter at the other candidates. My French mother is extremely upset about the forthcoming election and has informed me that if de Gaulle wins, we will eat only leftovers and we will wear mourning clothes. She was annoyed with de Gaulle's speech because he deliberately appeals to the peasants who, as she puts it, "don't know any better than to vote for him." She cried after his speech and was able only to say "pauvre France."

CONCLUSION

It's really exciting here now because elections occur only once every seven years. Whether de Gaulle enjoys the exercise of power, or the thought of being the first head of state elected by the people since Louis Napoleon in 1848, or whether he sincerely believes he is the saving grace and guiding light of France, I don't know; but he is a terrific politician. While he does concentrate on convincing everyone of his greatness and indispensability, and although he does get a little obnoxious, I have to admit that he's done a tremendous amount for France, and will in all probability, continue to do so. But I can't help thinking that it would add to his great "Apres Moi" with something more positive than "le deluge."

That's the political situation from here, as I see it!

AUGUSTINE SERIES FEATURES PANEL

One of the heroes of Selma, Ala., Rev. Maurice Oullette, S.S.E., will be on the panel when the UVM Newman Center presents a forum on "The White Problem in America" in the Billings Marsh Room, Thursday, Dec. 9, at 7:30 p.m.

Pastor of a Negro parish in Selma during the freedom demonstrations, Fr. Oullette made the nation's news media when he abetted white and Negro freedom marchers and published a stirring letter on racial justice in the local paper.

With Fr. Oullette on the panel will be Prof. Cleveland Williams, chairman of the department of government, St. Michael's College, and Rt. Rev. Monsignor Edward J. Fitzsimmons, head of the Vermont NAACP.

The panel will consider the charge presented by Ebony magazine that America is confronted with a white problem rather than a Negro problem in the racial issue.

Sixth in the current Augustine series presented by the UVM Newman Center, and forum will be open to the public.

Mailbag Gives Reasons For Thanks

A University, like individuals, has much for which it is thankful.

Irene Allen, publications assistant in the public relations office at the University of Vermont and editor of the UVM Mailbag, the faculty-staff "newspaper" published every other week, has compiled "Occasions of November Thankfulness at Vermont" for the current issue of Mailbag.

Here are some of the occasions:

1910: University is to be congratulated upon the adoption of the four years' medical course with which change the college assumes a place in the front rank of medical schools.

1915: Movement fraught with great possibilities of good for the University was begun this month when a student mass meeting ... had as its object the formation of a Student Union ... to promote a general spirit of fraternity ... and loyalty to the University.

1920: Faculty bibliography published in Vol. 17, No. 2 of "UVM Notes."

1925: Vermont Alumni Weekly features work of Dr. John M. Wheeler, '02, who "Saves eyesight of hundreds of human beings."

1927: University aids flood relief; senior medics go to Waterbury relief center.

1930: From Congo Institute, Katanga, to M.D. Powers, YMCA secretary: "I think you will be surprised how much your money ($391.91 collected on the campus in the Smalley Campaign) can do. Your gift was 13,873.61 francs; 1,770 will build the Vermont house for boys."

1935: To the Alumni Office: "I am sending you $1.00. It seems a very small amount, but, like most of the rest of the world, I am in the clutches of the depression. I trust that the alumni, as a body, will rally to your aid."

1937: Mary Jean Simpson, '13, to return to Vermont as Dean of Women.

1940: Cornerstone of new Waterman administration building laid on Oct. 12.

1945: "Many service men are now receiving their discharges from the forces. Please keep us notified." — The Alumni Office.

1947: Remodeling, decorating in Williams Science Hall has resulted in additional chemistry and zoology laboratories.

1950: Fame of Vermont maple trees travels far ... University's experimental seedlings sent to Argentina, Hungary, Canada, New Zealand, Germany.

1955: Cats stop Panthers 6-0 to win state title, upsetting Middlebury on their home ground in a sea of mud.

1957: Ground broken for Phase I of new College of Medicine Building ... First Phase of $7.8 million building will include pathology laboratory, clinical research facilities.

1960: New Guy W. Bailey Memorial Library expected to be in use in about a year.

If you have never been zapped -- beware! -- the disease or movement or game is spreading!

In an exclusive CYNIC interview with Joe Soldano, '67, a floor counselor from West New York, N.J., some of the astounding facts were ferreted out concerning UVM's fastest growing cult.

Actually, according to Mr. Soldano, the number of fanatical, official Zap Club members is only about 15, but there seems to be little the administration can do to prevent the spread of the system to perhaps scores of such little groups all over campus.

To the unexperienced, there is a mysterious element in the concept of zapping, but there are certain definite rules also.

To zap a person you point your forefinger (two fingers are permissible but veterans find one faster) in the form of a gun at someone and say, "Zap!" Sounds simple -- but wait.

According to official Zap Club rules, zapping is only permitted from 8 AM to 12 PM. You cannot zap someone from a car or through a window but through an open door is permissible. You cannot zap someone on or from a bed. This rule is important if your roommate is a zapper.

Once you have zapped someone, he can't zap you that day. A zapper's dream is to have a perfect day, in which he zaps everyone else in his zap group without being zapped first. He may go to great lengths to achieve a perfect day.

One ruse which may fool a wary zapper is to call up your victim from the next floor and then rush to that floor and zap the person as he comes from his room to answer the phone. (Warning: a person must be within a reasonable distance of his victim for a zap to be legal.)

Burlington residents have been astounded to see college students sneaking down busy sidewalks trying to get within range of friends. One of the best times to get someone unaware is when he is coming into the dining hall carrying a full tray. Avid zappers have even been known to send out telegrams with the single word, "Zap!"

According to Mr. Soldano, you feel great when you achieve a perfect day or spoil someone else's, but if you get zapped too many times in one day, "you feel very depressed." If you are a conscientious zapper for a while, "you become very neurotic."

A dangerous side-effect of the zap system is that you begin unconsciously to zap innocent bystanders, such as your profs and little old ladies walking down the street. This can be disturbing to all parties concerned.

On campus now there are probably hundreds of people who are zapping each other but most are misusing the power. Just one word to people who plan to begin new clubs -- ZAPI!

Music Comes From Moscow

The Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Kiril Kondrashin, highlighted the 1965-66 Lane Series concerts thus far. Ranked among the top five Symphony Orchestras in the world, the meticulous and sensitive artists had the sometimes over-receptive audience delighted and exhilarated the observer. To top off this exceptional evening of music, the guest violinist was David Oistrakh, master of his trade, considered by most critics to be the best in the world.

THE OPENING

The orchestra opened with Maurice Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole." This fine opening number gave the audience a fair idea of the breadth and scope of this magnificent orchestra. The pulsating music seemed to swirl, spin, and leap in a joyous motion. Kondrashin, a huge and sometimes menacing conductor, exercised a confident control over the music.

The next work was Dmitri Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 9" opus 70. This symphony was completed about a month after the end of World War II. It seemed peculiar for the composer to have written such a lively, romping symphony, for many of his early works were of a brooding and serious nature. The orchestra performed almost flawlessly, again.

THE CLIMAX

The climax of the evening occurred when David Oistrakh took his place below Kondrashin, who appeared more towering and impressive on the podium than ever. Oistrakh proceeded to hypnotize the audience with a dazzling, almost magical, demonstration of violin playing. The piece was Johannes Brahms' "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra" in D Major Op. 77, and one may be certain that the great Romantic composer would have been brimming with pleasure to see and hear his beautiful music played so exquisitely. The sound was a rare treat indeed, and the orchestra, despite a long and tedious bus ride, seemed to rise to the occasion and give the maestro a superb accompaniment. It is doubtful that Burlington will again see such an artist as David Oistrakh. His efforts received a well-deserved, standing ovation.

The final piece of music was another modern one, this by Paul Hindemith, "Symphonic Metamorphosis on themes by Carl Maria Von Weber" concluded a perfect concert in most exciting fashion.

WEAKENING TIES

The Moscow Philharmonic is part of the gradually weakening Russian-American cultural exchange program. Any further weakening would be disastrous to both music and peace lovers. A Russian Official from the Culture Ministry in the USSR, reiterated in an interview "the cliché, but it's true, that it's the only way to international understanding." It may not be too presumptuous to say that the Moscow Philharmonic and David Oistrakh communicated that message beautifully.

Work Camp Success

The Burlington Work Camp was organized in 1964 through the efforts of the Burlington Friends Meeting. It soon gained impetus and was reorganized to include members of all religions. The Rev. Richard Leidberg was advisor of the group. The Rev. John Perry has succeeded Rev. Leidberg. Two work camps were held last year in the Burlington slums. John Lindley III organized both of the campaigns.

The past experiences have left the participants in perplexing quandries. Exactly how effective are these work camps in improving the conditions of the slums?

The Cambridge Meeting of Friends has made it clear that this type of work is "passe." The Meeting is now tutoring children. Why has this sudden change come about? The main reason is that freshly-painted walls offer only a short term benefit to the inhabitants. An immediate feeling of cleanliness and confidence cannot conceal the inevitable problems of providing a better environment and life for a family.

The Burlington Work Camp of the past must undergo some radical changes in order to meet the new challenges of aiding the poverty-stricken population.

Two speakers directly involved with the poverty problem will speak on December 2, 1965 at 7:15 PM in the lounge of St. Anselm's Chapel. Mr. Alan D. Sophrin, presently associated with the government's "War on Poverty," and Miss Margaret Whittlesey, a veteran of social work, will both present their ideas on waging the "War on Poverty" through student efforts. Plans will also be discussed for the organization of next semester's work camps.

Republicans Sweep State

By Eloise Roberts

The Republican Party of Vermont scored a stunning upset in the court-ordered general elections on Tues., Nov. 23rd. While pre-election observers gave the GOP a possible 90 to 60 edge in the House and a 19 to 11 majority in the Senate, the voters awarded the Republicans majorities of 115 to 35 and 24 to 6 in the respective chambers.

LOCAL RESULTS

One of the most surprising GOP victories was here in the Chittenden - Grand Isle County District. For years considered the fortress of Democratic strength in Vermont, the area now has the chairman of the Republican State Committee as one of its state senators.

Voters gave Derrick V. Webb of Shelburne an easy victory as he came in second in an eleven-way race for six senate seats. The only candidate who won greater support from the electorate was Democrat John J. O'Brien who ran on both tickets. Other winners were Frederick J. Fayette, who came in third followed by Charles L. Delaney, both Democrats.

The fourth man in the race was also somewhat of a surprise. Fiore Bove, a Democrat and owner of a downtown Burlington restaurant and a relative newcomer to politics, showed unexpected strength outdrawing two Democratic incumbents as he won his Senate seat.

The winner of the sixth seat is still undecided as only one vote, 7028 to 7027, separated Hector T. Marcoux, veteran Democratic legislator, and Edward A. Keenan, former Republican Mayor of Burlington. And George J. Marcoux, another incumbent, trails by only 33 votes with a total of 6994. Both Marcoux and McGregor have already requested a recount and the occupant of this seat will have to be decided by the outcome of this new count.

Republicans also did surprisingly well in races for House seats, capturing a 15 of a total 27 seats in Chittenden County.

The results of this special election soundly refuted the allegation made by Lt. Gov. John Daley only one week prior to election day; the two-party system in Vermont is on its way out and there will soon be only one party left in the state, "and that will be the Democratic one."

HOFF COMMENTS

The Democratic reaction to Tuesday's results was best summed by Gov. Hoff who said, "Let's face it - it is a horrendous defeat," and surprise seems to be prevalent in all quarters. There seem to be several possible explanations for the Republican landslide, none of which seem totally satisfactory. There was a degree of apathy and complacency on the part of Democrats; while Republicans, worried about the status of their party, organized and got out the vote. Another factor was some voter dissatisfaction with Hoff's recent policies and his habit of bypassing local government.

But whatever factors may account for the Democratic debacle, one thing is certain - the Grand Old Party in Vermont is still very much alive and kicking.

Students Participate In U.R.I. Administration

Kingston, R.I. (I.P.) -- Student unrest has swept across the nation's college campuses, giving rise to all sorts of incidents and questions. At the University of Rhode Island, the administration has been quietly trying to bridge and gap between the student body and itself.

For many years students have been serving on campus committees concerned with university and student regulations. This trend received further impetus recently when Dr. Francis H. Horn, URI president, gave students a voice on a number of standing faculty committees dealing with a wide range of subjects.

President Horn named one student each to committees on convocations, the history of the university, commencement and ceremonial occasions, visiting scholars and the library as well as housing and campus beautification. In making the appointments, Dr. Horn was following recommendations of the Student Senate. "I feel that students have a place on these committees and can make a contribution to them," he said.

Faculty Senate on this campus has also established close communications with student government. The Senate has passed a resolution asking colleges, departments and other academic units of the University to ask students to sit on their curriculum committees, holding no vote, but with the opportunity to voice their opinions.

The resolution, which is not necessarily binding, followed a similar one sent to the faculty by the Student Senate. Students have also asked the Faculty Senate to place students on standing Senate committees of academic standards, ROTC liaison, by-laws, honors program, university calendar and educational procedures. Faculty Senate requested a brief to be submitted by the Student Senate stating why it feels students would make valuable contributions to those committees.

Dr. H. Perry Jeffries, chairman of the Faculty Senate, praised the smooth communication and committee work that has transpired between the two government bodies. "I feel the most important thing the Faculty Senate has accomplished this year was to take a hard look at relationships within the various units of the University and their future," Dr. Jeffries observed.

Dr. Jeffries explained that the executive committee of the two Senates were in close contact this year and attributed the success of student desires on that intimate relationship.

Commenting on the policy of active student participation in University affairs, Dr. Horn said, "I think we should involve students more in the total discussion of University policies and practices, but I don't think the university should be run by students."

"I am not sure that the interest students demonstrate is always channeled in the right direction. They are often too quick to reach a decision, seeing problems only in terms of black and white, and not in the infinite shades of grey in between. Since there is such a rapid change-over in students, they do not have to live with their decisions, but we do," he concluded.

Graduate Conference Held Nov. 10

The Graduate Conference of Nov. 10 is now past history, but for those who missed it, we will review a few of its important points. The speakers were Dr. MacMillan, Gordon Perine, and Mr. McDowell.

Dr. MacMillan, Dean of UVM's Graduate College, spoke first. While stressing the need for advanced education he mentioned criteria for deciding who should go to graduate school. According to Dr. MacMillan there are two conditions involved in your personal decision: 1) you must evaluate your ability and determination to succeed, and 2) you should explore your interests in your field to discover how deep and how sincere they are. Dr. MacMillan also noted that students should begin in their sophomore year and plan their advancement according "to fundamentals, not techniques."

On the subject of choosing graduate schools, Dr. MacMillan stated that cost, size, and geographic location should be taken into consideration. The student should be critical and judge each school by specific departments. Getting aid from present professors will help too. Before choosing, Dr. MacMillan provided some information on graduate school application for his audience of graduate hopefuls.

Gordon Perine, Middlebury College Placement Director, was the second speaker. His topic concerned graduate school interviews. Interviews are, he stated, "an opportunity to find out about a school and make an impression on the interviewer." Mr. Perine suggested that, when being interviewed, you should: be on time, be neat, have a good firm handshake, and be familiar with the school at which you are having the interview. You should sell yourself to the interviewer."

The third and last speaker was Mr. McDowell, who closed the session by speaking on financial aid. Most important of his statements was that "every qualified candidate can now be assured of financial aid if needed." Mr. McDowell mentioned types of aid and explained how to apply for them.

As a closing note, Mr. McDowell stated that "neither an 'A' nor a 'B' average is necessary for consideration of a Fellowship." Motivation is important.

If you were unable to attend the conference and/or you have any questions, the UVM Placement Service is there for the answers.

Pray-In Is A Success

By Alice Dupuis

On Sunday night at 7:00 PM approximately 350 students and townspeople gathered at Ira Allen Chapel for a Kennedy Memorial Pray-In for Peace.

Reverends Philip Branon and Thomas Beary of the Newman Center together with James Cantwell, Arts and Sciences, '66, and the Newman Executive Committee first conceived the idea for a pray-in about a month and a half ago. It then developed into an interfaith observance with both the Protestant and Jewish organizations on campus taking part.

The main purpose of the pray-in was peace in our time. No political view was taken. James Cantwell stated during the planning stages, "a lot of us are deeply concerned over the tensions arising from conflicts in Vietnam and elsewhere. We surmise that national tensions will increase. We'd like to do something to help, something positive."

Since the pray-in was planned for the day before the 2nd anniversary of President Kennedy's assassination, it was also a Kennedy memorial.

Taking part in the program were Fr. Branon and Fr. Beary, the Catholic Chaplains at UVM, the Reverend Donald B. Boyer, Episcopal Chaplain, the Reverend John D. Perry, Protestant Chaplain, Rabbi Max Wall of Chavi Zedek Synagogue, and Prof. Harry Kahn, UVM German Dept. and Hillel advisor. Three seniors also participated: Rhoda Zandan, Arts and Sciences, from Hillel Foundation, Edward Phillips, Arts and Sciences, of the Inter-University Christian Fellowship, and James Cantwell.

The atmosphere was one of purposefulness. Those who came knew why they had come.

The litany given by Fr. Boyer ended with the prayer "that we may bring reason and acknowledgement of your loving will to the task of solving our problems as a nation; that we do not lose any opportunity for a just peace; we beseech You to hear us good Lord."

CATS DOWN DARTMOUTH 60-52

From the
Cat's Mouth

Speed, defense, depth, and natural ability, are the ingredients for a successful basketball season. This season, UVM rivals will encounter double trouble in competing with UVM Varsity and Freshmen Squads. The Freshmen team, the building block of Varsity ball, should provide many exciting moments for UVM supporters this year. According to Coach Lapointe, now in his 12th year of coaching frosh ball at UVM, "the team is substantially stronger from that of last year." This fact is clearly evidenced from watching one of the frosh's afternoon practices.

In the backcourt, Terry O'Leary, Bob Jacobs, Jim Evleti and Barry Coughlin will see most of the action.

Jacobs and Evleti provide speed, playmaking, and, on any given night, the possibility of many points. Add to this the defensive play of O'Leary and Coughlin, and the result is devastating for UVM opposition. According to Coach Lapointe, "the squad will run a great deal if we can pull the boards." The boys who will be grabbing those rebounds are Dave Lapointe, Bruce Nelson, Richard Kellogg, Richard Segal, Brian Cochran, and Jeff Plunkett. From pre-season observation, probably Lapointe and Kellogg will see much of the early action. Dave Lapointe, a standout in prep-school has come along fine under the tutorship of his dad, Coach Lapointe. He moves very well for a boy his size (6-2) while his ability as a scorer cannot be overlooked. Coupled with Rich Kellogg, the positions up front provide scoring and rebounding. The third man up front, usually referred to as the center, will be Jeff Plunkett. Jeff has the potential, but only time will tell if it has reached maturity. If he lacks anything, it will be his lack of height for a "big man" as he stands only 6 ft. 4 inches. Rounding out the squad are Dan Greene, Al Kerner, Ivan Meisner, Brian Doubleday, and Karl Ballentine. Responsible for equipment are the managers, Ron Johnson and Don Carpenter.

With a twelve game schedule ahead, all the ingredients for success are present. Hopefully they will be nurtured to maturity, while enabling the frosh squad to complete an undefeated season. This is coach Lapointe's hope, and I wish him the best!

UVM Names All-Opponent Team

Middlebury College dominated the 1965 University of Vermont's all-opponent soccer team.

The Panthers, who sent undefeated in regular season play, placed seven members of their squad on Vermont's first team and three more on the second.

Norwich, Maine and Massachusetts round out the spots on the first unit while New Hampshire and Rhode Island took three positions on the second team.

Named to the first team were:

Goal - Larry Martin, Massachusetts.

Fullbacks - J. Davis Webb and Peter Kovner, both of Middlebury.

Halfbacks - Richard Hall and Didier Raymond of Middlebury, Phil Oxnham, Norwich.

Outsides - Michael Doherty and John Garrison, Middlebury.

Insides - David Nicholson, Middlebury; Ahamed Hamid, Maine.

Center-Forward - Martin Wilkes, Norwich.

Second team:

Goal - Bayard Russ, Middlebury.

Fullbacks - Raymond Yando and Manuel Leitao, Massachusetts.

Halfbacks - William Sumer, Middlebury; Michael Russo, Massachusetts; Justiniano, New Hampshire.

Outsides - Abateni Ayanoba, Massachusetts; Parsons, Rhode Island.

Insides - Samater, New Hampshire; William Burgess, Massachusetts.

Center-Forward - Peter Marks, Middlebury.

UNH Stops Cats 5-2

Powerful New Hampshire will provide the opposition Wednesday as the University of Vermont hockey team opens a 19-game schedule under new coach Jim Cross. The face off is slated for 3 p.m. in the Gutterson Fieldhouse.

The Catamounts are hoping to improve on last year's 5-11 mark and have a number of veterans returning. Six lettermen will be on hand for the opening contest.

Leading the veterans are last year's scoring leaders Marshall Stevenson and Ozzro Swett. The other returning players are forward John Rutledge and Henry Uihlein, and defensemen Jim Klode and Bob Snyder.

The Cats also have three promising sophomores who played with the varsity when Vermont was granted permission to use freshmen. They are John Semler, Lee Roy and Curt Tobey.

The goalie for the opening contest appears to be Don Henson, a junior from Providence, R.I. Henson was scheduled to start two years ago for the varsity but was injured in the preseason workouts and sat out the season.

New Hampshire will bring another probable Yankee Conference championship team to Burlington for the contest. The Wildcats have been poison to the Green and Gold for the past two seasons, sweeping six straight games. Veterans Bob McCarthy and Brad Houston lead the New Hampshire attack.

Cross is serving as interim coach at Vermont, replacing Bill Ruffer who resigned. Cross was a wing on Boston University's 1960 NCAA squad.

The Cats are facing their toughest schedule since resuming hockey three years ago. The slate calls for home-and-home contests with Middlebury and Norwich to decide the state crown along with games against Hamilton, Colby and Boston State.

KITTENS OPENS vs DARTMOUTH

Two familiar names will be in the lineup as the University of Vermont freshman basketball team opens its season against Dartmouth Wednesday at 6 p.m. in the Patrick Gym.

The Kittens will play a 10-game schedule this season, with the Dartmouth contest the only game before the exam and vacation break.

The familiar names belong to 6-3 Dave Lapointe and 6-4 Jeff Plunkett, Lapointe, son of freshman basketball coach Ralph Lapointe, is regarded as one of the best prospects to enter UVM in recent years. He starred with Winooski High School for two years and then went on to break scoring records at Deerfield Academy for two campaigns.

Also expected to be in the lineup is Plunkett, who played on two state championship teams and one runner-up at Spaulding High School in Barre. Plunkett is a good rebounder and can also score.

A third Vermonter who may be in the starting lineup is Jim Evleti of Burlington. Evleti played his basketball for Bernie Cleplicki at Rice Memorial and has been impressive.

Other Vermonters on the squad are Al Kerner of Essex Junction, Brian Doubleday of Class I champion Woodstock and Karl Ballantine of Highgate.

Two points for Higgs - Layne's excellent jump-shot will be a key instrument in the Cat's offense.

Art Loche will make his varsity coaching debut at the University of Vermont Wednesday as the Catamount cagers open a 20-game schedule against an improved Dartmouth quintet at the Patrick Gym at 8 p.m.

Loche is taking over for the retired Fuzzy Evans. He had been assistant coach at New York University before coming to the Green Mountain State. Loche was also a defensive star for the Violets while in college and some of this experience will be needed by Vermont this year.

Certain to be in the starting lineup for the Catamounts, are co-captains Milt Goggans and Layne Higgs. Goggans averaged 12.3 points a game last season and pulled down rebounds at a 12.1 clip. Higgs was the second leading Vermont scorer last season with a 16.6 average. Both will be starting for the third straight year.

Loche has not announced any set starting lineup and has said during the pre-season that it will depend on the opponent's capabilities.

Players who can expect to see plenty of action are senior Ken Spalter, juniors Russ Boardman and Bruce Hanne and sophomores Bill Librera and Bruce Lombard.

Dartmouth is still in the rebuilding stage but is hoping to improve its 4-21 mark of last season and escape the Ivy League cellar. With a large squad of seasoned juniors and some promising sophomores, the future looks brighter for the Big Green. Heading into his 30th year of college coaching will be Doggie Julian, Vermont's Fuzzy Evans, who retired after 23 years' last season, was Julian's only competition for length of service honors in New England.

The Cats play at home again Saturday in the Yankee Conference opener against the University of Massachusetts and then host Maine for two games the following weekend.

UVM Co-Captain Milt Goggans goes up for shot as he is closely guarded by U Conn star Toby Kimball.

The Vermont Cynic

VOLUME 83

UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT, BURLINGTON, VERMONT

DECEMBER 10, 1965

NUMBER 21

We're Trite? So Are You

By Eloise Roberts
Marion Robinson

"What is wrong with The CYNIC is what is wrong with the student body; we moan about things, but do anything? Never."

This was the general consensus expressed by the "several" students who responded to "The CYNIC Poll" (printed last week). Actually, these are only some of the ideas that were expressed, but we wanted to thank all 26 of you who responded, for your constructive criticism.

A majority of the responses called for more opinion on current campus issues. As a Junior from Massachusetts expressed it, "Don't stick to the superficial stuff and don't stay away from the controversial."

However, a number seemed to feel that there has been improvement in the paper recently. One thoughtful commentator remarked, "A year or so ago, The CYNIC hit a new low in journalism with its acrimonious, bitter, unconstructive editorials and tripe, which were a reflection upon the quality of our students. I commend the present staff and advisor for a refreshing change." Nevertheless, there is still much room for improvement, including proofreading and effective headlines. Also, there seems to be a general feeling that certain columns should be eliminated or altered.

It is apparent that "Sceptic" is not appreciated by all members of the student body. One Freshman commits, "The greatest fault of The CYNIC, however, is in allowing the publication of 'Sceptic' by Merry Andrews. I seriously doubt that I can survive another semester of 'I'd Rather - Be - Red - Than - Dead Propaganda.'" An experienced Junior says, "'Sceptic' -- it should be written by someone who represents the students' opinions, rather than one who is an . . . outsider."

"Mixes and Matches" received its share of criticism. One professor says, "Mixes and Matches" is absolutely intolerable in a University paper -- there is no excuse whatsoever for this drivel." At the same time, it received some support, but it was suggested that the facts be checked and permission be obtained from the parties involved.

There was, also, some comment that the sports coverage was not sufficiently comprehensive. A general opinion was "It seems to me that it is basic to cover every varsity sports contest. You do not."

It has been said and will again be said that the student newspaper is ourselves -- "We the students, draft-dodgers, husband-hunters, and hopes for the future."

Faculty Gossips - We Wonder

The faculty club of UVM has a new topic for discussion this week, namely, the new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Word has leaked out that the faculty has four potential candidates already in mind for the post now held by George V. Kidder, who is to retire at the end of the 1967 academic year. These include: Samuel Bogorad, professor of English; Robert Daniels, professor of history; Hebert McArthur, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and professor of English; and Malcolm Severance, assistant dean of Administration and director of Institutional Research.

Norman London, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, has been mentioned by some sources, however, several faculty members have ruled out his promotion to this post because they say that the committee will probably be seeking and older person.

Any possible candidate would probably be from the departments of Arts, Humanities or Social Sciences. It is not likely that the new dean will be chosen from the psychology or lab science departments.

Finally, some members of the administration have studied this proposed appointment from a psychological stand-point. Conclusion -- we need an outsider, so that there will be no hard feelings among colleagues. Besides that fact, perhaps we need a fresh, new look on campus.

The Committee to appoint a successor to Dean Kidder, is headed by Edward Andrews, associate dean of the College of Medicine. Members of the committee include: Philip Ambrose, assistant professor of classics; Donald Forays, professor of psychology; Richard Glade, associate professor of zoology; Lyman Gould, associate professor of political science; Leonidas Jones, professor English; Frank Lidral, professor of music; Clin Cook, dean of Faculties and vice president for academic affairs; and William Macmillan, dean of the Graduate College and professor of pharmacology.

No definite date has been set for the Committee's first meeting, which will probably take place the beginning of next semester.

Evaluation System Debated

By Stephen Carlson

The recent resignation of Hans Murbe, Assistant Professor of English, has brought the University's policies on professor evaluation to the forefront of controversy. In an effort to help clear the air of misinformation and to bring the problem to light as clearly and specifically as possible, last Monday the Student Association Senate sponsored a panel discussion entitled "The Standards and Procedures of Professor Evaluation."

The panel consisted of four persons who, at different levels, are instrumental in the professor evaluation process. They were: Clinton Cook, Dean of Faculties; John Kent, Chairman of the policy committee; Donald Gregg, a member of the American Association of University Professors; and Robert Daniels, Chairman of the History Department. As expected, the panelists all favored the system of which they are a part, and during the question and answer period members of the audience seemed to be in general agreement that the present system of professor evaluation is probably as fair and objective as any alternative system. Following is a brief summary of the reasoning presented by the panelists.

UNIVERSITY VS. COLLEGE

Dean Cook began the discussion by emphasizing that UVM is a university rather than a college. A college, he said, exists for the sole purpose of teaching, whereas a university exists for the "preservation, acquisition, and transmission of knowledge." A university professor must,

Trustees Promote Three

The Board of Trustees also approved title changes for four positions and named the "present incumbents" to the new titles.

Named vice presidents were Dean of Administration Lyman S. Rowell, Dean of Faculties Clinton D. Cook, and Comptroller Melvin A. Dyson. President McCune said the title changes "reflect the responsibilities of these positions."

He said that Rowell, named vice president for administrative and student affairs, will be considered senior vice president. Cook will be vice president for academic affairs. Dyson will be vice president for financial affairs.

Noting that there is a continuing need to update organizational structure to reflect practice and policy, Dr. McCune also recommended, and the Board approved, a change of title for Dr. Raymond V. Phillips, director of the University's Summer Session and Evening Divisions, to Dean of the Summer Session and Evening Division. Dean Phillips will continue to serve as Director of Conferences and Institutes.

Where's The Key?

By Lou Bloomenfeld

WASHINGTON: Word has been received that pledges of a still unnamed fraternity locked all three doors to Lafayette Hall at approximately 10:45 a.m. Friday, Dec. 3, keeping students locked in the building for almost 15 minutes after class. Experts, however, deem this rumor "preposterous." "Nobody," they say, "could keep the devoted UVM students in a class building after classes."

BURLINGTON: Waterman, Friday, Dec. 3, 11:00 a.m.: A renowned UVM American history professor commented, upon hearing that students had been locked in Lafayette Hall, "Certainly, and I saw a three headed elephant in the parking lot this morning." The good professor would not comment on the color of the elephant.

MOSCOW: Upon hearing that UVM students had been chained in a classroom building, a high party official commented, "Here we have a fine example of capitalist educational means."

WASHINGTON, FBI Report: A complete investigation is underway to find the culprit in the lock-in of several hundred UVM students last Friday. Sabotage is considered highly probable. The F.B.I. has alerted all offices to be on guard for the next step in the plot which, in addition to the lock-in, has included an extensive blackout.

BURLINGTON Old Mill: A well-known political scientist commented on the lock-in, "Here's something for the Dean of Men's Office to work on." The same instructor also noted, upon seeing one of his departmental colleagues with face and hands against a glass door between the Old Mill and Lafayette Hall, that Dr. X had finally been caged behind bars - where he belongs.

BURLINGTON, Lafayette Hall: One student escaped out a window, now broken. Other students waited, more or less patiently, for the doors to be opened. There seemed to be great anxiety that classes might be missed. Buildings and Grounds may have the window fixed soon - perhaps as early as next semester.

BURLINGTON, CYNIC Office: Word of students being locked in Lafayette Hall was received with eager anticipation of a local scoop. The action proves that life remains at old UVM. One senior commented, "It is the wildest thing that has happened since I've been here." As a responsible voice of the student body, the CYNIC cannot condone; however, the staff expressed appreciation for the usually lively Friday.

The meeting gets underway.

Dr. Rush Charting Electricity in Heart

In this day of modern technology it is a fairly well recognized fact that the human body has within it a variety of electrical systems. It is this system, that stimulates many of our muscles. Today's doctors use many pieces of electrical apparatus to diagnosis diseases. One of these, an electrocardiograph, is commonly used to diagnose heart trouble. This is a device that makes a graph of the electrical voltages on the human body with respect to time. The electrocardiograph is a very useful tool to medicine. Consequently, it is desirable to know what and where changes in this graph occur as a result of heart diseases.

At UVM this problem is being tackled not only by "MD's" but also by a "Ph.D." in the department of Electrical Engineering. Dr. Stanley Rush, Dr. Rush is making a model of the human heart that is to be found in the laboratories or classrooms of the College of Medicine. Dr. Rush's model of the heart and chest cavity is a reproduction of the electrical properties of this area, and looks like a sophisticated set of building blocks.

"Before pumping the heart produces an electrical series of events. Almost all changes in the conditions of the heart are accompanied by changes in this electrical sequence observed by the electrocardiograph. Through the years, a great many of these changes have been found to be characteristic of certain heart diseases."

There are, says Dr. Rush, several ways of determining how and where these changes in the sequence are produced; no one of which is perfect. He is using what is known as an analogue method—constructing a model (really a special purpose analogue computer) and systematically producing various electrical sequences on the chest cavity surface by introducing currents into the heart region. After duplicating the electrocardiograph patterns existing before and after a heart attack in an individual, Dr. Rush will know what changes are required to produce the new pattern in his model. He and Dr. Eugene Lepeschkin (MC, Prof. of Experimental Medicine, DeGoesbriand Memorial Hospital) will then be able to tell where this heart is ailing more specifically.

This problem could be tackled with pure mathematics, but this approach requires an oversimplification of the geometry of the chest cavity, and alone would not be sufficiently accurate. However, Dr. Rush finds these mathematical methods useful as supplements to his analogue method in several types of studies.

Dr. Rush's biggest problem has been the building of his model. Since this is the most intricate one of its kind ever to be built, there are no established engineering techniques which are suitable and Dr. Rush has had to design and build the model himself. This has been a seven year project. He started to gather the information on the electrical properties of the various tissues of the heart and chest cavity during his years of graduate study at Syracuse University where he received his MS in EE in 1958, and his Ph.D. in EE in 1962.

Dr. Rush has been supported in his work by The Vermont Heart Association, a National Science Foundation Institutional Grant, The National Institute of Health, and UVM. Dr. Rush is very grateful for the invaluable assistance he received from a Technology Mechanician, Mr. Joseph A. Blodreau. Dr. Rush also has working with his two undergraduate students: John W. Snarski, a senior from Caledonia, Vt. and Maurice R. Blais, a freshman electrical engineering major from Derby Line, Vt.

Profs Rated in "Prof-ile"

Los Angeles, Calif. - (L.P.) - If a professor of California State College at Los Angeles wants to know what his students really think of him as a teacher, he can find out by purchasing a student publication called "Prof-ile."

This document, which sells in the campus bookstore for 30 cents per copy, will tell a professor if students think his lectures are thought provoking, if the lectures are based on course material, or if tests are fair.

Although other universities and colleges have produced professor evaluation surveys in the past, the CSLA publication represents the first time students and faculty have worked together to compile such a document. In fact, all questionnaires utilized in the survey were actually distributed in the classroom and with the professor's permission.

Supervised by a group of student leaders, "Prof-ile" was devised, according to student body president, Felix Gutierrez, "to help serious students get the most out of their education by carefully selecting professors and not having to rely primarily on the campus grapevine."

How do the professors take to the critique? Most say they are pleased. Said one: "No professor should fear student opinion. Both students and professors can receive much benefit from this survey." Another: "This is an excellent idea." Only one responded: "I think this kind of questionnaire is uncalled for and I don't care to cooperate with you in it."

With the help of psychology and English department faculty, students contacted professors and sought permission to distribute questionnaires in the classroom. This procedure, it was decided, would provide three improvements over former methods of evaluation:

1. The distribution method guarantees that each student truly had the class with the professor about whom he comments;
2. The environmental conditions under which the questionnaires are completed are nearly identical;
3. A larger minimum response per professor is guaranteed.

Each student has asked to rate an individual instructor on eight points, ranging from "To what degree is the professor concerned about you as a student..." to "In comparison to that of other professors, the amount of work is..."

Each questionnaire also asks for the student's academic year, grade point average, sex, and whether the class is part of his major course of study.

The Associated Men Students, already at work on next year's "Prof-ile," said the new edition will also contain a descriptive statement of the professor's style, lecture delivery, and test frequency.

Students Support Viet Nam Policy

Philadelphia - "Moderator" conducted a national survey of leading students on the U.S. policy in Viet Nam. This sample showed that 80% (who read the magazine) support the government's position.

"Moderator" sent questions to 857 of the many readers (selected on the basis of academic and co-curricular leadership) and received 583 responses. The U.S. policy was thought to be legally and morally right by 69.5% of the respondents; legally right but morally suspect by 21.1%; legally right but morally wrong, 5.3%; and both legally and morally wrong, 13.1%.

Fifty-seven per cent believe that the demonstrations serve a useful purpose. The reasons for support of the demonstrations varied: "Dissenters are part of an honorable American tradition. They confront the hypocrisy of leaders, and of 'consensus'; they provoke discussion and re-evaluation of policy; they show to other nations that democratic free expression is a reality in the U.S.; they answer to the observations of John Stuart Mill and Alexis de Tocqueville about the dangers of a tyranny of the majority."

7.1% of the respondents can justify civil disobedience tactics such as draft card burning or troop train stopping. The magazine states that displays of this type are effects rather than causes, and they appear to be childish to all except the confirmed pacifist. Burning draft cards show the protestors' contempt for laws democratically derived.

News Around The World

O.A.U. THREATENS MILITARY ACTION

The Organization of African Unity has agreed to take militant steps to crush the white Rhodesian government if Britain does not suppress the rebellion soon. Each member of the O.A.U. has threatened to break diplomatic ties with Britain. They have also set up a committee to study possible measures, forceful or otherwise, against the usurping government. If these ideas are put into action grave consequences will result because Britain might stop trade privileges and economic aid to the African Commonwealth members.

DeGAULLE FAILS TO WIN MAJORITY

Charles DeGaulle failed to obtain 50% of the vote count, and now he faces a run-off election for the French Presidency. De Gaulle received the highest tally but he fell short of the clear-cut majority needed. Leftist backed Francois Mitterland got 32% of the vote and Jean Lecanuet, "the French Kennedy" 16%. It is generally thought that De Gaulle will win the run-off election against Mitterland if he enters the race again. But observers say that "le Grand Charles" suffered a great prestige blow in failing to win outright.

SPACE FIRST PLANNED

As Gemini 7 circles the earth with astronauts Frank Borman and James Lovell, Jr., feverish preparations are being made on Gemini 6. Walter Schirra and Thomas Stafford will orbit in Gemini 6, which is scheduled to head for outer space on Dec. 13. The astronauts in Gemini 6 will try to locate Gemini 7 and maneuver close to it, thus accomplishing a space first.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE PLANNED

The Student Association Committee on Leadership is having a conference next semester for campus leaders. The date and format are still tentative. Further details will be announced later.

Dogs Contemplate Revolution

Where's
the hydrant?

Although the report has not been announced officially by the Billings Bureau of Investigation, rumor has it that the ever increasing population of dogs on campus is planning a violent and complete overthrow of the present authorities in control. The knowledge of the revolt was obtained by the notorious secret agent James Hound, who managed to overhear parts of a conversation between the top party officials of the revolting faction. James encountered the group in the center of the green, opposite Waterman Building, at which time he expertly switched on his portable pocket superamplified tape recorder and picked up the following important clues:

REXOV: I have called this meeting to inform you that, due to prevailing conditions, there will be a slight modification of our original plans. First of all, if you will recall, three months ago we decided that operation BARK would be initiated at the site of the reflecting pool. But due to the fact that the pool was never built and the library is facing the wrong direction, we will have to find a new starting point. (one that is already built)

LEKOV: May I suggest that we start at Science Hall, the brain of our enemy's defense.

REXOV: I am afraid that that would be beyond our strength just yet, but I do think that the infirmary would be more our speed as a starter.

BENOV: I would tend to agree, and besides I have a few bones to pick with those nurses over there anyway.

REXOV: Comrades, I have yet to tell you of our greatest disaster. Our dear friend, Professor Murbe has been driven to resignation, due to the fact that he has failed to publish. Although his cause has been temporarily defeated, we shall adopt it as one of our guiding principles in operation...

At this crucial moment, our agile secret agent tripped over his own feet and fell head first into the muddy fountain where he remained for some time. Upon recognition of the famous spy, the dogs took off with astounding speed to their secret stronghold - Redstone Campus.

Rexov, waiting for his comrades.

EDITORIAL...

Final exams are designed to help raise faltering averages, say many professors. They even go so far as to prescribe efficient study techniques. This is all very thoughtful of them, however, they have more time to think of these techniques than we do to practice them.

They forget that we have only one "dead day" (Sunday) to study for our first day finals. With only thirteen weeks to the semester and fifteen weeks of work to complete before finals begin, most students use this cherished Sunday to finish last minute assignments. Then there is always the kind professor who schedules an hour exam on one of the last days of classes. Isn't there a rule stating that there are to be no exams during this last week of classes? In any event, a few days of reprieve would be most welcome.

Another problem involved with finals deals with proper and ample studying facilities, the library, noisy enough during the regular semester, becomes like reunion day at camp during finals. Rooms in Waterman, Yotay, Lafayette, or even Old Mill should be made available for study areas.

Finally, there is an ever increasing need for better communication channels among members of each department and between different departments in preparing a suitable schedule for finals. It is utterly amazing to see most of the courses required in any given major having finals scheduled for successive days or even the same day! With just a little foresight in planning, much anxiety could be alleviated.

These are only suggestions, and as befalls most suggestions, they will soon be forgotten. This is a very real problem, so think of it during the coming week as you madly look for a place to study for your three exams the following day. (Administration please take note!)

P.S. For the thirty students and faculty members who were interested enough to fill out and return our CYNIC survey, we wish to thank you. For the rest of you . . . well, maybe you will wake up someday!

Letters To The Editor

Commends Editorial

To the Editor:

I want to thank you and Kenneth Klonsky for the editorial in the December 3rd issue of the CYNIC on the need of a new concert hall in Burlington. I would not only endorse the sentiments contained therein, but also applaud the forceful and persuasive English.

May I take this opportunity to commend you and your fellow writers for the excellent coverage which you have consistently given the Lane concerts in both the preview stories and the reviews.

Finally, I should like to join many others on the campus in appreciating the growing maturity and responsibility of this year's CYNIC.

Sincerely,

The Crusade

Dear Sceptic,

I am writing you at the urging of a friend from Boston who says you are with us. We have recently formed a new organization, the December 25 Movement. This has the support of the Ku Klux Klan, the Communist Party, Madelyn Murray, Muhammad Ali, the American Hebrew congress, MME. Nhu, the Dalai Lama, Mao Tse-Tung, Bertrand Russell, George Wallace, Charles De Gaulle, and Robert Welch. We wish to add you to this executive committee, but you must let us know soon, as Senator E. M. Kennedy is trying to fill this last position with a relative of his who seems to lack your qualifications. If you accept, you agree to handle the Vermont area, one of the easiest in the country.

The purpose is, simple; peace and victory in Viet Nam, with universal disarmament and spiritual and moral rebirth following. By-products include destruction of blue laws, ending religious bigotry, and breaking the chains that have kept mankind bound for two millennia. Also it would free much land and cash for the enterprising national committeemen to become real capitalists, following the late great Henry VIII.

The action of the December 25 Movement is as follows: a Renaissance of the Crusades. Draft all the regressive archcapitalist communist sympathizing outside agitating leaches on the public teat, the clergy, and send them to Viet Nam.

In the U.S. it would:

- A. Bring peace and a return to a way of life in the South, by getting rid of outside agitators.
- B. Free our commerce so we can go on a seven day a week schedule.
- C. Separate Church and State for real.
- D. Get rid of a lot of this tax-exempt stuff.
- E. Bring our boys home.

In Viet Nam it would:

- A. Bring true ecumenicism: "The clergy who pray their creed together, lay and bleed together."
- B. Give Christianity the move-

Schmoke's Rebuttal

To the Editor of The CYNIC:

Even at the risk of raising the suspicion that The CYNIC has been taken over as the house organ of the history department, I'll try once more, let's say on a point of personal privilege. Anyone who "scores" me gets scored right back. It's a bit wearisome, though, to carry on a debate in which one's opponent, instead of addressing himself to the questions raised, continues merrily to whack away at his own favorite straw men. I shall endeavor to address myself to Mr. Spinner's points.

GENERALS GIAP and KY

1 - It is ridiculous to allege that the U.S. military action in South Vietnam is explained by the desire on anybody's part, least of all mine, to defend the (let's skip the abuse) regime of Gen. Ky. That gentleman has only one quality that need concern us at all. Unlike his northern colleague, that peerless humanitarian and friend of the rights of religious and political minorities, Gen. Giap, he is not a declared enemy of the United States. Therefore, and since the only real alternative in that unhappy country, to which the Viet Cong are determined to deny peace and economic stability on any terms but their own is neither Phil Hoff nor John Lindsay, but precisely Gen. Giap, it's worth supporting Gen. Ky.

PEACE?

2 - The myth of the North Vietnamese "peace offer" is bound to become an article in the Vietnik credo, and I suppose it's tilting against windmills to say anything about it; but let's try it once -- just for the record: When the foreign office of France, a power not noted for its enthusiastic support of U.S. Vietnam policy, informs the State Department that the Hanoi overtures could "not be regarded as a valid offer of negotiations," the strain on the "sensitivity" of Sec. Rusk's "antennae," in coming to the conclusion that there was no real offer of negotiations cannot have been overwhelming. It's interesting that Hanoi, which surely would have stood to gain immense propaganda capital from the rejection of a genuine peace offer, hasn't said a word about this whole matter. Only the American left is determined to believe that there was such an offer. But that segment of opinion will believe anything.

ment, the cause, the "raison d'etre" it's been looking for this century.

C. Win, because:

- 1) no one would shoot at a man of the cloth.
- 2) their black suits would make them look like the Viet Cong.
- 3) they'd perform miracles.
- 4) they'd convert the VC.
- 5) they could live on bread and wine alone.
- 6) they'd go about the Lord's work cheerfully.
- 7) there are so many, Viet Nam would be overrun.
- 8) they're already armed with missiles, rods, scimitres, the infamous "Roman collars," pattons, surplises, cossacks, incense, (an insidious lethargic gas), holy water, and canons, as well as being masters of the "double cross."

As pacifists, they would lead to disarmament, or else show themselves as hypocrites (Thou shalt not kill).

In conclusion:

"Onward Christian soldiers
With the church of God,
Forward to the paddies
Where the peasants plod;
Christ our royal master
Leads against the Cong--
Forward into ambush Goes the holy throng, etc.

We await your generous contribution and acceptance.

LIKE BALLS OF STRING

3 - As for Mr. Spinner's objection of America's "generally anti-revolutionary commitment," Merry Andrews, in her own inimitable style, so reminiscent of that of a kitten with a ball of string, seems to touch, at least inferentially, on one important point: Yes, countries grow up, they grow rich and fat, and set in their ways, I suppose the realization of lost youth can be as painful to a nation as to an individual. Yet it would be as ludicrous for the United States promiscuously to support revolutions as it would be for a fifty year old family father to take up surfing. As middle age can live with youth, however, so this country can live with genuinely revolutionary, nationalist governments. It gets to be a bit of a strain on pocket-book and nerves sometimes, but it has to be done and has been done: With regard to Egypt, to Guinea, to Ghana, to Betancourt's Venezuela, to Figueres' Costa Rica, and, for quite a long time, to Soekarno's Indonesia -- to mention a few examples. None of these countries, to be sure, formally allied themselves (until Indonesia did recently) with those to whom the United States is the great stumbling block to their world wide revolutionary aims, which must be removed. To ask that we lend a helping hand to revolutionary movements to whom the death of this country and its social system is a precondition for the fulfillment of their goals, is asking a bit too much.

Lastly, with regard to Mr. Spinner's rather cryptic final paragraph: The preservation of "colonialism and the white man's exploitation in Asia", have plainly no conceivable bearing on the war that is being waged in South Vietnam in 1965.

Wolfe W. Schmokel

P.S. I also fail to grasp Miss Andrews' purpose in contrasting my deathless prose to one of the more unfortunate phrases of the altogether unfortunate Mr. Wilson. It may be worth noting, however, that Mr. Wilson eventually proved to be not too proud to fight the Kaiser -- not to mention Pancho Villa.

P.P.S. My office is at 244 Waterman. Mr. Spinner's is two doors down the hall. Anyone who wants to argue this further is welcome, most any time. Merry Andrews is especially welcome. She talks real bad, but she's a dish. Hap therefore, be judged on more than his ability to teach, as research is a very important function of the university. Thus the criteria for evaluating a professor are threefold: (1) teaching, (2) service, and (3) scholarly effort.

The "publish or perish" aspect of evaluation was also supported by Prof. Daniels, who pointed out that research is something which can be tangibly and validly judged, whereas the other bases for evaluation are completely subjective. He emphasized that publishing is not extremely difficult; that anybody of university-level competence can publish. "If he is willing to take the trouble." While admitting that the university must "weed out the good scholars who are poor teachers," he said that on the other end of the scale, it must weed out the good teachers who are poor scholars.

Prof. Kent pointed out that there is a great difference among the different departments as to emphasis on research. Research may, for example, be 80% of the job of a professor of agriculture, whereas an instructor of liberal arts cannot be expected to do much research.

STUDENT EVALUATION?

The question was raised as to the possibility of a program of student evaluation of professors. Prof. Kent pointed out that "the student body presently plays a larger role in professor evaluation than it probably realizes;" that rumors circulated by students concerning their instructors are taken into consideration. Prof. Daniels said that most instructors appreciate feedback, including constructive criticism, from students. All four panelists agreed, however, that a formal program of student evaluation probably would not play a major role in the final evaluation of a professor, as the faculty members are in a much better position to judge a professor's professional competence.

The question of student evaluation of faculty is still, however, open to controversy, and another discussion is being planned for next semester, specifically on that question.

Sigma Nu also sends best wishes to Rod McLean, '68, on his pinning to Daryl Cook of Cassanova Jr. College.

All the girls of Alpha Epsilon Phi send best wishes to Lynne Feder, '65, on her engagement to Peter Thorner of New York.

Heartiest congratulations to Kappa Sig on Harvey Bazarian's engagement to Ginnie Bolan, '68, of Tri Delt; on Terry Winn's engagement to Jane Calahan; and on Bob Paulworth's engagement to Shirley Foss of Burlington. Lots of luck to Bill Leete, '67, of Kappa Sig on his pinning to Shirley Paradise of North Adam's State, Mass.

Acacia fraternity is proud of the following new brothers: Peter Jones, '68; Malcolm Moore, '68; and Will Pheiss, '68.

Sigma Nu's new pledges are: Robert Schupp, '68; Peter Doremus, '68; and Rick Parkhurst, '68.

Correction Dec. 3, 1965: Donald Chase, '67, of Alpha Tau Omega is a new brother, not a pledge.

Alpha Chi Omega is very proud of their five new sisters: Alison Bristol, '67; Janice Fucci, '68; Susan Patch, '67; Jill Taylor, '68; and Georgia Walsh, '68.

The brothers of Phi Sigma Delta wish to congratulate Howard Savin on his lavatiering to Jill Zeisler of Green Mountain College.

Best wishes to Curt Bacon, '67 of SAE on his pinning to Van Hall, '68, of Pi Beta Phi.

Heartiest congratulations to Sandy Snowling, '67, of Alpha Delta Pi on her pinning to Mike Wiggan, Theta Zl, of Utica College and to Meryl Schneider, '66 of Alpha Delta Pi on her engagement to Bob Suhr, '66, of Clarkson College, New York.

The sisters of Alpha Chi Omega became immersed in the Yuletide season at a Christmas Party for faculty members held on December 6th. Alpha Chi, as well as myself, wish to extend a joyous holiday season to all.

The Board of Trustees of UVM has approved establishment of two new departments, and has also accepted a recommendation to dissolve the division of experimental medicine as an administrative unit within the department of medicine.

Approved were establishment of the department of physical medicine and rehabilitation within the College of Medicine, (see separate story) and the department of geography within the College of Arts and Sciences.

UVM President McCune, a geographer, was treated to some good natured ribbing by members of his Board even though he "protested" that the recommendation for a department of geography had been "in the works" before his appointment as 18th head of Vermont's oldest institution of higher learning.

Board Chairman Lawrence H. Averill of Birmingham, Mich., capped the kidding by observing that "everyone is entitled to have one pet."

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director of Placement

MANY FIRMS VIOLATE RULES ON 'SEX DISCRIMINATION' (Reprinted from the Burlington Free Press Tuesday, November 30, 1965. Is it legal, in view of the Civil Rights Act provision forbidding discrimination on the basis of sex in job hiring or promotion, for an employer to turn down a female applicant for a traditionally male job in which "the language gets rough?" Many a job recruiter interview only men on a coeducational college campus for jobs either sex could perform? Should a man be excluded from a job in an all-female office because he would "feel out of place?" Can an employer bar qualified women from positions as sales representatives if the jobs demand they travel alone?

The answer to each question is "no," according to the Civil Rights law and an extensive survey by Prentice Hall of job discrimination against women. The survey involved lengthy interviews with 57 U.S. companies -- ranging from airlines to supermarkets -- employing nearly 500,000 workers -- and informal guidelines from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which is administering the job discrimination provision. The official guidelines issued in a stream by the EEOC since the anti-discrimination provision went into effect in July have answered none of these questions directly. Yet, these are precisely the delicate matters which countless employers are now facing -- and precisely the areas of violation of the law.

Prentice-Hall's key finding: More than two out of three of the employers interviewed are now following discriminatory hiring and promotion policies! One pharmaceutical house, for instance, considers it "abnormal" for a man to apply for a job as a market research clerk. Another company told interviewers that "naturally" it didn't hire men as key-punch operators because this was "women's work." One large electrical products manufacturer admitted that virtually all the company's higher - paying factory jobs were filled by men. In the garment industry, Prentice - Hall found, men usually hold the better jobs as cutters; women fill the lower-paid sewing jobs. Few women are compositors in the printing industry. Many companies flatly bar women from executive training courses leading to better jobs. In brief, many companies today still make blanket generalizations about what is "women's work" or "men's work" -- and in so doing, they are practicing illegal discrimination. Specifically: Unless state law prohibits it, women must now be considered for jobs requiring the lifting of heavy loads -- if they want such jobs and are capable of doing the lifting.

If a woman applies for a job in an all-male shop and doesn't mind the language, an employer must now give her a fair chance for employment -- assuming it doesn't involve installing costly facilities to accommodate her. Similarly, if a man wants to work in an all-female office and is qualified for the job, it's up to him -- not the employer -- to decide if he's "out of place." Women must be considered for jobs as "salesmen," even if the job involves traveling alone. Says the EEOC: "If a woman is 21, she's old enough to look out for her own welfare." A company must also admit qualified women to executive training programs, provided the women state they would be willing to relocate later, if necessary.

It's common sense that few women will go after most traditionally male jobs. Nevertheless, employers from coast-to-coast will have to reexamine and revise discriminatory policies to open up genuine new job opportunities for women -- unless sex is a "bonafide occupational qualification" or nondiscrimination violates basic mores or involves unreasonable expenses for the employer. The EEOC is clear: "Removing discrimination will cause discomfort; but discomfort is no reason for maintaining the barriers."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

BAMBERGER'S NEW JERSEY PRESENTS CAREERS IN RETAILING. All UVM students are cordially invited to attend an "open house" Tuesday, December 28 or Wednesday, December 29, 1965 at 9:30 A.M. Bamberger's Newark is located at 131 Market Street, Newark, New Jersey, 9th Floor. For additional information stop by the Placement Office or call the Personnel Manager of any Bamberger's Store.

PLACEMENT OFFICE NON-TEACHER REGISTRATION DEADLINE. Employment interviews for all seniors and graduate college candidates who expect to receive a degree in 1966, excluding Technology, will occur in the Placement Office from February 1 through March 18. The complete schedule of employers visits will be mailed to the campus address of all registrants during intersemesters. The deadline for filing Registration Papers if you intend to take Campus Interviews, is 5:00 P.M. Friday, December 10, 1965.

G. FOX & CO. INVITES UVM SENIORS AND JUNIORS TO CAREER DAY PROGRAM. On Wednesday, December 29, 1965, G. Fox & Co. of Hartford, Conn., will hold its annual Career Day Program. All students who are interested in retailing as a career are invited to attend. Those interested should stop by the Placement Office in lower Waterman and pick up Program Invitations. This program is worth attending.

Lane Series Offerings 66-67

The Board of Trustees at UVM approved a recommendation from the George Bishop Lane Artists Series that it again offer two major artists series, a chamber arts and a summer series in the 1966-67 year.

Sanborn Partridge, Trustee from Proctor, Vt., noting the University's colors are green and gold, moved that the two major artists series, currently called red and blue, be called green and gold, and the Board expressed its approval.

TO GET TICKETS

If you wish to attend a Red or Blue Concert for which you have no tickets, or want to sell tickets for a concert which you are unable to attend, the Lane Series Office will help you with either task. A ticket service is maintained of which you can avail yourself by telephoning 864-4311, ext. 240. Telephone only in the mornings - when the Lane Secretary is on duty; telephone only one week in advance for the concert concerned; and under no circumstances surrender your season ticket (temporary tickets are issued). Money should be handled by you and not by the Lane Office.

ATTENTION SENIORS!!

If you failed to turn in your picture proofs to the Ariel office last week, will you please send to the studio the proof that you have chosen as soon as possible!

Cadet Honored PR Maneuvers

Cadet Gordon Garrison, Jr., Class of 1966, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Garrison, 117 Imperial Ave., Bennington, Vt., has been selected as the Vermont ROTC Brigade's Cadet of the Month for November 1965, according to Cadet Colonel William Rush, Commander of the Cadet Brigade.

In a letter of commendation presented to Cadet Garrison, Colonel L. G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, cited his outstanding knowledge and proficiency in leadership, drill, military bearing, and world affairs. Colonel Robinson noted that Cadet Garrison's selection distinguished him among the 325 basic course cadets enrolled in the ROTC program at UVM.

UVM, Nov. 30: The pledges of Company L-12 Pershing Rifles National Military Fraternity recently received their first taste of field training in wooded areas adjacent to Burlington as part of the PR counter-guerrilla program. Their training day started at 1:00 p.m. and concluded at midnight. Supervisors for the program were Captain Jack Fraser, faculty advisor, and Cadet Peter McGregor, Pershing Rifles Commander.

After issuance of field equipment and a foot march to the training area, pledges received four hours of instruction and practical exercise in cover and concealment, day and night movement, drill, and patrolling. Added supervision was provided by Miss Carol Jenne, company sweetheart.

Chorus & Choir Enjoyed By All

By Alice Dupuis

The University Choir and Girls' Chorus treated a packed house to a unique experience Sunday at Ira Allen Chapel. The carols, mostly of continental Europe, were well performed. Both the Chorus and the Choir very willingly gave their voices to conductor Francis A. Weinrich and their audience.

The Girls' Chorus opened up with "It Soon Will be Evening," a Tyrolean Carol. Ann Cohen played a flute obligato to "Shepherds' Christmas Song" and Lynda Riley's solo to "Alleluia, I Bring You Good Tidings" was quite pleasing.

Then the choir sang. Their song, a slow and elaborate one, "Dies Sanctificatus" was followed by the up tempo "A Gallery Carol." The contrast was very effective. Next on the program was "Hacia Belen va un borrico" a traditional Spanish Carol with a solo by George Bedell. Their last song, "The Twelve Days of Christmas" was very well done. It consisted of a complex arrangement of several incidental solos.

After the intermission the male segment of the Choir sang two carols and a Christmas arrangement of "Go Tell It on the Mountain" with a solo by David Bishop. The entire Choir then sang "The Feast of Christmas," a cantata based on Christmas carols. There was a solo introduction to each song which told the story of people gathering to carol, to eat, and to attend midnight Mass. Soloists were Laureen Counter-marsh, Kathryn Hancock, George Bedell, Michael Woodard, and Thomas French.

Accompaniment was provided by pianist Mary Rowe, and John Atwood, and harpist Elizabeth Dahl.

Bid Farewell To Counselor

The newly initiated Counseling Service of UVM will end the semester with a farewell to Mrs. Goldman, who is the advisor of many students on campus.

Mrs. Goldman is from Cambridge, Massachusetts and is now living in Marshfield, Vt. She graduated from BU in 1962 and completed her education at Harvard Graduate School.

Mrs. Goldman is "not a psychologist but a counselor." She aids students "who are at a crossroad in life in making their own decisions in academic, social or family matters."

Mrs. Goldman believes that the counseling program has been extremely successful. Here at UVM students come in for advice when they need it, and they welcome the opportunity to talk to someone in the strictest confidence, in an objective atmosphere, away from all connections with the administration.

Appointments have been made throughout the semester and will be made during exam week through Mrs. Clemons, Secretary of the Office of the Dean of Men at 125 Waterman.

Although it is not yet definite whether or not there will be a counselor next semester, since this is an experimental program, there are plans for enlarging the counseling staff in the future.

Past Present

The Company's first engine, the Wasp, took to the air on May 5, 1926. Within a year the Wasp set its first world record and went on to smash existing records and set standards for both land and seaplanes for years to come, carrying airframes and pilots higher, farther, and faster than they had ever gone before.

In recent years, planes powered by Pratt & Whitney Aircraft have gone on to set new standards of performance in much the same way as the Wasp had done in the 1920's. The 727 and DC-9 are indicative of the new family of short-to-medium range jetliners which are powered by the highly successful JT8D turbofan. Examples of current military utilizations are the J58-powered Mach 3 YF-12A which recently established four world aviation records and the advanced TF30-powered F-111 variable-geometry fighter aircraft.

Your and the Future

Take a look at the above chart; then a good-long look at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft—where technical careers offer exciting growth, continuing challenge, and lasting stability—where engineers and scientists are recognized as the major reason for the Company's continued success.

Engineers and scientists at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft are today exploring the ever-broadening avenues of energy conversion for every environment—all opening up new avenues of exploration in every field of aerospace, marine and industrial power application. The technical staff working on these programs, backed by Management's determination to provide the best and most advanced facilities and scientific apparatus, has already given the Company a firm foothold in the current land, sea, air and space programs so vital to our country's future. The list of achievements amassed by our technical staff is a veritable list of firsts in the development of compact power plants, dating back to the first Wasp engine which lifted the United States to a position of world leadership in aviation. These engineering and scientific achievements have enabled the Company to obtain its current position of leadership in fields such as gas turbines, liquid hydrogen technology and fuel cells.

Should you join us, you'll be assigned early responsibility. You'll find the spread of Pratt & Whitney Aircraft's programs requires virtually every technical talent. You'll find opportunities for professional growth further enhanced by our Corporation-financed Graduate Education Program. Your degree can be a BS, MS or PhD in: MECHANICAL • AERONAUTICAL • ELECTRICAL • CHEMICAL ENGINEERING • PHYSICS • CHEMISTRY • METALLURGY • CERAMICS • MATHEMATICS • ENGINEERING SCIENCE OR APPLIED MECHANICS.

For further information concerning a career with Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, consult your college placement officer—or write Mr. William E. Stoner, Engineering Department, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, East Hartford, Connecticut 06108.

CHRISTMAS IS A ONE DAY STUDY OF LIFE

By Judy Triplett

The heavy snowfall of the night before had covered all with powdery whiteness. There was a serenity in the icy stillness of early morning that was more than earthly, that was inspirational. Nothing moved save the lightly falling snow. There was no sound. It was as a world newly created, pure, innocent of all sin, free of all that was less than divine. Lovely it was, but there were few who would appreciate it.

The street lights cast their individual spotlights upon the winter-white landscape, each illuminating only a trivial patch, yet creating the velvety shadows and the soft, delicate lighting that made the overall beauty more magnificent, ironic, that all of this was created for Man, yet his very presence would spoil it.

Falling gently upon ground already blanketed, the snow covered the perfection that already existed there. Nothing of the earth had stirred, had marred the splendor of Nature, the handiwork of God. The world of Man was blessed with a glory that could be only God sent, yet no one realized its worth.

Humanity's alarm clock would very soon go off. The early morning stillness would change to become the bedlam of the work day. Where nothing stirred before, where all was silent and serene, there would be people. There would be noisy confusion, ill-natured bickering, and cruel dishonesty. Harsh words spoken in haste would destroy; acts of impulse rashly performed would ruin. Unthinking, uncaring Humanity would begin anew, chewing itself up, and swallowing progress before it. Had a chance to improve the very humanity which stifled it. Humanity is like a small child—it seems so innocent while sleeping.

Yet, the world seemed strangely peaceful this morning, and it was already well past the time for the never-changing routine of every day existence to begin. There were no cars, no people, on the streets; no raucous yells or blaring horns; no slamming of doors or screaming of brakes. This tranquility surpassed even the reverent quiet of Sunday morning. This could mean only one thing: it must be Christmas morning.

It was. Unselfishness and good will had once again come to the fore, as they did every year around December 25. There had been signs lately, hints that it was indeed the Christmas Season once more. Yet it still always comes as a surprise. Such a change is almost inconceivable, and then to have it come about in a few short days! It is always surprising. But then Mankind is rather like a chameleon, changing to better its advantage.

But no, This was sincere. This magnificent transformation of selfish Man into benevolent Humanity was not sham; it was not a calculated move. The spirit of Christmas had truly, as it did every year, pervaded and hypnotized the soul of Man.

Strangers smiled in passing on the street. Mailmen and delivery boys stopped to chat good-naturedly at the end of the walk. Grouchy old Mr. Grumpman dressed as Santa Claus and hosted a party for orphans. Even Mr. Lickpenny donated to the Salvation Army volunteer on the corner. Children were extra well-behaved, parents more tolerant. All of a sudden the person who bumped into another on the street stopped to excuse himself. People took the time to be human.

All this because it was Christmas! All this in celebration of the birth of Christ. All this to glorify His name — for a few short days in the year.

People were happy, relaxed. People were generous, forgiving, kind. For one day, God's world might truly rest in peace... for one day.

A TOUR OF THEIR ALMA MATER. Four members of the military science department at the University of Vermont also call it their alma mater. The four, from left, are Major Michael Peck, Major Francis Mahoney, Major Arthur Finehout, and Captain Howard Fraser. Major Mahoney received his Master's from Vermont, the other three their undergraduate degrees. Major Peck and Captain Fraser were assigned to the ROTC department this fall after finishing tours of duty in Korea and Viet Nam respectively.

Eighty-Eight Keys To Six Strings

The first week of next semester will be a full one for Lane Series ticket holders. Lane Series has scheduled two performers; on Friday, Jan. 21, pianist Andre Watts, 19 years old, will appear on the Red Series substituting for Leon Fleisher who is unable to appear because of a slipped disc in his neck. On Monday, Jan. 24, popular folk songwriter and singer Pete Seeger will entertain on the Blue Series. Each will appear at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Andre Watts made his first successful appearance in 1963 when he was called at a moment's notice to substitute for the indisposed Glenn Gould, who had been scheduled to appear with the New York Philharmonic. Leonard Bernstein, describing the talent of the young performer, commented, "He will be one of those special giants and will undoubtedly be one of the very special dozen of the world's top pianists."

Andre Watts was born in Germany, in June of 1946. Shortly after moving to Philadelphia, at the age of 9, he made his debut with the Philharmonic Orchestra playing a Haydn Piano Concerto. At ten, he performed the Mendelssohn G Minor Concerto with the Robin Dell Orchestra; at 14, he played the Franck Symphonic Variations with the Philadelphia Orchestra — in addition to giving local recitals.

Bernstein first heard Watts when he auditioned for a New York Philharmonic Young People's Concert. Watts was engaged and performed the Liszt Concerto at the Young People's Concert before a nation-wide TV audience. It was on the strength of his performance on this occasion that Bernstein called him for the Philharmonic concerto. "Life" magazine reported it as being "the season's wildest ovation."

Shortly afterwards, Watts re-

Philharmonic for Columbia records.

Watts has toured the Eastern cities and the Midwest, receiving praise from critics everywhere. In 1966, the 19 year old is looking forward to a busy summer with the National Symphony Orchestra, with the New York Philharmonic in the French American Festival, and with the Chicago Symphony.

The program for the evening will be "32 Variations in C Minor" by Beethoven, "3 Sonatas" by Scarlatti, "Phantasie, Op. 15 in C Major" by Schubert, "Variations On A Theme of Corelli, Op. 42 in D Minor" by Rachmaninov, "Ballade in G Minor, Op. 23" by Chopin, "Ballade in F Major, Op. 38" by Chopin, "Etude No. 6 in A Minor" by Paganini-Liszt.

Pete Seeger

Pete Seeger, called the "granddaddy" of the folksinging movement, is the Jan. 24th attraction. Mr. Seeger previously appeared in Burlington in July 1960 on the Lane Summer Series and was a big success. Mr. Seeger has not planned a program for the evening, but will play as the spirit moves him.

His concert performances have filled capacity halls in virtually every city in the country, including Orchestra Hall in Chicago and Carnegie Hall in New York. He has toured some 25 countries in Asia, Africa, and Europe. Accompanied by his wife and three children, Mr. Seeger performed at halls, schools, universities, village squares and made radio and television performances. In Calcutta, the press hailed him as a "Musical Ambassador of Good Will."

The current revival of folk singing in the U.S. is greatly due to the work of Pete Seeger. He has recorded over 50 LPs, among which "We Shall Overcome" has been the most popular and useful song. He is now occupied on a long term project to record folk instrumental techniques with a sound movie camera. Aside from his work as a performer, he has authored and co-authored dozens of songs, including "If I Had a Hammer," "Where Have All The Flowers Gone," and "Kisses Sweeter Than Wine." He has recently cut a record called "Stranger and Cousins" which includes music from all corners of the earth.

A critic said, "The unique quality of Pete Seeger's voice is the sorrowful joy and contemporary nostalgia. It is a kind of humaneness. It is the essence of the music that expresses the human aspirations and failures and yet persistent hopes that Pete Seeger voices."

"Yeah, I've heard about Kake Walk, so what? That's still months from now."

Say these 13 words loudly in the Den, and you'll immediately brand yourself a newcomer or an ignoramus. This will not be because 13 is everyone's unlucky number but because (1) nobody that's been around acts "blah" about UVM's biggest (including the one after exams!) weekend and (2) nobody who knows what's going on thinks 77 days is too long to wait for Kake Walk. Well . . . maybe some would like it sooner -- say, in place of exams...

But the Walkers themselves (and they ought to "know what's going on") wouldn't want Kake Walk much sooner. Walkin' fo' de Kake is a unique and difficult skill which demands top physical condition and considerable practice.

Training of Walkers varies from one organization to another, but most teams have started getting in shape three or four months before the final competition. Veteran Walkers, however, may begin practicing for the next year's Kake Walk as soon as they have finished competing in the one before.

Most houses have a traditional Walking pattern which may be somewhat adapted by the Walkers of any given year. Before the Walkers can practice their complete routine, however, they must undergo a lot of preparation.

Someone trying to Walk without enough practice would do a very poor job, would soon become exhausted, and might even injure himself. Walkers begin to train by running, doing exercises, stretching, and practicing their kick. They practice parts of their routine when they get in shape. Most Walkers don't begin practicing their entire routine until Kake Walk is only two or three weeks away.

The Walkers' managers work closely with them throughout the period of training and practicing. These people taking part in the preparation for Walking must sacrifice as much time as would permit them to take and do all the studying for a three-credit course.

But the honor of being a Walker and representing your friends in competition and, even more, the hope and possibility that you might win and thus go down in the records of UVM's history, makes up for the sacrifice and effort.

Exam Blues? Students Exhibit Abstract Art

By Judy Triplett
The weather may not affirm the fact, but the exam schedule surely does. Although there is as yet only scant snow on campus, we know that Christmas is coming because intersemester recess will soon be here. The two are, for UVM'ers, almost synonymous.

The promise of a month of comparative relaxation does much to dispel even the most pressing of worries. But if the burden of exams should threaten to become too heavy, do yourself a favor. Take a short break. Go downtown and look at the Christmas lights. Listen to the holiday music that emanates from the stores. Get out among the shoppers and watch the faces of the children as they talk to Santa. You may even find yourself humming a carol! And I guarantee, you'll feel better when you come back to the books. Try it and see.

Yet exams somehow aren't quite the insurmountable obstacles they might be without the long vacation. I, at least, feel amply compensated for the efforts of the week, simply in the feelings of freedom and relief that follow my last exam, and in the knowledge that SAGA food, pink cards, and 11:00 p.m. phone curfews (what else can one call them?) won't be in effect for a whole month.

However, it isn't until I have run back to the dorm and recklessly thrown all my notes into the incinerator that the semester is truly over.

It takes a while to calm down. Freshmen will find themselves jumping up and down on their roommate's bed (oh! but very quietly!) and aching to shoot their elation to the whole dorm. And when they look around them they will see that even the most poised, the most suave, of the upperclassmen are also giddy and crazily energetic. Unfortunately, it is still quiet hours. But that's all right. One can always beat out "Jingle Bells" with a cotton swab on a throw pillow.

On display this week in the North-Bouge of Billings Center, is a collection of student paintings and sculpture. The paintings and sculpture may be classified as abstract, and they represent experiences in mood, color and subjective reality.

The manner of execution of these abstract pieces of art represents a departure from what most of us are accustomed to in art. The world of abstract art proceeds on the assumption that the use of color, variation of outline and pattern, and a freedom of physical and emotional instinct can best represent the society (both American and international) in which we live. The paintings, for the most part, are two-dimensional and rely on object placement, color, and the surface effect of the paint to achieve the desired emotional effect.

Susan Bowman's painting is an expression and an experience in blue. The complexity yet orderliness of the painting is enhanced by the monotony of the work. The painting possesses a great deal of flow, feeling, and is an artistic theme in its own right.

This is abstract . . .

The painting by Susan Tebbetts is a composition employing the use of a black background and red semi-spherical objects. The impact and experience of the painting is primarily a visual one and allows the viewer a wide range of interpretation.

In the lobby of Billings is a painting by Phil Brown. The painting has a great deal of fluidity in its composition, and in viewing the painting, movement on the canvas appears to be circular. Of all the paintings on exhibit, it is the least definite in application of bold, striking colors. The painter uses oranges, yellows, and pale reds in a raised surface effect to achieve its emotional impact.

Abstract art is America's contribution to the world of art. It is a medium in which color, emotion, mood, and subjective reality have strayed from the ethos of schools of painting in the past. The painter uses his life and experience as a frame of reference in painting and the viewer does the same in viewing and interpretation of the work.

NOTICE to Faculty and Staff:

Applications for tickets for Kake Walk 1966 are enclosed in this week's pay envelope.

NOTICE to Fraternity and Sorority Treasurers and to the Independent Kake Walk Association.

December 21, 1965 is the deadline for the list of the total number of tickets (minus new pledges) desired for Kake Walk 1966.

Tuition Cut Suggested

A newly elected member of the Vermont Legislature, Mr. Donald Milne of Montpelier, has suggested that the Legislature should set a standard tuition rate for the University of Vermont. The suggested tuition is approximately $100 dollars less than the present rate.

Mr. Milne has not offered any indication of the source from which the University would obtain the deficit of 1/4 million dollars, if this proposition is passed. President Shannon McCune said that if passed, the arrangement will create new problems, which some people are probably not aware of, as of yet.

At present, the University of Vermont is conducting a comparison study of the costs of the University as related to the costs of other New England Colleges, the main concern being the cost of room and board. During the past few years, the room and board rate here was about middle of the road as compared to other private and public universities and colleges. The prices have gone up at other colleges, but the University has remained in the same price range. Due to the rising costs of expanding and maintaining an institution of higher learning this study may show that a rise in the cost of room and board is a necessity. Of course this is not a definite plan, but if the cost does rise, the change will not be great.

President Shannon McCune also added that students should be looking into the fund and loan programs which the University offers. Students should be concerned about the loans and interest rates which they have to pay back once they leave or graduate from college.

Cats Fail To Score In Final 11 Seconds

The UVM Catamount basketball team came as close as possible to winning their second consecutive victory for their new coach Art Loche. The difference which separated them from being victorious over the Redmen of Massachusetts was one point.

The Redmen of Mass. performed with great strength and speed. The one essential ingredient which enabled Massachusetts to defeat Vermont was their strong press. At the point when this tactic was first employed, the Catamounts led 42-38. From that moment on the Catamounts started to be outclassed.

Co-Captains Milt Goggans was outstanding in last Saturday's contest. He scored twenty points and had nineteen rebounds. Bill Librera (Wild Bill), who is only a sophomore, scored sixteen points. Bill looks like he will be one of Vermont's eminent stars in the next three years.

The crucial part of the game occurred with just eleven seconds left to play. The score was 61-60 in favor of Massachusetts. UVM got the ball and then called time out. A play was sent in by Coach Loche. He called for the ball to go to Layne Higgs. Layne was told that if he had the opportunity he was to take the shot, if not he was to give the ball to Goggans who would be under the basket. Layne saw his opportune moment, shot, and missed. Spalter recovered the rebound and then shot. No good, and the time had elapsed.

Upon reflecting over the last eleven seconds, Coach Loche feels that he should have gone right up the middle. This would probably have crossed up the Redmen's defense and, of course, there is always the possibility that they might have fouled UVM.

Jay and I have noticed that Loche has really fired up his team. He has certainly improved the defensive strategy greatly. Every man on defense constantly has his hands up high in the air. These are just little things, but these little things are the things that win or lose basketball games.

UVM still lacks a real big guy. The team does not have much depth. The team does not size up too well as compared with the other teams in the Yankee Conference. The reason lies partly in the fact that UVM gives out so few scholarships. The number given out this year exceeds last year, but a lot is still left to be desired. As far as the other Yankee Conference teams are concerned, they can give out many more full tuition scholarships because their tuition is so much smaller than ours.

Coach Loche would like to see a better than five hundred season this year, but he surely won't be satisfied without taking the number one berth in the Yankee Conference.

GREIG IS COACH OF THE YEAR

Amherst, Massachusetts and Vermont, who shared the Yankee Conference Soccer Title with Connecticut, dominated the 1965 All Conference team, and Harold Grieg (Vermont) was named Coach of the Year following a vote of the six league coaches.

Connecticut halfback Al Lyon, New Hampshire right wing Glenn Aborn, and Maine centerforward Hamid Ahmed completed the first team selections.

The list of honorable mentions include: goal - Mike Dill (Conn.); fullbacks - Ralph Nelson (Conn.), Paul Loeffler (Conn.), and Calvin Fisk (UNH); halfbacks - Allen Cowles (Conn.), Shadrack Ndam (URI), Bill Willey (Vt.) and George Tucker (UNH); right wings - Bruno Giadina (Conn.) and Abateni Ayanaba (Mass.); inside right forwards - Nat San-BRINK, VAN BENNEKUM, SOLDANO NAMED ALL-YANKEE CONF.

KINGSTON - The University of Maine's Yankee Conference champions and the runners-up from the University of Massachusetts dominated the 1965 all-conference football team. It was announced today. The selection was made on a vote of the coaches of the six New England state universities.

Rusty Brink, a senior from Lowell, Maine, is a repeat performer at center for the University of Vermont and joining him from the Catamounts is Joe Soldano, a sophomore from Toledo, Ohio. Rounding out the offensive team is halfback Wayne Zdanowicz of Jersey City, N.J., a senior at the University of Rhode Island.

The third place University of Vermont Catamounts placed two men on each unit while the University of Rhode Island Rams had one of each eleven. Connecticut placed a man on the defensive eleven.

Joining DeVarney, a senior from Laconia, N.H., who was picked for the quarterback post, are Bill Pasquill, a junior from Kittery, tackle; Ivan Brown, a junior from Bucksport, a guard, and Frank Harney, a senior from Wellesley Hills, Mass., a halfback.

Bob Meers, a senior from Hudson, Mass., and Milt Morin, a senior from Leominster, Mass., were selected for the end positions for the third straight year. Bill Connor, a junior from Rockland, Mass., a tackle, and Phil Vandersea, a senior from Whitinsville, a fullback, are the other Redmen named to the offensive unit.

The defensive team is made up of Alan Riley of Maine, a senior from Topsfield, Mass., and Bill Van Bennekum of Vermont, a junior from Hoboken, N.J., ends; Ed Toner of Mass., a junior from Lynn, Mass., and Gerard McWeeny of Connecticut, a sophomore from Greenwich, Conn., tackles; Harvey Silvers of Rhode Island, a senior from Brooklyn, middle guard; Brink, Bernie Dallas of Massachusetts, a senior from Philadelphia, and John Huard of Maine, a junior from Waterville, linebackers. The safety men are Norm Tardiff of Maine, a junior from Randolph, Mass., Dave Kelley of Mass., a senior from Geneva, N.Y., and Dave Giarla, a junior from Hahant, Mass.

Honorable mention went to: Offense - Dennis Doyle of Maine, end; Greg Landry, Mass., quarterback; Bob Detore, Mass., Dick Hebert, Vermont, and John Thompson, Rhode Island, halfbacks. Defense - Bill Vasilios, New Hampshire, end; Mike Murgo, Rhode Island, and Vern Walker, Maine, tackles; Vic Radzevich, Connecticut, Tom Ricci, Rhode Island, and Soldano, guards; Bill Neville, New Hampshire, and Rod Brooks, Mass., linebackers; and Leo Biron, Mass., Hebert, Vermont, and Jack Schweberger, Vermont, safety men.

The University of Vermont basketball team, under the guidance of new coach Art Loche, has already pulled a few surprises although the season is but two games old. In their first two games the scrapping Cats have managed to upset a much taller Dartmouth team, 60-52, and to come within one point of pulling off another major upset over a highly rated Massachusetts team.

In the Dartmouth game, UVM really showed what an aggressive defense can do. Taking advantage of almost every Dartmouth mistake, the Cats rallied from a 30-28 halftime deficit to go on to a 60-52 win. High scorers for Vermont was senior guard Ken Spalter with 17 points. Also in double figures for the Cats were co-captains Milt Goggans and Layne Higgs, and sophomore Bill Librera.

Leading the Big Green in scoring were 6-7 Gunnar Malm and 6-5 Pete Dunlop with 12 and 10 points, respectively. It should be mentioned that Dartmouth was playing without two others who were expected to help considerably, 6-7 Jack Lockhart and captain Neal Castaldo. Despite this factor, the Cats earned their victory by the team's hustle and determination, not by their opponent's injuries.

In their next outing the squad dropped a heartbreaker at Patrick Gym to the UMass Redmen. The Cats were constantly fighting back in this one as they had to make up a quick 8-0 lead which the Redmen jumped off to in the first half. UMass led by a 31-28 score at the half.

Early in the second half UVM came back and even took a 42-38 lead on two hoops by Billy Librera. At this point, however, a UMass press forced the Cats into numerous mistakes and the Redmen rattled off 16 consecutive points to grab a 54-42 lead. Vermont was not to be denied and Milt Goggans led a comeback which brought the Cats to within one point with 3:23 to go in the game. Massachusetts reacted with two quick hoops to stretch the lead to 61-56, but two more baskets by Goggans closed it to one point again with one minute to go.

In the last minute both teams blew many chances to score, but with 11 seconds to go UVM got one last chance. After calling time out to work a set play a Layne Higgs jump shot missed its mark and the game ended at 61-60 in favor of UMass. The UVM offense was hampered because of the knee injury which co-captain Higgs was forced to play with. The 6-3 backcourt star hurt the knee in the closing minutes of the Dartmouth game and his shooting was noticeably bothered by the injury in this game.

For the Cats Goggans ended the night as top scorer with 20 points and nearly as many rebounds. Librera added 16 for Vermont. High scorer for the night was UMass' 6-1 guard Clarence Hill with 23 points. Hill led the Yankee Conference in scoring last year. Jim Babyak was another thorn in the side of Vermont with 19 points.

This Friday and Saturday the Cats host the Black Bears of Maine in a two game set. Vermont will be seeking revenge for the two defeats which Maine handed them last year. Maine thus far this season has among its victims Norwich against whom they rolled up 118 points. If the Cats can continue their inspired play of their first two games, however, Maine will be lucky to score half that amount of points against the strong UVM defense.

UNIVERSITY OF MAINE SCOUTING REPORT

Coach: Brian McCall

Last Year's Record: W 4 - L 6 in Yankee Conference, fourth place

This Year's Record: W 1 - L 1 lost to St. Anselm's in opener, but swamped Norwich, 118-85

This Year's Personnel: The Bears lost their top two scorers from last year through graduation, but the next two scorers return. They are 6-0 guard Terry Carr (12.1 ppg last year) and 6-5 center Guy Strang (11.3 ppg last year.) Carr is the team's top shooter while Strang is the leading rebounder. Strang's best game last year was against UVM when he scored 21 points.

Others who should see considerable action for Maine are 6-5 Dave Hale, UVM's Alden's twin brother, 6-3 Bruce Mackinnon, 6-0 Bob Woodbury, 5-11 Fred Woods, and 6-5 Dale McNelly. All of these boys scored in double figures in the Norwich game with former All-New England high school star Carr leading the way with 18 points.

Last Year's Games: Maine bombed Vermont twice last year in Orano by scores of 83-60 and 103-84.

This Year's Outlook: This season's Maine team is an extremely quick and aggressive unit which proved its speed in the Norwich game. Vermont will have to put up another good defensive effort and continue to improve its offense in order to cope with the hustling Maine squad this Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

A Trend Reflected At UVM?

Campuses View Controversial Issues

Student Evaluation Attempted

Rochester, N.Y.-(I.P.) - The "typical" professor in the University of Rochester's College of Arts gets an "A" for competence, interest in teaching well, and friendliness, according to a survey of undergraduates recently released here.

However, about one out of five received somewhat lower ratings on the ability to put across material "in an interesting way" and to stimulate independent thinking and arouse the students' intellectual curiosity.

The survey, the first of its kind at the University, covered over 4,000 student replies to a questionnaire distributed last spring by a faculty Committee on Improving Instruction. The student Committee on Educational Policy helped to distribute the forms.

Invitations to participate went to 168 teachers, who comprised a randomly selected 75 per cent sample of the faculty of the College of Arts and Science. Only 60 of those invited did not take part; many of these were not teaching an undergraduate course at the time. A total of 4,180 questionnaires was obtained from 117 classes, taught by approximately 50 per cent of the faculty of the College.

Students did not sign their replies; results for each class went only to the instructor involved. The students were polled on such points as: "How clearly does he (the instructor) present his subject matter?" "Is class time well spent?" The majority of the College faculty scored about average on all points, and, in most cases, "were given close to the top rating. Even the 20 per cent rated lower on teaching skills ran above average.

In addition to rating the professors, students were asked to check a list of 26 suggestions for improvement of courses. A number asked for better acquaintance with the instructors, more and better examinations, better statements of course objectives, and better grading procedures.

Ratings tended to be the same for men and women, for students with high and low grades, and for freshmen and upperclassmen, according to Vincent Nowlis, professor of psychology and chairman of the Committee on Improving Instruction.

Professor Nowlis pointed out that the goals of the survey were to provide the committee with general information, not identifiable by course or instructor, about strengths and weaknesses in the quality of undergraduate education, as seen by students, and to encourage more faculty members to obtain student opinion about their instruction.

Commenting on the results of the survey and of other types of student surveys, Professor Nowlis said, "Recent publicity concerning the grading of professors by students does not mean that this is a new development in higher education. The decision to use a student course opinion questionnaire is usually wholly up to the individual teacher and it is usually only he who reads the completed forms. At some colleges students conduct their own surveys and publish the results as a kind of guide to courses. While such guides may help the student as a kind of un-official supplement to the course catalog, they offer little help to the teacher.

"When inadequately done, as must necessarily often occur, the student guide may foster false perceptions on the part of both teacher and student. In any case, any survey of student opinion about instruction must be viewed as only one of the many means by which teacher and student continually evaluate their course."

Marked Change Called For

Ithaca, N.Y.-(I.P.) - The recently released report by the Faculty Committee on the Quality of Undergraduate Instruction at Cornell University states that students across the nation are being shortchanged in their education. "There can be no doubt that student dissatisfaction with undergraduate instruction, at Cornell as elsewhere, has basis in fact," the report stated bluntly.

The 13,000-word report called for a "marked change" in the attitude of teachers toward students and for increased emphasis on the importance of teaching. Teaching, it said, must be placed on the same level as research, publishing and public service.

However, the report stressed, "We are convinced that the increasing contact with external affairs on the part of professors does benefit undergraduate education. There is too little understanding of this point by students and people outside the University."

The committee noted that the past year "was marked by mounting criticisms of the education that the nation's universities were giving their undergraduates" and termed its report "an extensive self-examination." The committee held more than 25 meetings, talked with students, faculty members and administrative officers and studied numerous written reports.

Undergraduate education at Cornell, the report said, "though generally conscientious, often very good and occasionally brilliant -- commands neither the attention nor the status it deserves. If the quality of our teaching is not as high as it can and should be -- and that is our finding -- then the fundamental solution is that each one of us devote a considerably greater effort to making it better."

This requires "an academic atmosphere in which students feel that the university is truly interested in their educational and cultural development -- in their ideas, problems, and aspirations, and in their desire and ability to help improve the educational process. This atmosphere has not yet been achieved," the report said, "at least for the great majority of our students."

"At Cornell today there are few mechanisms whereby students can get the faculty and administration to give real consideration to their reactions and proposals without running the risk of being viewed by many as violators of good taste, or worse. But the fact that student discontent or indifference may derive in part from circumstances beyond the university's control does not mean that institutions of higher learning have no obligation to respond to the student's problems. On the contrary, in its teaching role the university is more than a dispenser of knowledge; as an educational institution it is charged with evoking and guiding the development of the young person's potential in judgment as well as intellect."

This doesn't mean, the report said, that the university has "either the capacity or the obligation to play the role of psychotherapist, let alone or substitute parent. It does, however, have the duty and the ability to provide him with teachers (which is not the same thing as exposing him to scholars) and to create a physical and social environment conducive to academic and cultural pursuits."

These needs cannot be met "if a substantial portion of the faculty define their responsibilities to undergraduates primarily in terms of formal instruction, leaving to others the task of hearing out the student, (or the task of) responding to his intellectual gropings and supporting or challenging his ideas," said the report.

A GOOD STUDENT DEFINED...

Chapter of the American Association of University Professors,
November 18, 1965

"WHAT ARE THE CHARACTERISTICS OF AN EXCELLENT STUDENT?"

His horizons exceed his untrained vision.

He has a catholicity of interests, far beyond his special field.

He is sincere in his intellectual efforts.

He measures achievement in terms of his own improvement rather than by comparison with his fellows.

He does not ask for special favors, such as postponement of tests, except in extreme cases, nor for switching of other sections of a class, in order to meet the deadline of the Cornell-Columbia game and similar events.

He does not try to make the life of younger instructors miserable by asking insincere questions.

He realizes that sometimes professors, like other groups, may be dogmatic in attitude, especially where their research leads them to think that they are experts in the area of their inquiry, however minute in scope.

He realizes that in this day of large classes, professors cannot always show the personal concern for students that they might like to see and have.

He appreciates the fact that one reason for the great differences in the teaching techniques of college professors is their immunity from taking standard methods courses such as those to which elementary and secondary teachers are exposed.

He has some degree of humility as befits the learner.

He appreciates the fact that while age alone is not the equivalent of wisdom, there is some value in the maturity gained over the years by his mentors.

He appreciates the fact that "wonder is the beginning of wisdom."

He is methodical in his study and work habits.

He turns in his assigned work on time.

He is meticulous in all term-paper work in respect to acknowledgments, citations, and so on.

He accepts the responsibilities of student citizenship in the academic community.

He appreciates the fact that the human mind is the most noble product of the evolutionary process.

He is sensitive to the speed with which the world is moving, and has an awareness of how glorious the condition of man might be as well as his share in achieving it.

He is flexible enough to change viewpoints as new knowledge reveals new truths.

He is aware of the true nature of the teacher-student relationship.

He may not be the brightest star in the intellectual firmament but he knows that he has the responsibility to develop himself to the full extent of his potentiality.

He has found, or is attempting to find, "a point of equilibrium between the dogmatism of being completely sure of everything and the emptiness of being sure of nothing." (Quoted from Harold Taylor, former president, Sarah Lawrence College).

He is aware that there is no academic obligation to laugh at the professor's jokes.

He does not apologize for asking questions, knowing that in the learning process all questions are important to the student.

He appreciates the fact that

Freedom And Order

Here are some notes I prepared for a philosophical symposium on "Freedom and Order: Focus on the University" (Conference at Western Reserve-Case Institute, in Cleveland). My position is classical anarchism.

Freedom and Order are not dialectical or polar, but are related as cause and consequence. Right order is the form of free functioning. The conflicts that arise in freedom usually produce creative solutions. But imposed "order" is chaos, and administered "harmony" destroys function and produces inanition.

In our present educational practice, we observe the following destructive impositions: 1. School methods appropriate for children are extended to high school and college years and hinder maturation. 2. Restriction to schooling as the one institution for education and growing up results in miseducation for, probably, 80%, including most of the bright. 3. Academic methods and environment take the life out of subjects and activities that are not properly academic. 4. Imposed schedules and the extrinsic motivation of grading hinder learning, which is always a concrete process and often individual in time and style. Most schooling makes people stupid. 5. When teaching and learning are harnessed beforehand to extrinsic National goals and the drive to union cards and licenses, the result is role-playing rather than task.

It is better, with all deliberate speed, to let the present university structures fall apart into their simpler communities and for their order to be reconstituted according to functions of immediate teaching and learning and the intrinsic motivations of teachers and students. (This does not necessarily mean scattering the populations. A university city of many thousands has great advantages; it does mean radically decentralizing the administration.)

A. In educational (rather than school) policy, we ought: 1. To open a variety of ways of being educated, e.g. academic, apprentice, technical training administered by corporations, self-study, work in subsidized non-commercial real cultural enterprises, collegiate experience for the non-verbal and even illiterate (as in the Danish Folk High Schools), etc. There should be public support of universal education, but only a small part of the money given to school administrators. 2. To open numerous opportunities for leaving and re-entry, to encourage trying out and maturation at one's own tempo.

B. In school policy, teaching and learning is a complex ethical and psychological relation, but it is sociologically quite simple, consisting of small face-to-face communities. Therefore, 1. Drop all administrative machinery of admissions, requirements, grading, etc. Restore these functions to teachers and students. The functions of administration are janitorial, bookkeeping, and protecting the educational community in the general society. 2. Make the small communities entirely self-governing in both academic and social matters. 3. Let curriculum be determined by what teachers want to teach. By confrontation with free teachers, students will soonest find themselves and learn what is relevant or irrelevant to their own interests. 4. When a student finds a subject interesting to himself, let him demand that the teaching meet his present needs and prepare him for the uses that he wants to make of his studies in the future. Such demand by the student reinvigorates the teacher and makes his thought relevant to the present and future. 5. These two principles, of faculty judgment of importance and student demand for preparation for life, are sufficient to relate school and society. Society will then get the best use of its universities as providing earnest and intrinsically motivated professionals, experts, and scholars.

Our present educational abuses are due to the imperialism of extra-mural demands and of the School establishment that seeks to aggrandize itself. A result is the immense inflation of educational costs. I estimate the mark-up as 300 to 400%; it is expensive to try to cement parts that do not naturally cohere, and to pay for administration that is fundamentally irrelevant.

By its peculiar double-think, the School establishment will agree to most of the above propositions. (Indeed, they are the truisms of Lehrfreiheit and Lernfreiheit.) And nevertheless, the present practices will be maintained and become worse. The inevitable crises will be met by adding new levels of superstructure -- e.g. Guidance or Honors courses -- without changing any of the mistaken, but administratively profitable, premises.

Censorship Affirmed

The Kentucky Intercollegiate Press Association has rejected a statement on freedom of the student press that would call for an end to faculty and administrative censorship.

The move came on a 5-4 vote of the association's executive council following the annual fall meeting of the group, held this year at Berea College. The executive council is composed of the editors of all member papers.

The proposal, introduced by Walter Grant, editor of the Kentucky Kernel and USSPA NEB member for dailies in the South, is similar to one passed by the New Jersey Press Association.

Controversy centered around point six of the resolution which says, "The editor accepts the responsibility for the paper and its contents. In no case can a representative of a university, whether a board or faculty member, have the implied or express power of prior censorship."

An amendment was introduced by the adviser to the Berea College paper, the Pinnacle, would have changed the wording from "in no case can..." to "in no case should..." The amendment failed. Normally advisers have no voice in the executive council, but President Neil Latham, editor of the Union College Orange and Black, allowed the Berea adviser to speak and introduce the amendment.

The editors from the University of Kentucky Wesleyan College, Union College, and Morehead State College supported the resolution. Voting against the resolution were editors from Eastern Kentucky State College, Kentucky Southern College, Georgetown College, Berea College, and Western Kentucky State College.

Aside from the contention over point six, some editors also expressed an unwillingness to present the resolution, if passed, to their college presidents in hopes of ratification by all colleges and universities in the state.

"We're working for a free student press throughout the state, but a document like this will only ruffle the feathers of administrators who might be offended," Walter Richardson, adviser to the Western Kentucky State College Herald, told the council.

"I know what would happen if I took this into my president's office," the editor of the Eastern Kentucky State College Progress said: "I'd lost my job."

SMARTER FROSH?

University of Vermont Director of Admissions Harold C. Collins reports that freshmen last year scored the highest first semester average since World War II, 74.5 per cent, up from 73.8 per cent the year before.

Academic Freedom?

Across the land, from Ohio to North Carolina and from New Jersey to California, the real meaning of academic freedom is being debated. The debate is not confined to the campuses and AAUP BULLETIN.

The controversy surrounding the question has become a critical issue in the politics of several states and, indeed, the nation at large. The debate engages not only heretofore obscure professors, but governors, senators, and ex-presidential candidates. Academic freedom is once again a national issue.

Freedom of speech on college and university campuses has become inescapably intertwined with the broader question of freedom to dissent in our society, and for many is linked to specific movements or grievances: the communist threat, civil rights, Viet Nam and the Dominican Republic, Berkeley.

In North Carolina, a "speaker-ban" law was hurriedly pushed through the state legislature in the closing hours of the 1963 session. This unique law prohibits "any known member" of the Communist Party, or anyone who has invoked the fifth amendment's protection against self-incrimination in loyalty investigations, from speaking on state-supported college and university campuses.

The proponents of the law were motivated by diverse concerns, ranging from anger over civil rights demonstrations in the state capital participated in by some U.N.C. faculty and students to general popular unrest over the "liberal" teaching at the state university. One of the chief backers of the law, State Senator Thomas White, has candidly commented: "I don't believe there's a Communist...over there (Chapel Hill), but there might as well be as long as the people think there is. They need to reassure people along this line."

(It should be noted that such a law has been under consideration in the state legislatures in at least ten other states: Alabama, California, Florida, Georgia, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia, Wisconsin, and Maryland.)

The heavy hand of such a law (or ruling to the same effect) is felt in its administration. Narrow minded college and university administrators, worried about maintaining good relations with state legislatures, can virtually control the flow of speakers from the outside.

This danger is illustrated by Ohio State's "gag rule" and modifications thereof, which in effect denied access to the campus to any speaker not acceptable to the conservative administration. A kind of administrative tyranny has prevailed under which the President of Ohio State, Novice Pawcett, bans from campus anyone distasteful to a faction of the trustees led by former U.S. Senator John W. Bricker.

However, a student protest movement led by the Free Speech Front and Students for Liberal Action appears to have been successful this year. In August, the trustees voted a rule change which rests final authority to invite speakers in recognized student groups and faculty advisers, with no limitation on who may speak. A rebuttal can be prescribed by the faculty council.

But the years of struggle at U.N.C. and Ohio State have taken their toll in loss of faculty, both incumbent and prospective. The sense of alienation caused by an atmosphere that stifles freedom is currently portrayed by Professor Eric Solomon, formerly of Ohio State, in THE ATLANTIC, November, 1965. Some three hundred faculty members at the University of North Carolina have signed a document saying they will be impelled to seek posts elsewhere if accreditation is lost.

The most heartening recent development is the failure of the Republican candidate for governor in New Jersey, State Senator Wayne Dumont, to defeat Governor Richard J. Hughes in the November 2nd election.

Dumont's main issue was his attack on Hughes for failure to demand the dismissal of a Viet Cong sympathizer on the faculty of the state university (Rutgers). Governor Hughes made it clear that he disagreed strongly with the views of Professor Genovese, but that he also believed in freedom of speech and a university free of political interference.

Just recently a subcommittee of the United States Senate projected itself into the controversy on academic freedom. The Senate Internal Security subcommittee staff, by direction of Democratic Senator Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, published a report on October 20th designed to show that the Viet Nam protest movement had been taken over by "Communists and extremist elements."

Professors at several colleges and universities were unfavorably identified with teaching. The report contained much misleading and false information, especially in regard to the University of Colorado. (See The New York Times, October 29th, 1965). Senator Dodd expressed "regret" in a letter to the president of the university, but presumed to add: "I do feel that there is a situation on your campus which calls for attention." The report had inferred Communist influence at Colorado.

What is at stake in these battles is the raison d'être of colleges and universities, what Dean David Truman of Columbia College has called "an unembarrassed intensity about matters of the intellect, a hierarchy of respect...for competence and imagination, an attachment to the fragile values of civilization."

To assert these "fragile values" is not to deny the obligation of the colleges and universities in this country to provide responsible leadership. Rather, it is to reaffirm this obligation. The soap box is not and must not be a substitute for the classroom. But the campuses of the nation must constantly warn against the misguided search for a static security. As Justice Douglas once said: "The fact is that security can only be achieved through constant change...There is only an illusion of safety in a Maginot Line. Social forces like armies can sweep around a fixed position and make it untenable."

Some ideas do have durability however. The Framers of The Constitution were not afraid for men to be free. Today we should be as confident as Jefferson was when he said in his First Inaugural Address: "If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."

Miles To Head Geography Dept.

Professor Miles

The University of Vermont has named a Canadian native to serve as chairman of the newly-established department of geography.

Dr. Edward J. Miles came to the University in 1962 when courses in geography were added. The Board of Trustees approved establishment of the department at their December meeting.

UVM President Shannon McCune said establishment of a department of geography had been envisioned when Dr. Miles was named to the faculty, and he noted that the academic program in geography has been "very much a part of the University's area studies programs."

Dr. Miles has served as chairman of the committee for one of those area studies programs - the Canadian.

Born in London, Ontario, he is a graduate of the University of Western Ontario and holds the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Syracuse. He taught at Concord College, and the Universities of Florida, Maryland, and Indiana, and Valparaiso University before coming to Vermont.

He has traveled extensively overseas and has contributed articles to a number of professional journals.

Johnny Mathis To Appear In Burlington

Burlington's Municipal Auditorium will sparkle with song Tuesday, February 15 at 8:30 p.m. when pop male vocalist Johnny Mathis headlines a two-hour show. Mathis, who has held audiences spellbound from Australia to England with his repertoire of old and new ballads, is including Burlington on his tour itinerary for the first time.

The Mathis Show of course features a lengthy program of the singer's top hits like "It's Not For Me To Say," "Twelfth of Never," and his current single, "On A Clear Day, You Can See Forever." Backed by a 25 piece orchestra, Mathis caresses and wails his way through one of the most wide-ranging surveys of popular ballads of any singer working today. A sure show-stopper is his own favorite song "Maria" from West Side Story.

Joining Mathis on the bill are a group of ten young men and women called "Our Young Generation" who weave their own magic both as a chorus behind the star and on their own.

Tickets, priced at $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 for all reserved seats, are available at Bailey's Music Rooms, 88 Church St. in Burlington and may be purchased in person or by mail to "Mathis Concert" care of Bailey's.

'POPULATION' EXPLOSION

The Libraries of the University of Vermont last year acquired 17,363 new books, 3,776 new periodicals, and 24,012 new documents.

Instructor Dies In Vietnam

Captain Strickler Drowns In Saigon

UVM, Jan. 23 - Department of the Army released today, information that Captain John C. Strickler Jr. has drowned accidentally in Saigon harbor. Captain Strickler had been serving as an engineer on several projects associated with the port facility improvement in the Saigon area.

Captain Strickler

Captain Strickler joined UVM's faculty in July, 1962. He departed for Vietnam in April, 1965. While on campus, he instructed sophomore ROTC cadets, conducted the university's rifle team activities and served as faculty advisor to Sigma Phi fraternity. He was a candidate for the degree of Master of Science in Commerce in his off-duty time. Course work completed, he had hoped to complete his thesis requirement while in Vietnam in an area related to the Vietnamese war economy. He was awarded the Army Commendation Medal upon his departure from the university in recognition of his outstanding performance.

Captain Strickler graduated from Cornell University in 1958. He was an ROTC Distinguished Military Graduate. While in Burlington, he and his wife Anne and their three children lived at Fort Ethan Allen. Mrs. Strickler was a 1965 graduate of UVM. She received her bachelors degree in education, cum laude.

Burial will be at Arlington National Cemetery. Details are not yet available. UVM President Shannon McCune has directed that the United States flag at the university be flown at half staff in tribute to the former faculty member.

UVM May Start New Dorm Next Summer

From The Burlington Free Press

"Construction of new dormitory facilities for either men or women students - or both - at the University of Vermont could begin late next summer.

More than $2.8 million for the potentially "coeducational" living quarters for 450 students was reserved last week by the Community Facilities Administration.

However, UVM hasn't made final application for the funds, which actually represent a loan.

The UVM Board of Trustees is expected to consider the proposed building at its February meeting.

UVM Dean Of Men Roland Patzer said the use of dormitories by either men or women is being planned so that as the years go by, and the student population changes, there will be accommodations.

"This will allow us flexibility in housing," said Patzer. "Sometimes we have more men than women, and other times we might have more women. This way, we'll have some place to put them.

"But the new dorms could be used by both men and women at the same time," he said.

UVM prefers to call the building complex "student residence halls" rather than dormitories.

The "halls" would be three separate units, each four stories high, forming a "U" which would have its open end facing Mt. Mansfield. If built, it would be between the Patrick Gymnasium and Marsh Hall, a dormitory for men.

The buildings would be interconnected at the ground floor by a common "circulation gallery" from which would stem a dining hall, coeducational lounges, offices, and a library.

There would be 72 double bedrooms in each building, as well as 12 single rooms for student counselors. Typing and study rooms would also be nearby.

Corridors on the upper floor would be short - between three and four rooms long - to cut down on the noise.

The exterior of the reinforced concrete structures would be brick, arranged in an irregular shaped pattern. The interior section of the "U" would be landscaped.

Architects are Geddes, Brecher, Qualls, and Cunningham of Philadelphia, in association with Freeman French Freeman of Burlington.

Heating plants of the gymnasium and Marsh Hall would be utilized by the new buildings, which would not require heating units of their own.

If construction starts as planned, the new housing should be ready by the fall of 1968.

2. Supports and frames may be used on the sculpture, but they must not be visible at the judging.

3. The work area about the sculpture must be cleaned up.

4. The only stipulation concerning size or design is that the sculpture be related to some aspect of the Kake Walk.

5. Judging will begin at 10:00 a.m. on Saturday, February 26, 1966, at which time all work is to have been completed. No member of the participating organization should interfere by any means with the process of judging.

N.B.: any infraction of these rules will result in immediate disqualification by the judges.

The judging will be based on the following:

1. Workmanship
2. Over-all effect
3. Originality

Emphasis will be placed on workmanship.

Silvert Speaks On Latin America

The Center for Area Studies in conjunction with the Florence Dean Fund will be sponsoring a series of lectures on the topic of "Comparative Education." There will be four lecturers this year, who will each speak on the four geographic areas which the center studies.

One of these areas, which is Latin America, will be the source of discussion by the first speaker of the lecture series who will be Kalman H. Silvert. The topic which Mr. Silvert will speak on will be, "The Student in Latin America."

Mr. Silvert is currently teaching at Dartmouth College. Mr. Silvert is highly qualified to speak on Latin America. He has written many books and contributed numerous articles about Latin America. In 1955, Mr. Silvert joined the American University Field Service and reported on Argentina, Chile and Uruguay. In 1960-61, he directed a major study of the role of education in the social and economic development of Latin America. This study was carried out as a result of a grant from the Carnegie Foundation to the American University Field Service.

Mr. Silvert is regarded as one of the foremost authorities in the field. Mr. Silvert will open the 1966 lecture series conducted by the Center For Area Studies on Feb. 2, 1966 at 8:00 p.m. in North Lounge, Billings Center.

NOTICE TO ALIENS

Mr. Bernard Steen, District Director of the Immigration & Naturalization Service today urged all aliens in Vermont who have not yet filled out alien address report forms, to do so before Jan. 31 at the nearest Immigration and Naturalization Service office or local Post Office.

The Immigration official pointed out that the law requires all non-citizens, except persons in diplomatic status, foreign representatives to certain international organizations, such as the United Nations, and aliens here temporarily as agricultural contract laborers, to report their addresses to the Government each January.

Mr. Steen declared, "We have tried to make it as convenient as possible for non-citizens to meet the address report requirements; and, in view of serious penalties for willful violations, all persons subject to the address report law are urged to fulfill this obligation before the end of January."

Mr. Steen advised, "It is easy for an alien to meet this requirement. He just goes to the nearest Immigration and Naturalization Service office or post office, fills out the address report form, and returns it to the clerk. Any non-citizen who is ill may send a friend or relative to obtain the card for him, and return it to the clerk after it has been completed by the alien."

The Immigration official said 5000 aliens in Vermont already have filled out address reports. He estimated that 7,500 such reports will be submitted before January 31st.

Modern Dancers To Perform

First Offering

In Chamber Arts

In recent years, Jose Limon has preoccupied himself with the larger choreographic form. Following in the footsteps of the great Doris Humphrey, his teacher and artistic director, who is considered one of the masters of the choreographic art, he is now interested in longer ballets, using an expanded company. Following this new bent, he produced in 1960 the highly experimental and original "Performance," first performed at the Juilliard Auditorium in New York City. This work explored new horizons both as to subject matter and the use of the resources of the theater. It utilized forty dancers. In 1958, after returning from a European Tour, he created "Missa Brevis." This work is Limon's reaction to the war's devastation of the cities of Europe, and his tribute to the transcendent human spirit which survives and persists amidst the destruction. It is a heroic and beautiful work, which was enthusiastically received in New York, and was the great success in the South American tour of 1960, and the Far Eastern tour of 1963.

"A Choreographic Offering."

Mr. Limon's most recent opus, was recently one of the highlights at the performances of the newly launched American Dance Theater at the New York State Theater in Lincoln Center. It is his longest ballet to date. It is regarded by the "cognoscente" as ranking with Limon's masterpieces "The Moor's Pavane" and "Missa Brevis." This work is set to the music of J.S. Bach, and is a series of variations on choreographic themes of the late Doris Humphrey and is a memorial tribute to her. In it are paraphrased motifs from her works, such as "New Dance," "Variations and Conclusions," "Passacaglia," and "Invention."

Following his policy to present to local audiences only the best of his productions, and nothing that has not passed the acid test of the highly exacting New York public, Mr. Limon will appear in the Lane Chamber Art Series on Feb. 4, at 8:30 p.m. at Memorial Auditorium.

STAYING POWERS

Recent experience shows that 90 per cent of the freshmen, sophomores and juniors who enrolled at the University of Vermont this fall will be back next year, according to an analysis of figures of UVM's Admissions Office.

Past Present

The Company's first engine, the Wasp, took to the air on May 5, 1926. Within a year the Wasp set its first world record and went on to smash existing records and set standards for both land and seaplanes for years to come, carrying airframes and pilots higher, farther, and faster than they had ever gone before.

In recent years, planes powered by Pratt & Whitney Aircraft have gone on to set new standards of performance in much the same way as the Wasp had done in the 1920's. The 727 and DC-9 are indicative of the new family of short-to-medium range jetliners which are powered by the highly successful JT8D turbofan. Examples of current military utilizations are the J58-powered Mach 3 YF-12A which recently established four world aviation records and the advanced TF30-powered F-111 variable-geometry fighter aircraft.

Your and the Future

Take a look at the above chart; then a good-long look at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft—where technical careers offer exciting growth, continuing challenge, and lasting stability—where engineers and scientists are recognized as the major reason for the Company's continued success.

Engineers and scientists at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft are today exploring the ever-broadening avenues of energy conversion for every environment... all opening up new avenues of exploration in every field of aerospace, marine and industrial power application. The technical staff working on these programs, backed by Management's determination to provide the best and most advanced facilities and scientific apparatus, has already given the Company a firm foothold in the current land, sea, air and space programs so vital to our country's future. The list of achievements amassed by our technical staff is a veritable list of firsts in the development of compact power plants; dating back to the first Wasp engine which lifted the United States to a position of world leadership in aviation. These engineering and scientific achievements have enabled the Company to obtain its current position of leadership in fields such as gas turbines, liquid hydrogen technology and fuel cells.

Should you join us, you'll be assigned early responsibility. You'll find the spread of Pratt & Whitney Aircraft's programs requires virtually every technical talent. You'll find opportunities for professional growth further enhanced by our Corporation-financed Graduate Education Program. Your degree can be a BS, MS or PhD in: MECHANICAL • AERONAUTICAL • ELECTRICAL • CHEMICAL ENGINEERING • PHYSICS • CHEMISTRY • METALLURGY • CERAMICS • MATHEMATICS • ENGINEERING SCIENCE OR APPLIED MECHANICS.

For further information concerning a career with Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, consult your college placement officer—or write Mr. William L. Stoner, Engineering Department, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, East Hartford, Connecticut 06108.

ROTC AWARDS

VERMONTERS CAPTURE
TWO-THIRDS OF TOP SPOTS

The annual senior class banquet of the UVM Army ROTC Brigade was held Jan. 21 at the Lincoln Inn, under the sponsorship of the Ethan Allen Rifles honor society. A long-standing tradition in the Brigade, the banquet provides the setting for award of prized leadership positions and permanent cadet rank to members of the Class of '66. This year, native Vermonters captured two-thirds of the top spots, a percentage far higher than their relative strength within the Brigade.

Speaker for the banquet was Lieutenant Governor John Daley. President and Mrs. Shannon McCune were honored guests together with key members of the faculty and staff.

Cadets honored with key assignments were:

Brigade Commander & Cadet Colonel: Peter McGregor, Burlington, Vt.

Brigade Executive & Cadet Lt. Col.: Paul Tierney, Woodstock, Vt.

Battalion Commander & Cadet Lt. Col.: Todd Fischer, Tonawanda, N.Y., Robert Thoresen, Riverside, Conn.

Brigade Staff Officers & Cadet Majors: David Cohen, Burlington, Vt., David Cornell, Warrensburg, N.Y., John Hughes, Jr., Burlington, Vt., and Walter Pressey, Montpelier, Vt.

Battalion Staff Officers & Cadet Majors: Milton Goggans, Hoboken, N.J., and James Pelton, West Rupert, Vt.

Company Commanders & Cadet Captains: Michael Jarvis, Burlington, Vt., William Rush, S. Burlington, Vt., Walter Stowell, Townshend, Vt., and Boyd Tomasetti, Northampton, Mass.

"The Death of God" has been proclaimed by The New Yorker, Time and the New York Times as one of the most significant issues this year. "The Death of God" is the provocative topic of Vermont Conference this spring. Students at the university will have first hand opportunity to hear some of the leaders in this new turn in theological or atheological thought. It is not a purely atheistic movement, and no simple denial of God in the tradition of a strong, robust humanism is meant. In fact, some of the leaders in the movement are ordained clergymen.

In part, the roots of the movement can be traced to Nietzsche's cry in The Gay Science, "God is dead...we have killed him." Now this could perhaps mean that through his own complacency and through mere external performance of religious duties without conviction man has deadened or destroyed any genuine conviction in God as a transcendent being. Or it could suggest that we must think of God in a new fashion. As the German theologian Bonhoeffer in 1944 wrote: "We are proceeding toward a time of no religion at all. How do we speak of God without religion...How do we speak in a secular fashion of God?"

The literal interpretation of the phrase, "God is dead," stems from the application of certain movements in thought influenced by science which stress that for a concept to have meaning it must refer to something in the world around us. Although this interpretation of meaning has been largely discarded or severely modified by its original exponents, it has influenced some American theologians. They affirm that since no method can be given for discovering the concept "God," the concept is without meaning. So it would be more precise to say, according to this view, not that "God is dead" but rather that the term "God" has no meaning. As a result, one leading exponent of this position suggests that in place of a theology there should be secular "Christology" based on the example of the historical Jesus.

This approach suggests a concern with the secular. It sees the significance of religion in love of one's neighbor, commitment to the removal of social injustices, and generally, in the secular rather than the sacred, which has vanished from the modern scene.

While agreeing that the concept of God as an anthropomorphic being "up there" in heaven is outmoded and in a sense dead, another significant theological movement bases its position on the philosophy of Alfred North Whitehead. This movement, known as process theology, moves away from the concept of God as a static, completely developed entity and views him as in some sense undergoing change and development with all else in nature.

It is expected that Vermont conference will have leading representatives of these two movements in theological thinking as well as a participant who believes that God, in something like the traditional sense, is very much alive.

Work Abroad

Switzerland - The International Travel Establishment has opened its doors to any student who would like a summer job in Europe next summer. Job opportunities ranging from clerical and modeling work to farm and factory work are available throughout Western Europe. Wages, as in the U.S.A., are commensurate with the work but in all cases both wages and living conditions are the same as those of the European co-workers.

ITE also offers low priced student tours of Europe however, students wishing only to work may obtain a job through the agency without having to participate in a tour or be burdened with any other obligation.

Application forms and full details about available jobs and the student tours may be obtained by writing to Dept. 1, International Travel Establishment, 68 Herengasse, Vaduz, Liechtenstein (Switzerland). Inquiries must be accompanied by $1 to cover the cost of the material and air mail postage.

EDITORIAL...

Final exams represent a painful, if not devastating experience for many of us. In recent years the pain has intensified and we conclude that this school's philosophy with regard to finals is in serious need of re-examination.

The fact is that few if any examinations offer a valid indication of how much we know. At best they are indicative of performance. The assumption underlying the present gross overemphasis of final exams appears to be that the performance of a student who has studied diligently all semester long will always be commensurate with what he has learned. Such an assumption is a monument to asininity for it ignores the many psychological factors which enter into human performance of any task. We cannot realistically expect the instructor to consider the mental state of each of his students in assigning final grades. But we can ask that he deemphasize finals. That any given exam may account for from 50 to 70 per cent or more of a semester grade is absurd, for it means that one exam can conceivably cancel out an entire semester of hard work, and this happens quite frequently. The absurdity of the situation is compounded by the fact that some students must take hour exams and write papers within a few days of the final period. It is not surprising to find two divergent student attitudes arising out of the initial strain and eventual delirium of final week. One is characterized by disgust, a complete loss of the will to study, and an obsession with the prospect of simply getting out of this place (perhaps you know the feeling), the other by a final burst of enthusiasm as the end of scholastic harassment draws nearer to reality. The latter is a very practical philosophy but not as common as the former, which is common to students of every caliber. In short, the current status of final exams appears as the product of a collectively morbid sense of humor. But the joke is on us, the students, for it is in its own way a parody of education and succeeds only in reducing academic success to a matter of psychological stamina.

Our suggestion? We feel that bi-weekly quizzes (or something similar) would provide a suitable alternative to the current system, and would achieve the same goals but with a marked decrease in the number of emotional disorders. Such a system should reassure instructors that their students are doing their assignments satisfactorily, which is presumably all they ask, and should thus eliminate the necessity of final exams. For those professors who feel that they just can't break with tradition they should feel free to give finals, but with a reapportioned value in the neighborhood of 20 per cent of the final grade.

BLACK NIGHTS AT THE ROUND TABLE

One by one the overhead spotlights in the Apse ("round room" to most of us) in Billings Center have been blowing out. As we go to press there remains but one of those lights focused on the round table in the round room. It has occurred to us that the reason the bulbs have not been changed is that no one has yet figured out a way to get up that high.

Continuing in our role as champion of the academically oppressed, we of the CYNIC devised what we feel is an appropriate strategy for coping with this crisis. Needless to say, the logistical problems are enormous, but, enlisting the resources of Buildings & Grounds we feel that a total blackout can be averted.

This is our plan: With reference to Buildings & Grounds we will require a band of thirteen of their merriest men. With reference to each light bulb, ten of these stout-hearted gentlemen will stand on each other's shoulders (by order of seniority) until the top man has a firm hold on the bulb. Then the remaining three will simply turn the round table upon which the bottom man is standing.

This is not an entirely original solution. It is, rather, an American variation on what we are told is a traditionally Slavic theme. But it should suffice in the absence of one resourceful man with a very tall ladder.

Letters To The Editor

Spinner Versus

Schmokel Contd.

To the Editor:

While it may be true (though I do not think so) that I "whacked away" at my "favorite straw men" in my letter to The CYNIC, a careful reading of Professor Schmokel's most recent contribution to the discussion leads me to conclude that he is not entirely free from the human failing of projecting one's own faults on to the shoulders of another. For I still find a profound unwillingness to discuss the underlying reasons behind American aggression in Vietnam.

Now in Professor Schmokel's first letter he wrote that "the United States government has stated its willingness to negotiate often and clearly" and the Viet Cong and Hanoi were accused of demanding "unconditional surrender." But by the time of his second letter it was necessary to re-write the official line as a result of the State Department's acknowledgment that there had been offers from North Vietnam to open discussions which we had summarily rejected. I can certainly understand Professor Schmokel's discomfiture since the President has seemed so convincing when he stated at a press conference on 13 July: "I must say that candor compels me to tell you that there has not been the slightest indication that the other side is interested in negotiation or in unconditional discussions, although the United States has made some dozen separate attempts to bring that about."

MORE DISCUSSION

There were, however, several "overtures for further discussion" from North Vietnam in late 1964 and early 1965 and not simply the one which Professor Schmokel writes off as a "myth" since it does not fit into his conceptual scheme. These offers are discussed by Bernard Fall in the New York Times Magazine of 12 December and by Eric Sevareid in the 30 November issue of Look Magazine.

It seems to this observer that it is the American government which is preventing the Vietnamese people from working out a just settlement among themselves by its insistence that the National Liberation Front surrender unconditionally. Writing from Vietnam on 23 October, Nell Sheehan of the New York Times commented that the term "unconditional discussions" was meaningless since the Johnson administration made it "clear to Hanoi through neutral intermediaries and in the fine print of its public pronouncements" that what it means "by negotiations is a conference at which Hanoi would agree to cease its activities in the South, abandon its attempt to unify this country under Communist rule and acquiesce in a permanent partition of Vietnam." And in The Observer of London on 5 December, Gavin Young reported from Saigon "that South Vietnamese leaders have been assured by the U.S. that they should not take Washington's peace overtures at face value... Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, the American Ambassador, has apparently convinced the generals that Washington must resurrect President Johnson's offer of unconditional discussions every once in a while, at the same time issuing a blank cheque to the military to win the war."

What then are we to make of the present bombing pause over North Vietnam. It should be noted that the bombing continues in South Vietnam and in Laos and the American arms build-up also continues in South Vietnam and in Thailand. The "Memorandum of Law of the Lawyers' Committee on American Policy Toward Vietnam" concluded that U.S. policy in Vietnam violates the U.N. Charter, the Geneva Accords, the SEATO agreement and the U.S. Constitution. Since the statements made by the Johnson administration during the current "peace offensive" do not provide for direct talks with the National Liberation Front one is reluctantly forced to believe that we are watching what Le Monde has called an "improvised publicity operation." The President would appear to be trying to restore public confidence in his policies after the ghastly way in which the LaPira-Fanfani incident was handled by the State Department and to be preparing the American people for a further escalation of the conflict which might include "Rotterdam-type" attacks on Hanoi and Haiphong.

'64 - A HOAX

It is certainly possible that the election of 1964 may go down as one of the greatest hoaxes in American history. I can still remember my liberal friends informing me that the election of Barry Goldwater would be a national disaster. A picture was quickly drawn of a powerhappy, unsophisticated Goldwater sitting in the White House with his finger near the nuclear button. I was informed that Goldwater would send thousands of troops to Southeast Asia, bomb North Vietnam and Laos, invade Cambodia, defoliate the countryside, burn villages and contemplate a preventive war with China. Well, the liberal nightmare has come true as Johnson carries out a Goldwater foreign policy. And where are the liberals? A few of them have spoken out but the majority have knuckled under and gone along. Words uttered by Congressman Abraham Lincoln about President Polk in early 1848 may perhaps have some relevance to the Washington scene in 1966: "His mind, taxed beyond its power, is running hither and thither, like some tortured creature on a burning surface, finding no position on which it can settle down and be at ease.... He is a bewildered, confounded, and miserably perplexed man. God grant he may be able to show there is not something about his conscience more painful than his mental perplexity."

SUMMARY

I can think of no better summary of the present situation than the one made by Senator George McGovern of South Dakota on 5 January: "The rebels control two-thirds of South Vietnam and their leadership embraces a broad cross-section including many non-Communists. They cannot be expected to permit Moscow, Peking, Hanoi or anyone else to do their negotiating for them. Nor can they be expected to accept any settlement that does not give them a reasonable opportunity to share in the post-war government -- a government which ultimately should be determined by the Vietnamese people in an honorably supervised election. Refusing to negotiate with the rebel front would have its parallel if King George III had expressed a willingness to negotiate with France while refusing to talk with George Washington and his rebel forces."

Sincerely yours,
Thomas J. Spinner, Jr.
Assistant Professor, History

P.S.

Countries which become too rich, too fat and too set in their ways in a revolutionary world may soon begin to suffer from hardening of the arteries. I gather that anyone who opposes Professor Schmokel's views on Vietnam is a Vietnik. Such a term seems to add nothing of a constructive value to the debate. I would simply say that many Americans (see the list of sponsors for the March on Washington for Peace in Vietnam) from all parts of the political, economic and social spectrum regard U.S. policy in Southeast Asia as politically disastrous and morally outrageous. I had hoped -- and still do -- that this exchange of letters between Professor Schmokel and myself might encourage more students to investigate the issues involved and to join the discussion.

Should You Stay In College?

College students keep asking me if they should quit. My usual answer has been: Life is not a bad of roses in or out of college; stay if there's even a single subject you are really interested in and feel you are learning — unless, of course, the routine is bad for your health or you have to do something dishonorable, like taking to get by.

But I now think this is the wrong approach. The right answer is that given to the young by Prince Kropotkin half a century ago: Ask yourself what you want to do with these beautiful and useful subjects that are presumably available in the university, and see to it that you get what you need.

If you are in engineering, ask what kind of community you want to make housing, roads, or machinery for; what kind of housing etc. such a community needs; and how best to prepare yourself for the task. The inquiry will certainly lead you into sociological questions, economics and politics, and perhaps even into political actions to make your future possible. (Maybe, at present, we need fewer roads, and your task is to prevent them from being built!)

If you are going for medicine, think about health as well as pathology, and the superiority of preventive medicine to curative medicine. This will give meaning to biology, chemistry, and anatomy; it will certainly lead you into psychosomatics and social hygiene. Here again you may find yourself in troublesome action. And you may find that you are a maverick; for instance, you may begin to see the attraction of the arduous career of general family practice with house visits, during which you can forestall future chronic diseases, instead of the present rage for specialization and office visits, plus psychiatry when it is late in the game.

If you will study law, remember that it really deals with the making of a just society and defense against injustice in any society. This will soon bring you into problems of politics, history, and administration. It will make you a critic of legislation. You might even have some important questions to ask in rhetoric and English, when you realize that bureaucracies are trapped in their routine languages and rituals. Look into the admirable ball project at N. Y. U., manned by students, that has saved thousands of poor people from rotting in jail.

Those in the humanities and history know in their bones that, as Arnold put it, literature is the criticism of life, the touchstone we hold against the actuality; as Dewey put it, it is by appreciation that we judge the worth of what we're after next. I doubt that the level of TV, the lies in the press, or the campaign speeches of politicians can stand up under the scrutiny of humanists. Also, the monuments of humanity in literature and the causes of history — perhaps especially the "lost causes" — give us other ways of being men than the roles and motives that seem possible in 1965.

In general, all university sciences and arts have theoretical and methodical parts that are remarkable for their beauty and ingenuity, and something is very wrong with college teaching if students do not come to delight in these things. But besides, especially students of physical science ought also to ask what applications of theory are desirable and worth looking at. (I am surprised that some of the contracted research in some of our universities is not being picketed by science students.) We use a high scientific technology that most of us do not understand, and these students must become the critics and interpreters for us of the political economy of science.

Needless to say, students who stubbornly insist on getting what they need from the university courses, for better ends than getting a degree, license, and good salary, are likely to clash with the system they are in, with its syllabus and departmentalization and its academic isolation from reality. They will certainly clash with authoritarian control. But then they will have specific causes for anger and conflict. Instead of being passive and unfulfilled, they will be aggressive and frustrated. This is better than simply quitting in disgust, and it is certainly better than empty griping.

Such a changed student attitude would bring the professors back to life. A professor would have to prove the relevance of his subject, and so find new relevance in it. He would have students with articulate questions, who are the easiest to teach, though often embarrassing to one's ignorance. But most important, in my opinion, is that society could again be irradiated with science and arts. As it is at present, with all our Knowledge Explosion and college-going, there is very little evidence that many people are taking thought.

Student Communist Drive Assailed

(The Lantern - Dec., 1965)

By Kenneth P. Nasif
As American college students, we must be constantly aware of the fallacies and false doctrines preached by Communists and their fellow travelers. We must be educated in the methods they employ to gain a foothold in our American educational system. Much of their attempt is focused on penetrating our colleges in the forms of student rebellions, protests, and riots, guest speakers and discussions, and student organizations including political, social, and civil rights groups.

In a testimony before the House Sub-committee on Appropriations on March 4, 1965, F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover stated, "The Communist Party in this country in 1964 greatly stepped up its programs designed to increase its membership through the recruitment of youth and to place Party leaders on college campuses." Mr. Hoover went on to note that we must never lose sight of the fact that the Communist Party in the United States is an organization which is under the firm control and guidance of the Soviet Union. "It owes its allegiance only to the Soviet Union and has served directly and willingly as an adjunct to Soviet Policy."

The Declaration of the International Communist Conference held in Moscow in November-December, 1960, proclaimed that "There are new opportunities now to draw the younger generation into the struggle for the ideas of Communism." The Declaration ordered the Communists of the world to "extend their work among the youth" (World Marxist Review, December, 1960).

COMMUNIST LECTURES

In his testimony of March 4, Hoover said that Communist Party spokesmen made 44 appearances before college groups during the calendar year 1964. Among those campuses which invited Communist Party leaders to address the students are the University of Wisconsin, Yale, New York University, Harvard, Penn State, Rutgers, Amherst, Brown, Stanford University of California, University of Washington, and the University of New Hampshire. It is interesting to note that a number of these universities are state-supported institutions. Therefore, facilities financed by taxpayer dollars were used by Communists to poison the minds of college men and women.

THE DuBOIS CLUBS

In October, 1963, Gus Hall, head of the Communist Party, in the U.S.A., proposed setting up a new national Marxist youth organization. A call for the founding convention was circulated by the Communists in March of 1964, which stated that the general concern of the new group

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director UVM Placement Service

"Where Do I Go From Here?" Most UVM students are uncertain about what career they want to pursue because they know very little about the variety and nature of jobs that they are fitted for and would find worth doing.

For instance, if you enjoy group activity, if you are usually successful in your relations with people, you probably think first of careers in marketing or personnel. But there are many other jobs that call for an ability to work with people. A few are: politics, school and hotel administration, freight and passenger traffic work for bus companies, railroads, steamships, and airlines, secretarial work, city management, merchandising.

If you are good in mathematics, if you enjoy working with numbers you may have thought of a teaching or accounting. But have you investigated such occupations as statistics, actuarial work, data processing, corporation finance, and investment research?

You may think in terms of broad labels rather than specific work. How often have you heard a fellow student say, "I'm going into business." How indefinite can you get. Or you might say, "I'm going into advertising." But which of the following departments in advertising are you going to enter: art, copy production, marketing, consumer research, radio, television? Beware of broad occupational labels. Try to explore definite jobs, not classifications.

But you say to me, how? And my answer to you is: talk with job holders and read. On Tuesday evening, Feb. 1, at 7:00 p.m. in the Lounge of Austin, Marsh and Tupper, Men's Residential Complex, you will have an opportunity to listen and talk informally with a job holder, Mr. Peter Kolonia, Manager of College Relations and Executive Recruitment for Riegel Paper Corporation will speak on, "Opportunities for the College Graduate in the Paper Industry with special emphasis on the field of Consultative Industrial Marketing." If you have never given much thought to working in the Paper Industry, why not come and explore this possibility.

Thanks to the efforts of Dick Steele, Head Resident, and students Tom Eddy, '66, Dan Barden, '67, and Bob Nadler, '68, each week a new career area will be informally explored. This series of seminars will run from now until spring vacation and is open to all students.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

PLACEMENT OFFICE NON-TECHNICAL INTERVIEWS. Those registered Senior and Graduate College students who wish to interview during Period #2, the Week of February 7-11, should make arrangements to sign-up on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, January 31, February 1-2 from 10:00 a.m. - 12:00 p.m.; 3:00 p.m. - 5:00 p.m. in the Placement Office. Those employers who are scheduled to interview in the Placement Office during the week of February 7-11 include:

American National Red Cross	The Travelers Ins. Co.
Mutual of New York	The Continental Insurance Co.
Agway	General Electric
The First National Bank of Boston	W. T. Grant
International Business Machines	International Silver Co.

would be civil rights, peace, peaceful co-existence, democracy, freedom, and disarmament. The national convention took place in June, 1964, in San Francisco. The convention adopted the name of W.E.B. DuBois Clubs of America. (DuBois, a Negro, was one of the founders in 1910 of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In his later years he officially joined the Communist Party.)

AFFILIATED CLUBS

Speaking in New York City before the Pennsylvania Society in December, 1964, J. Edgar Hoover declared that foremost among the programs and activities now being directed against the college-age men and women of the United States is "a new Communist-oriented youth organization, the DuBois Clubs of America, which was founded last June at a special meeting in California dominated and controlled by the Communists."

The July 28, 1965 issue of the San Francisco "News Call Bulletin" carried a photograph of Gus Hall and quoted the following statement which Communist Chief of Staff made in Oakland to UPI reporter Paul R. Jaschke: "We're winning. Fronts are a thing of the past. We don't need them. We've got the W.E.B. DuBois Clubs, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, and Students for a Democratic Society going for us, but they're not 'fronts' in the usual sense of the word. They're just a part of the 'responsible left'."

FREEDOM ABUSED

We quite often hear the term, "Academic Freedom" quoted these days. How many of us truly understand what it means? How many of us are aware of how easily it can be and has been misused and abused? None of us will deny that "academic freedom" must prevail in our colleges if we are to follow and believe in the principles of American freedom. However, how many of us could stand by and permit "academic freedom" to be used as a tool for destroying our way of life and our beloved American freedom. Never! you say -- and any clear thinking American would certainly agree with you; however, this perverted use of "academic freedom" has been attempted and used on different occasions.

Experience has shown that whenever a State legislature has a law banning Communist speakers on the campuses of State universities, immediately the Communists, Socialists, extremist left-wing student groups, and in numerous cases local organizations of the American Association tion of University Professors wave the flag of "academic freedom" in defense of the presumed "right" of Communists to be heard on our campuses. We might at this point observe a statement made by J. Edgar Hoover in a speech at the Seventh American Convention of Catholic Youth Organizations in 1963 — "Academic Freedom is not an instrument for the perpetuation of conspiratorial ideologies."

Research And Grad Programs Benefit UVM

Cook Calls Boredom

Greatest Enemy Of Effective Teaching

Undergraduate education at the University of Vermont has been greatly benefited by development of strong research and graduate education programs, Dr. Clinton D. Cook, vice president for academic affairs, told members of the Burlington Kiwanis Club Monday evening, (Dec. 20).

He disagreed with those who, he said, "imply that development of such programs means neglecting undergraduates for the sake of prestige."

"In this era of fantastically rapid change, of tremendously expanding knowledge, mere instruction in facts is no longer enough. As educators, our main task must be providing an atmosphere where students learn how to learn; where they come to understand that they must continue learning all their lives and where they develop the habits and attitudes to successfully do this."

"The most effective way of achieving this end is to provide them with surroundings where knowledge is changing; to expose them to the kinds of minds and men which are changing our world. This means that their teachers should be creative scholars," he said, adding "we've recently fought a skirmish in the battle of 'publish or perish.'"

"It's a poor slogan," he said, "overly dramatic and guilty of over-emphasizing a very complex issue."

"A decision on award of permanent tenure invokes the commitment of a quarter to a third of a million dollars in future funds. Thus we must have assurance that a staff member will maintain his intellectual vitality — that he'll stay alive and alert, that he won't become stale and bored."

In an aside, he called "boredom probably the greatest enemy of effective teaching."

Creative scholarly work "usually, but by no means always, takes the form of research, and is the most effective insurance against the teacher's boredom," Dr. Cook said.

"More importantly," he said, "the very able and eager young minds with which we deal today would be cheated were they not taught by teachers involved in creative work."

"But why should Vermont have a university? Why should such a small state have an institution offering doctoral degrees? The answer in medicine is obvious — Vermont has some of the best medical service to be found in the country."

"Why indulge in Ph.D. programs?" There are many arguments, he said.

"A bigger proportion of our population now hold the Ph.D. degree than held bachelor's degrees at the end of World War I."

Next, he said, education is a major activity in Vermont. "Last year 1313 full-time college teachers were employed in the state; 410 of these held the doctoral degree; two-thirds of these were on the faculty of the University of Vermont."

In principle, he said, the State of Vermont could absorb UVM's entire output of Ph.D.'s for years to come.

Finally, he said, "we need to offer the opportunity of doing research, and of working with graduate students to attract first-rate teachers."

Definition Of Maturity?

By Marion Robinson

Legally speaking, a human becomes an adult at the magic age of 21 years old. Psychologically speaking, a human becomes an adult when he is able to cope with the complications of life. This approach has one minor disadvantage: who can determine when the time is right?

For years, Vermont and the surrounding states have been trying to convince New York to raise their drinking age from 18 to 21 because these states do not think that their youth can control alcoholic beverages. This state has concluded that their youths go over the state line like "booze hounds" to get the magic "potion" that enables one to bounce the world on a string for a limited time. Needless to say, Vermont youths do drink in both states. "Where there is a will, there is a way."

Voting for a president is a great privilege in America, but we all know that this privilege is outdated. Dirty politics is a unique method. The nation allows the individual to vote at 21; the town sends you the bill for your property tax, the school tax, and the pool tax. Why complain about a few more taxes because you have been paying them since you were old enough to buy something or work? It is almost like paying for the right to be a certain age.

Regardless of these above limitations, Vermont permits its youth to be married at the age of 18 (G) and 21 (B) without the parents consent or 16 (G) and 18 (B) with the parents consent. Here the legislature believes that 16 and 18 year olds can be married, raise a family, and be divorced before they are true adults. They are ready to get hit in the face with bills, babies, and in-laws, but they can not mark an X next to a name or have a bottle of beer. Many sociology books state that the family unit is the stronghold of America!

This country needs a defense program which includes men, missiles, and bombs. The missiles and bombs are created by money and minds. The men are serving because they volunteered or were drafted. Again, during war especially, you have to be a certain age which is 17 for a volunteer (with the parents permission) and 18 for the draft. The Federal Government believes that they can place a gun in your hand, tell you to fight for a freedom in which you have no legal say and then when you become 21, they will consider you a man.

Stop and think of the many things that you can do if you are a certain age. Were you created in order that you be a slave in an age conscious world?

Tradition is one thing, but consistency is something else. Maybe the state and federal government should review the age laws, forming one age requirement for everything or abolishing all age requirements.

Success is the ability to get along with some people — and ahead of others.

"Third Thumb" Opens Tonight

Student Owned Coffee Shop

The Capitalist Troika

"I'm probably the only 'beatnik' capitalist in history!" That tongue-in-cheek remark is from Rick Hayton, a 21-year-old junior at UVM and corporation director. Tonight, The Third Thumb, Inc., opens for business. A European coffee house arrives in Vermont. Rick, his younger brother Steve, and Bob Sutton, a St. Mike's senior, are the first people ever to be granted an entertainment license in the city of Winooski, where The Third Thumb is located, and probably the youngest ever to be granted a liquor license in the state.

The Third Thumb began as an impossible daydream. Tonight, first nighters will sit at hand-tewn tables and in chairs bought at auctions and junk shops. They will listen to Squire Recordings folk artist, Dayle Stanley, and UVM favorites Brad Sumner, Betty Smith, and Tony Mastaler, while sipping coffee espresso or nibbling on Greek "suffoces" or American hot dogs and other exotic delights. Abstract paintings and sculptures are tacked up on the barnboard walls, and the bar wall is literally papered with humorously juxtaposed magazine pictures and captions, the center of which states, "The world only costs a dime."

A year and a half ago, Rick took a "sabbatical" from the university, where he majors in Sociology, and traveled abroad. While in Paris, he and Lyn Esterley from Tennessee teamed up and sang in the subways to keep themselves in food and wine. Lyn will also entertain on opening night. Steve Hayton is a member of the Vistas, a group well-known to UVM fraternities. Bob Sutton, a Burlington native, is an economics major at St. Mike's and is presently the president of the corporation, which was formed Jan. 3. The presidency rotates, however, and Rick will soon be a 21-year-old corporation president. The success of that phenomenon depends on his daydream-come-true, the Third Thumb, Inc., the door to which, numbered 37 Main Street, Winooski, opens at 7:00 p.m. tonight.

Patzer Views Fraternities

University of Vermont Dean of Men Roland D. Patzer, writing in the current (fall) issue of a national fraternity magazine, has defined "the real challenge for fraternities" as being at the local chapter level.

One of four education officers asked to contribute a paper on the topic of "the new role for college fraternities," Dean Patzer's remarks appear in "The Unicorn of Theta Xi," the official publication of the national fraternity.

"Chapters as well as educational institutions may vary," Dean Patzer writes, "but the significance of the local chapter to the total picture of fraternities is the degree to which it operates in concert with the goals and objectives of the local campus."

"Unique contributions are being made by some chapters on some campuses. The search for this kind of opportunity ought to be the first order for every fraternity chapter in the country."

Dean Patzer was also re-elected, over the past weekend, to serve as educational advisor to the National Interfraternity Conference.

What Is A University?

Semester Topic In "World Problems"

University of Vermont seniors will be afforded the opportunity of examining their university during the spring semester of the "World Problems" course.

"World Problems" is a special course offering of the College of Arts and Sciences. A different major issue of particular importance is presented each semester and the topic for the spring semester is "What is a University?"

Lectures, readings and discussions will cover such subjects as the history of higher education with emphasis on American institutions, the history of the University of Vermont, the present structure of UVM and in what ways does it facilitate or hinder the education of students, and problems of communication among students, faculty and administration, at Vermont and elsewhere.

Dr. Herbert McArthur, associate dean, Arts and Sciences, and professor of English, directs the course which has a rather distinguished "faculty," ranging from the president of the University, to faculty members, a representative of the Board of Trustees, key administrative members, to several students.

"We attempt to make the course something of a synthesis in which the student can combine what he has studied in several areas. It involves a sort of interdisciplinary action," explains Dr. McArthur.

The course carries three hours of elective credit and is open only to seniors. At the first session each week, a different lecturer addresses the class. The remaining two periods are devoted to discussions led by Dr. McArthur, in which class members discuss what the lecturer said, tying in outside readings.

"We have been offering the problems course for about 10 years but this is the first time we have attempted such an undertaking as x-raying our own university," said Dr. McArthur. "There has been a great deal of interest expressed by the administration in the course and I think they are looking forward to it as much as the students."

Two students — Jerold Goldberg of Chelsea, Mass., and Robert Lampke of Hull, Mass., — assisted Dr. McArthur in organizing this semester's course.

The University Lecture Series will also be a part of the course work inasmuch as the theme of the series is "New Dimensions in College Teaching." The role of college teachers and challenges posed by new developments in teaching will be discussed by the seven lecturers appearing in the series.

Head Librarian Applauded

Members of the University of Vermont Senate voted an expression of thanks and appreciation to outgoing librarian Ben Bowman at their December meeting (12/9/65), and he returned the compliment.

Dr. Herbert C. McArthur, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, who will serve as acting director of libraries when Bowman leaves Dec. 15, moved the vote of appreciation for Bowman's "Outstanding contribution to development of the University's libraries." Faculty and staff present at the meeting applauded their approval.

Bowman, who will head the libraries of New York's Hunter College, thanked faculty for their help and interest and noted that he had received outstanding interest and support for library development while in Vermont.

Noting that the operating budget for libraries has almost doubled since Bailey Library opened in 1961, Bowman said the rate of increase is among the best in the nation.

Beginning Feb. 3

Education Lectures Offered

The University of Vermont will offer seven talks in its lecture series during the spring semester.

This year, the series focuses on the role of college teachers and the challenges posed by new developments in college teaching with the theme "New Dimensions in College Teaching."

Opening the series on Feb. 3 will be the president of the University, Dr. Shannon McCune. Dr. McCune's topic is "Challenges of Teaching at the College Level."

All talks will start at 8 p.m. in the lower lounge of the Waterman Building and are free and open to the public.

Other speakers, the dates, and their topics:

Feb. 17, Dr. Robert B. MacLeod, department of psychology at Cornell University, "Criteria for an Undergraduate Course."

March 10, Dr. Samuel Baskin, director of program development and research in education at Antioch College, "New Developments in Undergraduate Education."

March 24, Dr. Ruth Eckert, professor of higher education at the University of Minnesota, "The Changing Role of the College Teacher."

April 13, Dr. Wilbert McKeachie, chairman of the department of psychology at the University of Michigan, "Characteristics of Effective Teachers: Some Research Results."

On April 27, a faculty-student panel will discuss "The Challenges to the University of Vermont."

A special lecture is scheduled for March 1, presented by the lecture series and the Vermont chapter of the Society of Sigma Xi. Dr. Philip Handler, professor of biochemistry at Duke University, and national Sigma Xi lecturer, will talk on the subject "Evolution of an Enzyme."

He also indicated, in a formal report to the senate, that Bailey Library will be filled by 1970 at the present rate of acquisitions.

The UVM collections are currently estimated at about 350,000 volumes and represent the largest collection in the State.

Forestry Degree Now Offered

Thirty-two members of the Freshman class at the University of Vermont may not consider themselves "pioneers" but nonetheless they do represent a "first."

The 32 students are the first members of the University's new four-year forestry program in the College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Until the start of the four-year program this fall, Vermont offered only a two-year course, meaning that students had to transfer to another university to complete the final two years and receive a degree.

The new major will lead to a bachelor of science degree in forestry with the option of concentrating in either forest management or wildlife management. Students will elect the area of specialization at the beginning of their sophomore year.

Dr. William Adams, chairman of the forestry department, said that emphasis will be placed on the science and the techniques of growing, protecting, and coordinating the management of natural resources to supply forest products, wildlife, water, and recreational facilities.

Sadler Studies

Religion In Japan

Dr. Albert W. Sadler, associate professor of religion on leave from the University of Vermont this year has been named a Visiting Scholar at the University of Tokyo.

Dr. Sadler is spending the 1965-66 academic year on leave under a fellowship from the Society for Religion in Higher Education, one of four chosen to receive such a fellowship from more than 400 applicants.

He chose to spend his leave studying the Shinto religion and making a study of the economic ethics of Buddhism, and traveled to Japan for this purpose.

As a Visiting Scholar at the University of Tokyo, he is associated with the sociology department of the faculty of arts there and writes that he enjoys an office "under the ginkgo trees and near the University's landscape garden."

"We are well situated for the study of a wide range of forest conditions and forest use. The interrelated demands for the production of timber and other forest products, summer and winter recreation use, domestic and industrial water supplies, and wildlife habitats provide the facilities for the study of multiple land-use management," he added.

Dr. Adams pointed out that forest industries rank third in the nation in the number of people employed. "There are many areas of specialization, ranging from public land administration to forest engineering to the highly technical aspects such as tree physiology and pulp and paper technology."

More Vermonters Attending UVM

Enrollment

Statistics

The University of Vermont is attracting an increased share of Vermont's top high school graduates, according to an analysis of enrollment patterns made by Admissions Director Harold C. Collins.

His analysis shows that the number of Vermonters entering as freshmen increased by 21 per cent, from 605 last year to 768 this year; the percentage from the upper 10 per cent of their high school classes increased by about 35 per cent, from 163 to 219.

The University considers rank in high school graduating class and high school grades only part of the criteria for admission, however. The recommendation of the high school principal or guidance counselor is considered an important factor, and performance on the College Entrance Examination Board Scholastic Aptitude Test is a third factor.

Founded in 1791 by the same Legislature which founded the State of Vermont, the University of Vermont has always given admissions preference to qualified Vermont applicants.

A sampling of the entering freshman class last year, including resident and nonresident students, indicated the University was the first choice of better than 70 per cent of the freshman class. Significantly, about one-fourth of the resident students sampled indicated that the University of Vermont was the only institution of higher learning to which they applied.

Test Schedule Posted

The Graduate Record Examinations are scheduled to be given on campus Saturday, February 26, 1966. These examinations will also be offered here on April 23 and July 9.

The Educational Testing Service has recently announced that Special Administrations of these examinations will be scheduled in the Boston area on: March 15, 16, May 17, 18, June 14, 15.

At each time, the Aptitude Test and the Advanced Test will be given on successive afternoons. Registration will be accomplished with the Educational Research Corporation, 10 Craigie Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

For further information regarding these Special Administrations, inquire at the Testing Service Office, 125 Waterman or write to Educational Research Corporation, 10 Craigie Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

Faculty Members Visit Honduras

Three University of Vermont faculty-staff members will spend part of January outside the United States, two going to Central America, the third to Europe.

The three are Dr. Dorothy Morrow of the College of Medicine and William Stone and Mrs. Faith Prior of the Extension Service.

Dr. Morrow, assistant professor of clinical pediatrics, and Stone, a county agent leader, have been asked to serve on a team to visit Honduras and make a survey on possible types of "people to people" projects that could be developed.

Mrs. Prior has been invited to take part in a seminar at an international consumer education conference in the Hague during the week of Jan. 24.

The Honduras visit is a part of the Partners of the Alliance, Agency for International Development program of the State Department. Other Vermonters asked to serve on the team from Vermont are Samuel Guarnaccia of Middlebury College and Denning Miller of Stowe.

The group expects to leave on Jan. 9 and return on the 28th.

Is Big Brother Watching?

Could it be 1984?

By Lqu Blumenfeld

The year is 1966. George Orwell wrote 1984 in 1948. Therefore, we are now halfway to 1984. Let us examine a few of Orwell's prophecies. Let us see how many are no longer mere conjectures, but fact.

Orwell divided the world of 1984 into three countries: Oceania, Eurasia, and Eastasia.

In 1966, we find the world divided into three major powers or power blocs: the United States, the Soviet Union, and Red China. Interesting? And remember that was predicted in 1948.

Secondly, in 1984, "Big Brother" is constantly watching. Well, almost everybody has televisions today, but we all know that televisions are for viewing, not for being viewed. But then again, we are only halfway to 1984.

Actually the television idea is a bit far-fetched I suppose; however, now that I think about it, a short time ago I tuned in my TV, during prime time of course, and thereon discovered a face staring at me. The face was very familiar. It was that of our president, Lyndon B. Johnson. He was delivering his State of the Union address. A few hours later, news time, I looked again, and there was that face again. It starts you wondering doesn't it?

Another aspect of 1984 - constant war. Oceania, the setting of the novel, is always at war with either Eurasia or Eastasia, and the people of Oceania know nothing about the events of the war. Presently, at least according to my draft board, we are, unofficially of course, at war with someone called the Viet Cong. But, of course, we all know exactly what is going on in Viet Nam at all times. Don't we?

BIG BROTHER?

Another issue is sex. Sex, in 1984, is merely a relationship between a male and a female, which contains no pleasure, but is solely for the purpose of producing children. Together with the loss of pleasure from sexual pursuits, there is also a loss of personal freedom. In discussing the former, I will now prove, once and for all, that there is no need to fear the latter. In my next paragraph I will describe illicit sex as found, according to Orwell in 1984. Thereby showing that we are not approaching such a situation. Now if I were to write the next paragraph in 1984 it would most assuredly be cut. However, as you can now see, there is no such problem, we can all rest easy. Now to sex.

Yes, it's halfway to 1984, and we certainly can see how wrong Orwell was. His vision of society could never be imposed upon us. Big Brother will never be watching you. Will he?

ROTC NEWS

Peter McGregor

Peter McGregor, Burlington senior, has been named to lead the ROTC cadet corps at UVM the spring semester.

Colonel L. G. Robinson, professor of military science at Vermont, made the announcement of bridge appointments at the annual ROTC senior class banquet held Jan. 20.

McGregor will hold the rank of cadet colonel. Command of the brigade is the highest honor bestowed upon a ROTC cadet and selection is based upon excellence in leadership, management and academics. McGregor has been active in Pershing Rifles, national military fraternity; in Ethan Allen Rifles, senior military honor society, and in Theta Chi fraternity. He has been appointed a Distinguished Military Student by the Department of the Army and will be commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry upon graduation in May.

World Wide Cynic

By Marion Robinson

BROOKLYN, N.Y. - The members of Phi Gamma Delta and Sigma Alpha Mu at St. John's University have joined with the Red Cross in a Blood Drive for Viet Nam, which is scheduled for March 14.

LEHIGH UNIVERSITY - Students had the opportunity to hear Lt. Col. Carter Clarke, former chief of the combined operations center of U.S. Military Assistance command in Viet Nam, confirm President Johnson's recent statement that "we are not winning the war, but we've stabilized the situation..." The Lt. Col. believes that we can ultimately win the conflict.

Lehigh students will not be able to borrow library books this semester unless the students' I.D. card is punched with his social security number. So far, a minority of students have had their cards punched.

PHILADELPHIA - Many colleges are raising the yearly tuition rate from $50 to $300, but some administrations have the right idea. Temple University is hiking the tuition, but they have also announced a special financial aid program for out-of-state students. M.I.T. is also increasing their scholarship resources along with the tuition. Despite the increase in scholarships, app. 350 students rioted. They believe that "$1900 is too damn much."

Final Rush Begins Sat.

The final rushing period in the Interfraternity Council's rushing program begins next Saturday and Sunday afternoon, Jan. 29, and 30. This is the last time freshmen men and independent upperclassmen have an opportunity to visit as many as four fraternities of their choice.

Rushing has been an integral part of university life for more than a century and a half. Since its establishment in the 1830's, UVM now ranks high on the list of active fraternity campuses.

The formal rushing period extends from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. Men who are rushing are asked to check the bulletin boards in Lower Waterman and Billings Center to learn when they are scheduled to rush. Those who have not signed the rushing list and are interested in rushing are asked to contact the IFC office.

The rushees will then be invited by interested fraternities to a banquet to be held either Wed. or Thurs. night. Banquet "bids," as they are called, are the next to last step in the formal rush system. Saturday morning, from 9:00 a.m. until noon freshmen men and the upperclassmen will then be asked to receive their pledging bids in the Lounge at Billings Center.

This week of rushing is culminated by pledging within the various fraternities. Men are initiated by becoming pledges. Following this trial period, these men then become "brothers" or full members. Hazing has been outlawed at UVM.

The Winners

In recognition of the winning teams and the various winning players in our intramural activities, The CYNIC would like to recognize the following players and teams for their achievements.

Coffee House Is Coming

UVM may soon be able to boast an on-campus coffee house, if the attempts of a group sparked by the Rev. John Perry, Jr., Protestant chaplain, are successful.

Mr. Perry, who came to UVM this year, worked last summer on a coffee house study project for the National Council of Churches. Soon after school began, he started looking for others interested in beginning a coffee house for UVM.

Mr. Perry recently estimated that from 50 to 75 people have expressed an interest in a coffee house and a willingness to help or participate if one was begun.

Last week a small group met to discuss plans for beginning a coffee house. Several students felt that a campus coffee house would help promote informal student-faculty relations which are now weak or absent.

Others thought it would provide "a place to go," a place on campus where someone could take or meet a date, where people could get inexpensive snacks and free entertainment for an evening.

Four committees were suggested to provide for staffing, program, financial, and physical preparations for the coffee house, which is to be in a lounge adjoining St. Ansel's Chapel. A few people began to look into the needs of each committee.

JoAnn Hurley at Ext. 433 was to be in charge of signing up or informing people interested in participating in the coffee house.

PROF. SPEAKS

Edwin Greif, professor of economics at the University of Vermont, was the featured speaker Thurs., Jan. 20 at the meeting of the Providence (R.I.) Sales and Marketing Executives Club.

Professor Greif, a marketing expert and the author of several books on the subject, spoke on the topic "The Substance of Modern Salesmanship."

On Jan. 31, Professor Greif will be the guest speaker at the marketing plan meeting of the Michigan Blue Cross-Blue Shield in Detroit. His topic will be "Marketing Management Essentials."

NEW SECTION "Classified"

In all future issues of the CYNIC there will be a student classified section. All ads have a $1 charge and must be placed in the classified box in the CYNIC office one week prior to the issue desired.

FRENCH CENTER TO PRESENT FILM

The French Cultural Center will present the film "La Chartreuse de Parme" by Stendhal. This film will be shown on Feb. 3 at 7:30 p.m. in the Votey Auditorium. Its cast includes Maria Casares and Gerard Philippe, both of la Comedie - Francaise.

BUS SERVICE OFFERED

Vermont Transit offers a bus service from Memorial Auditorium to Redstone Campus seven nights a week at 10:30 p.m. The cost is $.20 or $.18 if tokens are bought. If this service is not popularized, it may be discontinued, so take advantage, girls. It's cold outside.

CHILEAN STUDENTS VISIT UVM

On Feb. 3, a group of ten student leaders from Chile will arrive on campus as part of a two month visit to the U.S. under the Experiment in International Living.

These students, two girls and eight men, will live in the dormitories and fraternities, audit class and take part in student activities.

This will be the first such group to stay at UVM during the regular school year.

Youth Fly Cheaper

New York - An additional 33 million Americans will be eligible to travel by air at half fare with the introduction of a far-reaching new plan announced today by American Airlines.

Marion Sadler, the airline's president, said that his airline has asked the Civil Aeronautics Board to approve an American youth fare plan which will give those in the 12 through 21 age group a 50 per cent discount on all of the airline's flights that have space available. Passengers holding reservations and military standbys would be accommodated first.

The youth fare plan will not be in effect on a few days of the year when heavy passenger loads will cut the availability of seats for standbys. These would include in 1966 April 7 (Thursday before Easter Sunday), Nov. 23 and 27 (Wednesday before and Sunday after Thanksgiving Day), and Dec. 15 through 21.

Here is how American's youth fare will work.

-- Teenagers will obtain an identification card for $3 from any American Airlines ticket office. They will be required to submit proof of age.

-- When the card is presented at a ticket sales desk, a one-way or round-trip standby ticket will be issued at a rate equivalent to 50 per cent of the normal jet coach fare.

The plan went into effect on Jan. 27, 1966, if it was approved by the CAB.

Cooperating with the plan two hotel chains, Sheraton and Hilton, have indicated that they will devise a reduced room rate for those who show their youth fare cards at the time they register.

Profit Or Loss

Although college textbook prices are high, no one is making a big profit from them. According to an article in the February issue of Moderator, the national college magazine, publishers seldom make any profit on the first printing of a book, and bookstores usually lose about 3% on its sale.

According to Moderator, the bookstore gets $1 from the sale of a $5 book, but the handling, shipping, pricing, and storing of the book costs about $1.15. The author gets 75¢ from the book; salesmen, 25¢; overhead (editing, rent, advertising; administration), $2. The profit will come from the second printing, if there is one.

At most, the first printing will run about 5,000 copies. Textbooks rarely sell as many as 10,000 copies a year, though they must sell at least 1,000 to stay alive.

"ROMAN IN THE GLOAMIN"

Now as the end of the first semester draws near, one fact emerges clearly: you are all going to flunk out of school.

There are two things you can do about it. First, you can marry money. (I don't mean you marry the money itself; I mean you marry a person who has money. Weddings between people and currency have not been legal anywhere in the United States since the Smoot-Hawley Act. Personna® Stainless Steel Blades, on the other hand, are legal everywhere and are, indeed, used with great pleasure and satisfaction in all fifty states of the Union and Duluth. I bring up Personna Stainless Steel Blades because this column is sponsored by the makers of Personna Stainless Steel Blades, and they are inclined to get edgy if I omit to mention their product. Some of them get edgy and some get double-edgy because Personna Blades come both in Injector style and Double Edge style.)

But I digress. I was saying you can marry money but, of course, you will not because you are a high-minded, clean-living, pure-hearted, freckle-faced American kid. Therefore, to keep from flunking, you must try the second method: you must learn how to take lecture notes.

According to a recent survey, eleven out of ten American undergraduates do not know the proper way to take lecture notes. To illustrate this appalling statistic, let us suppose you are taking a course in history. Let us further suppose the lecturer is lecturing on the ruling houses of England. You listen intently. You write diligently in your notebook, making a topic outline as you have been taught. Like this:

- I. House of Plantagenet.
- II. House of Lancaster.
- III. House of York.

Then you stop. You put aside your pen. You blink back a tear, for you cannot go on. Oh, yes, you know very well that the next ruling house is the House of Tudor. The trouble is you don't know the Roman numeral that comes after III.

It may, incidentally, be of some comfort to learn that you are not the only people who don't know Roman numerals. The fact is, the Romans never knew them either. Oh, I suppose they could tell you how much V or X were or like that, but when it came to real zingers like LXI or MMC, they just flung away their styluses and went downtown to have a bath or take in a circus or maybe stab Caesar a few times.

You may wonder why Rome stuck with these ridiculous numerals when the Arabs had such a nice, simple system. Well, sir, the fact is that Emperor Vespasian tried like crazy to buy the Arabic numerals from Suleiman The Magnificent, but Suleiman wouldn't do business—not even when Vespasian raised his bid to 100,000 gold piastres, plus he offered to throw in the Colosseum, the Appian Way, and Technicolor.

So Rome stuck with Roman numerals—to its sorrow, as it turned out. One day in the Forum, Cicero and Pliny got to arguing about how much is CDL times MVIX. Well, sir, pretty soon everyone in town came around to join the hassle. In all the excitement, nobody remembered to lock the north gate and—wham! before you could say ars longa—in rushed the Goths, the Visigoths, and the Green Bay Packers!

Well, sir, that's the way the empire crumbles, and I digress. Let's get back to lecture notes. Let's also say a word about Burma Shave®. Why? Because Burma Shave is made by the makers of Personna Blades who, it will be recalled, are the sponsors of this column. They are also the sponsors of the ultimate in shaving luxury. First coat your kisser with Burma Shave, regular or menthol—or, if you are the devil-may-care sort, some of each. Then whisk off your stubble with an incredibly sharp, unbelievably durable Personna Blade, Injector or Double Edge—remembering first to put the blade in a razor. The result: facial felicity, cutaneous cheer, epidermal elysium. Whether you shave every day, every III days, or every VII, you'll always find Personna and Burma Shave a winning combination.

Fellowship Judge Chosen

Robert V. Daniels

A University of Vermont history professor has been appointed to serve on the Region I judging committee of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation.

Dr. Robert Daniels, chairman of the history department, is one of 18 faculty members screening the nearly 1000 applications for fellowships from Region I (all New England states minus Connecticut, plus Quebec and the maritime provinces).

Woodrow Wilson Fellowships allow recipients to attend the graduate school of their choice and pay tuition and fixed fees plus an allowance of $1800 for living expenses.

Each judge screens applications in his area of specialization. Dr. Daniels, author of several books and many articles on the Soviet Union, is screening applications in history, political science and foreign literature.

From the original 1000 applications from Region I college students, the field will be narrowed to about 400. These students will be invited to Tufts University to be interviewed by the screening committee on the weekends of Jan. 14-16, and 21-23.

A three-man committee will conduct the oral interview.

Region I generally awards about 120 fellowships, said Dr. Daniels. Those not receiving a fellowship but named as alternates go into a "national pool" to compete for any fellowships not awarded at the regional level.

Dr. Daniels' appointment to the committee is for an indefinite period.

Lake Champlain was discovered on July 4th, 1609 by the French explorer, Samuel de Champlain, who, being a modest chap, gave it the name it now bears.

PLAYBOY POLL SHOWS

STUDENTS GO REPUBLICAN

While the large majority of U.S. college students and their faculty agree that President Lyndon B. Johnson will be re-elected to a second term, the students favor a Republican candidate. This is the finding of the Playboy College Opinion Survey -- covering 200 campuses -- conducted one week after the election of John V. Lindsay as Mayor of New York City.

The Survey shows that as of today a majority of the students -- 55 percent -- would vote for a Republican candidate in 1968. On the other hand, 66 percent of the faculty would prefer a Democratic candidate.

Despite their preference, however, 91 percent of the students agree that a Democratic candidate would win the election. Eighty-six percent concede the election to Mr. Johnson while 5 percent think Sen. Robert Kennedy of New York might win.

Among the faculty sample polled, 95 percent believe that the Democratic party will again be victorious, and only 1 percent of these believe it will be someone other than Mr. Johnson.

The Playboy College Opinion Survey also asked "Since American males are eligible for the draft at the age of 18 and are serving their country, should the legal voting age be lowered to 18 years in all states?" Only 55 percent of both the students and faculty agree that this should become law. The principal reason offered by the Survey's respondents against the lowering of the voting age was that intellectual maturity is more important than physical maturity.

Of those students who chose Republican candidates, 11 percent cast their ballots for Barry Goldwater, 10 percent for New York Mayor-elect Lindsay, 9 percent for Gov. William Scranton of Pennsylvania, 8 percent for Michigan Governor George Romney, 8 percent for Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon, 4 percent for Gov. Mark Hatfield, of Oregon, and 4 percent for Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York.

Among the students who prefer the Democratic party in 1968, 29 percent chose Mr. Johnson as their favorite candidate; 12 percent, Sen. Kennedy; 2 percent, Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey; and 1 percent, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama.

Among faculty members who prefer a Democratic candidate, 48 percent selected Mr. Johnson as their favorite; 9 percent, Mr. Humphrey; and 6 percent, Sen. Kennedy.

Nine percent of the Republican-oriented faculty members chose Gov. Romney; 7 percent, Gov. Scranton; 6 percent, Goldwater; 5 percent, Nixon; 4 percent, Lindsay; 1 percent, Gov. Hatfield; and 1 percent, Gov. Rockefeller.

Out of the 9 percent of students who believe a Republican candidate might emerge victorious, Governors Romney and Scranton, Goldwater and Lindsay -- each are conceded a 2 percent chance. Two percent of the faculty thought Nixon might be a winning candidate, while 1 percent said Gov. Romney had a chance.

The Survey determined that 76 percent of the student respondents will be eligible to vote for the first time in the next Presidential election. It is significant to note that 98 percent of all those eligible students say that they will vote in 1968.

The Playboy College Opinion Survey is based on responses from a representative sample of approximately 1000 students from all classes, ages and backgrounds who serve as a permanent "sounding board" on questions of current interest. Another permanent panel of 200 faculty members -- one representative of each campus, comprising a wide variety of educational fields -- have been polled. The survey also reflects opinions from campuses on a regional basis -- in the East, Midwest, South, Southwest and West.

Analysis of returns on a regional basis shows that among students who chose the Democratic party, Eastern colleges gave their vote to Mr. Johnson by 39 percent, while in the South the President pulled only 18 percent. Among the Democratic faculty, the South went for Mr. Johnson by 58 percent; the East, 49 percent; and the West, 41 percent.

Gov. Scranton received 12 percent of the Republican student vote in both the East and West, while Goldwater pulled 21 percent in the South and 6 percent in the Midwest. Republican faculty members in the East preferred Gov. Scranton by 22 percent, while the Pennsylvania Governor received 9 percent in the West. Goldwater received 12 percent of the Midwestern Republican faculty vote and 3 percent of the Southern instructors.

Following are the results of the Playboy College Opinion Survey with the answers as a percentage of the total respondents:

Missing--One Harpsicord

But Who Could Loose A Harpsicord?

"If anyone in his travels stumbles across a wandering harpsicord, please notify the Music Dept. immediately as it needs tender, loving care," says Mr. Van Benthuyssen, head of Public Relations. The harpsicord disappeared after a concert at Ira Allen near the end of last semester. The loss was discovered by Dr. Lidral on Jan. 4. Weighing 89 pounds and about the size of a desk, the gold plated harpsicord is worth $1025. If exposed to excessive temperature, moisture, or dryness, the instrument will be ruined. Both the insurance company and security have been notified.

FACULTY ANNOUNCES

PROF PUBLISHES

A professor from the University of Vermont department of physics is the author of a paper in the latest issue of "Physical Review," a twice-monthly physics journal.

Dr. John E. Krizan has written an article entitled "Kinetic Equation with Relativistic Interaction Corrections for a Plasma," which deals with the properties of plasmas. Plasmas are states of matter in which there are mixtures of electrons and ions.

According to Dr. Albert D. Crowell, chairman of the department of physics, there is much interest today in the properties of plasmas as this type of material occurs in the interior of stars and is involved in the devices being built for the controlled production of nuclear energy by fusion processes.

SUMMER RESEARCH AWARDS

The Board of Trustees at UVM also approved eight summer research grant awards, authorized earlier, and appropriated funds to award three additional grants. Recipients follow:

Samuel Bogorad, English; Jeremy Felt, history; Brady Gilleland, classics; Robert Hall, philosophy and religion; William Haviland, sociology and anthropology; Ralph Orth, English; Stanislaus Staron, political science; Neil Stout, history; Raul Hilberg, political science; John Kent, classics; Harold Schults, history.

GIFTS AND GRANTS

The Board of Trustees at UVM acknowledged gifts, grants and scholarships valued at more than $383,000 (a list will follow Monday), and the Board noted "once again the generous interest' of one of its members.

Included in the gifts accepted was a $6,000 addition to the George H. Cook Scholarship Fund to provide grants-in-aid to athletes, and President McCune said that Trustee Cook had also made a gift of $4,000 to permit installation of a larger scoreboard at Centennial Field.

"Our scores were pretty darned good, and we wanted to make sure that we could see them in our new and enlarged homesteads."

The Scoreboard grant proved to be "a double gift," Dr. McCune said, since it permitted the University to install the old scoreboard, a gift of the Class of 1954, at the new soccer field, where the scores "were also pretty good."

Cook, of Leominster, Mass., is president of Tilton and Cook Co., and an alumnus of Vermont.

Swimmers Boast 2-0 Record

By Alan Rice

The UVM swim team goes after its third straight victory of the season Saturday afternoon against Sir George Williams at Furbush Pool. Coach Les Leggett has developed a strong team which will give its Yankee Conference rivals a battle for the Conference Championship. The team's record now stands at 2-0, after victories over Norwich and Loyola of Montreal. Loyola was overmatched by the Cat swimmers and fell by a convincing 69-17 score. However, the real competition is ahead when Vermont goes against some strong Yankee Conference opposition.

Pete Seeger Enchants Audience Shows Great Emotional Depth

Pete Seeger

By Ken Klonsky

The debut of Peter Seeger at Memorial Auditorium Monday night proved to be an exciting event for Lane Series Blue Ticket holders. For not only is Mr. Seeger a great artist, but he is, in the strictest sense, a human being.

Seeger employed a 12 string guitar and a 5 string banjo for the performance. By expert manipulation of his sometimes playfully mellow, sometimes powerful singing voice, he captured the audience's fancy and moved them at his will. Highlights of his program included Bob Dylan's "Who Killed Davey Moore?" "This Land is Your Land," and "John Henry." He also sang a song against the war in Vietnam, a politically explosive item that has resulted in the narrow-minded cancellation of at least one of his performances.

It is in the content and expression of his songs that one finds Pete Seeger's most outstanding quality. He is a firm believer in the brotherhood of man and he feels the vital need of all men to enjoy and participate in life - a life free of napalm bombs and "get tough" generals. Because he believes in the essential dignity of human beings, he has been scorned, spat upon, and black-listed by a large group of so-called Americans. But even those self-righteous men and women with armpit stains and set jaws who persist in taunting him, even they, he would argue, have their dignity. When small children die in senseless wars, or when Negroes are attacked in Alabama streets, Pete Seeger is genuinely upset. On these subjects, Seeger does not really sing his songs, he cries them out to a bitter, hostile and love-starved world.

NOTICE

Head Baseball Coach Ralph Lapointe announces that all bat-tery-men are expected to be work-ing out in the cage every day at 4:30.

Nevertheless, Vermont will be ready to meet this stiff competi-tion because what the team may lack in experience it has made up by hard work. The swimmers returned to school two weeks early to begin workouts; and have been working out for 2 to 2 1/2 hours daily since then. Every afternoon, each man swims 3 to 4 miles, but it has paid off as is evidenced by the fact that the performances of each man have been continually improving.

Co-Captains Tom Mills and Jim Nixon head the team. Each swims the 100 meter freestyle. In last Saturday's meet against Loyola, Mills swam an outstand-ing 52.7 on the 100. Senior Dave Cheney has been coming around in the 200 meter backstroke, and also looked impressive in last weeks meet. Junior Lynn Bicknell and sophomore Jay

Former UVM Coach Makes Hall Of Fame

The eagle eyes of a Univer-sity of Vermont alumnus disclose that one of the 18 baseball coaches inducted into the new College Baseball Hall of Fame in special ceremonies in Wash-ington, D.C., on Monday evening, coached at Vermont 50 years ago.

In reading the list of inductees, Willis (Junie) Buck of Burlington spotted the name of Stanley L. Robinson of Mississippi College.

Buck recalled a Stanley Robin-son coaching at Vermont "for a year or so some time before World War I."

A check of old Ariels, the University yearbook, confirmed that Robinson coached football and baseball at Vermont during the 1915-16 seasons. He appar-ently was hired after graduating from Colgate in the spring of 1915 to serve in the newly created position as general sup-ervisor of athletics.

Robinson left Vermont after a year and coached at Mississippi College from 1928 through 1961 turning out many major league performers.

Weintraub swim the 200 meter freestyle for Coach Leggett. Wientraub is new at the event and swam a very impressive 2.07 in the meet last Saturday. Both boys have been working hard at this event and Coach Leggett is quite pleased with their performance. Junior Pete Gross swims the Butterfly, and has now cut his time down to under a minute, a time which can match up with many of the best in the New Eng-land area.

The event at a swim meet which is always fascinating to watch is the diving event. Junior Peter Fredericks competes in this event, and has been working hard all season to perfect his style and performance.

Although swimming is a rela-tively new varsity sport to the UVM campus, it certainly does not lack in the quality of the team's performance. These men, have been putting in long and hard hours to improve the meter and are certainly going to prove to the other schools in New Eng-land that UVM is ready to com-pete against any of the best. Why not come out to tomorrow's meet, which begins at 1:00 and see for yourself what Vermont's swim team can do.

Parking Problem Computerized

Washington (CPS) - Every school is having its parking prob-lem and American University is no different. University officials feel the problem is so grave, in fact, that they have computerized it.

Officials say the new system will allow the business office to compute within 24 hours a list of parking offenders. Disciplinary letters will be prepared automatically by the data proces-sing system and will be mailed to an offender within 24 hours.

According to the parking and traffic regulation office, "any student who receives three or more parking violation tickets during a school year will receive the following disciplinary ac-tions:

- "Three violation tickets -- a warning letter.
- "Four violation tickets -- a 30-day suspension of parking pri-leviges on university property.
- "Five violation tickets -- dis-missal from the university."

Harrington Receives Unsung Hero's Award

When John (Lefty) Harrington was honored in Boston on Monday (Jan. 24) as the Unsung Hero of New England college football for 1965, it was literally "a dream come true."

The University of Vermont halfback thought he was dreaming when he first heard the announcement that he was the recipient of the annual award sponsored by the Boston Tobacco Table.

Harrington had spent the day skiing and was stretched out on a couch, half asleep, when the sports news came on over Burlington television station WCAX. "I heard my name and saw a picture of myself but I thought I must be asleep and dreaming the whole thing. Then some of the guys started shaking me and congratulating me and I realized that what I had heard and saw was on television and not a dream," said Harrington.

The Braintree, Mass., junior who missed the entire 1965 season because of injuries suffered in an automobile accident, volunteered to help the Vermont football team in any way he could and spent the fall helping to coach the freshman team.

Donnelly Honored

University of Vermont athletic director J. Edward Donnelly has been elected to a full six-year term on the NCAA golf committee.

Donnelly was appointed in 1964 to serve the final two years of an unexpired term and now has been named to serve a full term.

The committee is responsible for the entire NCAA golf program, including the national tournaments.

Frosh Five

By Bob Bloomenthal

Coach Ralph Lapointe and his basketball Kittens travel to Hanover, N.H. this Saturday for a return engagement with the Dartmouth freshmen. At press time, before Thursday's rematch with the St. Michael's frosh, the Kittens had yet to be beaten in three games, including a 66-59 home victory against the Little Green of Dartmouth.

Lapointe has called this freshman team his best in the past four or five years. He is surprised at the number of native Vermonters on the squad (eight), but this group contains three of his five starters.

Due to UVM's academic schedule, Lapointe was forced to go six weeks without a practice after the team's opening game. This has proved to be quite a handicap as now the Kittens will be rounding into peak shape again just as their season nears its end.

The majority of the team's scoring has been done by six players thus far this season. Leading scorer has been 5-10 guard Terry O'Leary with a 16.3 average. Close behind the red-headed Central Islip, N.Y. native is the much-heralded Dave Lapointe with a 15.7 norm. The 6-3 forward is coach Ralph's son and is rated a prize catch by varsity coach Art Loche.

A third Kitten averaging in double figures is 6-3 jumping-jack Jeff Plunkett with 13.3. Plunkett hails from Barre, Vt. which has produced many UVM hoop sport performers including co-captain Layne Higgs and Alden Hale of this year's varsity.

Three other freshmen have also been instrumental in the team's success so far. They are 5-10 Bob Jacobs (8.0) from Sag Harbor, N.Y., 5-11 Jim Eyelti (7.3) from Burlington, and 6-0 Barry Coughlin (6.7) of Rumford, Me. All these boys will be pushing next year's veterans for spots on the team since coach Art Loche will be losing three of this season's varsity starting five.

By Bob Bloomenthal

The University of Vermont basketball team travels to Storrs, Connecticut this Saturday to engage the UConn Huskies in an important Yankee Conference battle. UConn has a 2-1 conference record with their lone loss coming at the hands of league-leading Rhode Island. UVM is 2-3 in conference play but the Cats have now won three straight games and are still in the running for a second or third place finish in the Y.C.

Since the vacation break Vermont absorbed a big loss at Kingston against the Rams of URI, but then bounced back to defeat New Hampshire and whip Middlebury and Boston University this past weekend. The Cats now stand 5-3 on the season as compared with a 3-5 record at the same point last year.

Probably the biggest reason for the Catamount success this season despite the loss of three starters from last year's squad is the tremendous improvement of the team's defense. Thus for UVM is giving up only 67.1 points per game this year and only a few weeks ago was ranked 8th in the nation in team defense. For the first eight games last season the Cats surrendered an average of 87.0 points a game.

The defense has not been the lone reason for the UVM success, though, as Coach Art Loche's forces have also been putting the ball through the hoop often enough to come out on the long end of five games so far this season. The keynote to the Cats' offensive punch has been teamwork as Loche has instituted a pattern style of play which calls for five players to split the scoring instead of depending on one leading scorer.

Thus four of the five Vermont starters have been averaging in double figures. Co-captains Milt Goggans and Layne Higgs, playmaker Ken (Walter) Spalter, and soph forward Bill Librera have all had good nights on different occasions this season. 6-5 center Russ Boardman has been improving with each game as starting to help the other four with the scoring load along with doing a good job on the boards. The 6-4 Goggans at one time was ranked 8th in the nation for his rebounding efforts this year.

As far as the reserves go, the sixth man, junior Bruce Hanna, has been doing a good job at filling in. Sophomore Bruce Lombard is the other top replacement for the guards. Alden Hale, Sandy McLeod and Mike Karel are the three Loche calls on to give his big men a rest. Sophomore Don Katz turned in a good performance in his last outing by hitting a perfect 8 for 8 from the foul line and finishing with 10 points while coming off the bench.

A review of the team's last four games follows:

Rhode Island 97 Vermont 63

This game was simply a story of the hot-shooting Rams outclassing the smaller UVM squad. Steve Chubin led URI with 20 points and moved closer to breaking his school's scoring record now held by his coach, Ernie Calverley. Milt Goggans and Bill Librera were in double figures for Vermont.

Vermont 80 New Hampshire 66

Bill Librera had his best night of the year with 18 points to lead the Cats to their second Yankee Conference victory of the year. Goggans, Higgs, and Spalter also had good scoring efforts for the improving UVM squad.

Vermont 92 Middlebury 75

The Cats eased to the first State Series win of the year against a small Panther team. Goggans, Librera, and Spalter were high scorers as Vermont pulled away from their opponents after Middlebury closed to within four points early in the second half.

Vermont 82 Boston University 59

UVM made it three in a row as every team member got into the scoring act against the cold-shooting Terriers from BU. The starting team looked very smooth in this one with "Walter" Spalter leading the scoring parade with 16. Goggans added 13 while Russ Boardman and soph reserve Don Katz chipped in with 10 points apiece.

Elgarts Set Dance Tempo

The music of this year's Kake Walk Ball consists of a rare combination of talent. The sound of Les and Larry Elgart and their Orchestra together with that of The McCoy's will be heard echoing from the Patrick Gymnasium on Thurs., Feb. 24.

Les and Larry Elgart and their Orchestra is the nation's most acclaimed dance band. They play highly danceable tempos, which are spiced with original musical.

The Orchestra consists of a group of gifted musicians, steeped in jazz tradition, who are also capable of fine ensemble playing. They play for the listeners as well as the dancers. The result—the unique "Elgart" sound.

People throughout the nation acclaim this group of artists. It has been voted the Number 1 dance band by the National Ballroom Association. The Orchestra has also won the Number 1 spot in a poll conducted by the Associated Press.

The Elgart Orchestra manages to keep the dance floor crowded at all times with sensible tempos and a nostalgic repertoire.

Brubeck Swings Out

Repertoire Will Include Original
Compositions By Quartet Members

Featured at the 1966 Kake Walk Jazz Concert will be the internationally famous Dave Brubeck Quartet. The concert which will be held Fri., Feb. 25 at Patrick Gymnasium will consist of a varied repertoire that reaches back into the roots of jazz and projects into the future.

The composer-pianist-leader and his associates, Paul Desmond (alto sax), Joe Morello (drums) and Eugene Wright (bass) will improvise on a few such standards as Duke Ellington's "A Train" but will devote most of the afternoon to new compositions by the pianist and other Quartet members.

Brubeck, who can speak a most mystically about his jazz experience, looks upon the Quartet as "a sensitive, fine and varied instrument. When we are playing our best, four of the men function as one musical mind—the sum is greater than each of its parts because the immeasurable ingredients of inspiration has been added."

Dave Brubeck

His practical leadership is evidenced in the fact that since the Dave Brubeck Quartet was acknowledged the top jazz group in 1953, it has remained in the forefront while other groups have come and gone. Testimony to this leadership are over 200 original songs, 46 record albums, a ballet, a concert for jazz combo and symphony orchestra, a TV score and a jazz musical.

SECRET TO SUCCESS

The Dave Brubeck Quartet has won almost every national and international award in jazz. For the ninth consecutive year, the group has won Playboy Magazine's Annual Jazz Poll, being elected the top instrumental combo. Also, it emerged the winner in the small instrumental combo category in Down Beat Magazine's 29th Annual Reader's Poll. The Down Beat Magazine awards are the most coveted in the jazz world. The Dave Brubeck Quartet has won more Down Beat polls than any other jazz group in history.

The secret of the group's success lies in the leader's philosophy that "every performance is a new experience."

McCoy's Rock With "Fever" Pitch

The McCoy's

The McCoy's, the second attraction at the Ball, will provide a livelier beat. Their hit records "Hang On Sloopy" and "Fever" will pick up the tempo of the Ball.

The McCoy's consist of Rick Zehringer (lead guitarist), Randy Zehringer (drummer), Randy Hobbs (bass), and Ronnie Brandon (organ).

These four fine musicians have wonderful spirit and musical talent. Individually as well as collectively they are "professionals," and a credit to the music profession.

BRANDYWINE SINGERS PRESENT UNIQUE BLEND

The second group of performers at the Jazz Concert will be the Brandywine Singers. This group, which has run-up the most impressive college concert record in the history of the music business, will bring a rare understanding of pop folk materials to the UVM campus.

Despite their youth, these singers are "old pros." Their origin as a professional group began on the UNH campus where twin brothers Rick and Ron Shaw joined voices and guitars in song. After a highly successful freshman-year as seasoned performers, they selected Les Clark as the third member of the Brandywine Singers. From that point on the group developed into one of the nation's leading singing acts.

On every date The Singers have played throughout the country they continually impress their public. Their perfect intonation of vocal blending and expert knowledge of instrumental harmonic sound adds up to a splendid appearance.

It is indeed a pity that the words "unique blend" have been so overworked because they seem to have been coined especially for The Brandywines. This group presents a wave-front-of-sound in which it is almost impossible to distinguish the separate voices.

McCUNE ADDRESSES STUDENT SENATE

Shannon McCune

In a speech delivered to members of the Student Senate, UVM President Shannon McCune outlined the reasons for his opposition to a controversial bill presently before the Vermont Legislature. The bill, if passed, would remove the power to set UVM tuition rates from the board of trustees, fixing the rates according to a set formula. Noting that the formula would not alter present tuition rates significantly, Dr. McCune said he opposed the bill as a matter of principle. Then he went on to defend the present tuition policy.

FACTS OF LIFE

Dr. McCune admitted concern over the fact that UVM's present tuition rates are the highest for any state university in the nation. The present rates are $500 for residents and $1500 for non-residents. He emphasized, however, that these rates simply "reflect the facts of life for our university." Nationally, the average state university receives 39 per cent of its operating income from state appropriations, and 11 per cent from tuition and fees. UVM, on the other hand, receives only 25 per cent from state dollars, and therefore must compensate by raising 25 per cent from tuition and fees.

The Black Cat Is Like You

He made it clear, however, that he wasn't complaining about present state appropriations. He said, "No one who understands the situation would deny that Vermont has been generous in its support of education."

"The dollar amount has increased every biennium. But even so, the state appropriation has remained about 25 per cent of UVM's total operating income since the 1955 Legislature enacted charter changes clearly establishing UVM as the state university."

SYMPATHETIC BUT...

Dr. McCune told students he was in sympathy with the concern of Rep. Donald Milne of Barre over the rates of tuition at UVM. Mr. Milne introduced the bill to fix tuition rates. He said, however, that tuition reduction is not the answer to the problem; that a much more practical solution would be increased state aid for student scholarships.

Dr. McCune conceded the University does not have as much student aid "as our students need," but he said more than $1,000,000 in student aid has been awarded this year at UVM to more than 1100 students. Over 40 per cent of Vermonters enrolled as undergraduates at UVM are receiving scholarship or loan aid.

He told students a tuition increase is not contemplated in present planning for UVM's 1967-

69 biennial budget which will be presented to the regular session of the Vermont Legislature which will convene a year from now; but he did report that consideration is being given to an increase in room and board charges for the coming year to help meet rising costs of operating living and dining units. It is hoped that increases in scholarship and loan funds will offset these increased cost for needy students.

VERMONTERS TAKE PRIDE

He also noted that UVM's last tuition increase came in 1964, when tuition was raised by the Board of Trustees from $416 to $500 for residents and from $1200 to $1500 for non-residents to help offset reductions made in the University's requested state appropriation.

He said the alternative would have been to compromise the quality of university programs, specifically by falling behind in faculty salary progress, and he said the Trustees did not believe this an acceptable alternative.

"Though a newcomer to Vermont and to this university," he said, "I believe the people of Vermont and the students and staff of the University take pride in and have come to expect quality programs at their university."

Sabbaticals Announced

The Board of Trustees at UVM approved sabbatical leaves for 10 faculty members, as follows. First semester: Martha Caldwell, home economics; Isabel Mills, art; Hubert Vogelmann, botany; Albert Wurthmann, German. Second semester: Betty Bandel, English; Harry Kahn, German; Milton Nadworny, commerce and economics; E.A. Nyquist, commerce and economics; Milton Potash, zoology. For the full year: Robert Daniels, history.

Trustees Approve Faculty Changes

The Board of Trustees at UVM approved four appointments, accepted 12 resignations, and granted three leaves of absence at Saturday's meeting.

Among the appointments was that of Charles Shields as professor and chairman of the department of physical medicine and rehabilitation.

Resignations accepted included Ann Barber, pathology; Clark Danielson, romance languages; Hernando de la Cuesta, electrical engineering; William Dennis, romance languages; Katherine Duroe, home economics; Margaret Edward, romance languages; Edward Foley, physics; Sam Nath Ghei, psychology; John Hall, extension service; Robert Maxwell, pharmacology; Hans Murbe, English; Henry Pratt, obstetrics and gynecology.

Granted leaves of absence were Stuart Johnston, romance languages; Joseph Suriano, medical microbiology; and K. Lucille Whitney, state home economist in rural civil defense.

Grad School Gets NASA Traineeships

UVM's Graduate College has been awarded five predoctoral traineeships by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, making a total of 14 of the traineeships received to support graduate study in space-related sciences.

The program provides stipends up to a maximum of $3400 for each student awarded one of the traineeships, and includes a program allowance to the institution.

The program is designed not only to accelerate production of doctorates in science and technology but also to strengthen the graduate capabilities of U.S. universities.

Current Division Of Expenses Announced

This campus boasts an undergraduate enrollment of 3780 students.

Each of us has a different background and individual personality traits. We have, each of us, our own ideals, desires, and goals. We look differently, think differently. Each of us is inspired, elated, depressed, encouraged by things that would mean nothing to others. But many of us do have at least one thing in common, that being an interest in the HOW and WHERE of the spending of university funds, a part of which is made up of our tuition and fees.

For those of you who have expressed an interest in the following information, for others who have wondered silently, and even those of you who couldn't care less (because we think you should), we present here the expenses and resources of UVM and the State Agricultural College for the fiscal year 1964-1965.

CYNIC would like to extend its thanks to Mr. Charles Wolf, assistant university auditor, for his cheerful cooperation and generous contribution of time and effort in helping with this presentation.

Advisory Committee Formed

The University of Vermont is forming a state-wide committee of educators to advise its College of Education and Nursing on its teacher education programs.

UVM President Shannon McCune said that such a committee would serve as a useful mechanism for two-way communication between the staff most directly concerned with teacher education at the University and other key people involved in Vermont education. There is a close relationship between teacher education and the quality of education in the elementary and secondary schools, he said, and "a need for effective communication and common understanding."

Dr. McCune said the committee will include representatives from professional organizations representing teachers, principals, superintendents, guidance and curriculum specialists, school directors and the State Department of Education.

Dr. McCune has asked Dr. Thomas C. King, dean of the University's College of Education and Nursing, to serve as chairman of the committee, which will be asked to review the teacher education programs at Vermont, discuss their effectiveness, and to consider the need for additional programs.

Students Face Draft

A new draft policy will go into effect next September which will guide Selective Service boards in choosing college students for induction.

If draft quotas remain over 30,000 men per month as they are presently, there will soon be a need to draw on the more than a million and a half students now classified 2-S and deferred. Although no definite plans have yet been released, it is thought that the methods used will be similar to ones employed at the time of the Korean War.

If so, the local board will be offered certain advisory criteria for deciding what students it should take first in filling its quota. Tests made by the same service which administers College Boards will probably be used to rate the relative ability of all students.

Local boards may make a decision on the basis of one's achievement, on the test or class standing. Probability of being drafted is highest in the lower half of the freshman class, lower third of the sophomore class, and the lower quarter of the junior class.

Graduate students would probably have to prove that their study program was in the national interest and would be finished within a reasonable length of time.

All of these standards would be advisory: the local board has the option of drafting almost anyone within certain broad categories, if regular potential draftees in the area have already been inducted.

Federal regulations regarding protest burnings of boards (of the draft variety) have not yet been widely advertised.

ROTC Instructor Sent To Vietnam

The Department of the Army has announced the reassignment of Major Frank Robertson from the university faculty to the 29th Quartermaster Battalion headquartered in Saigon, Vietnam effective in early July.

Major Robertson

Major Robertson is the fourth member of the Military Science Department ordered to Vietnam in the past year. Major John Hussey is currently in Vietnam in command of a Special Forces unit near the central highlands. Captain John Strickler was assigned to the engineer component of the Saigon-based 1st Logistical Command prior to his accidental death last week. He and SFC Benway were assigned to Vietnam last spring. SFC Benway is presently back in the United States having been evacuated as a result of serious illness last October. His recovery was complete. He has been assigned to Fort Huachuca, Arizona.

Major Robertson is a 1955 graduate of the United States Military Academy. He joined the UVM faculty in Sept. 1964 after a three-year tour of duty in Germany. His promotion to Major was announced last December. He and his wife and their two children reside in South Burlington.

The mailing address of all former members of the Military Science Department is available at the Department should members of the university community desire to communicate with them.

ROTC NEWS

Seven UVM mid-year graduates and former ROTC cadets were commissioned second lieutenants in the United States Army Reserve in ceremonies at the Military Science Department yesterday. Colonel L. G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, conducted the ceremony.

The new lieutenants and their branch are: William H. Bosworth, Infantry, Santon's River, Vt.; Charles M. Dale, Military Police, Wellesley, Mass.; Chester B. Eaton, Jr., Transportation Corps, Burlington, Vt.; Gregory N. Lamb, Armor, Lake Placid, N.Y.; William P. Mangan, Artillery, Rutland, Vt.; David B. Mansfield, Signal Corps, Seekonk, Mass.; and Alan R. Warmington, Intelligence & Security, Quincy, Mass.

Lieutenants Eaton and Lamb are Distinguished Military Graduates. Lieutenants Lamb and Mangan are graduates of the ROTC Flight Training Program.

Negro College Needs Books

Paul Quinn College is a Negro church college here in Waco. (It is integrated formally, but "Whites" have not come.) We have been able to build a new library that will hold 50,000 books, we only have 14,000 books to go in it. Most of the shelves therefore are bare.

The students here are good kids - they are having to struggle up from preparatory schooling that, in many cases, was not rigorous enough. The trustees of the college want to start a drive to get good, current college books and textbooks into our library, and they have designated me to find ways to get these books.

It occurred to us, during a recent board meeting, that many of the college students use their books and then don't want to keep some of them, but really can't get what they're worth in selling them back to the book stores, and that perhaps many of these students would like the idea of giving such books to the library at Paul Quinn. Perhaps also, in some cases, college bookstores in your State would find it feasible to ship spare quantities of good, current, college-level books to the library here rather than returning them somewhere to be abandoned.

We know you will seriously consider this appeal for books for the students' use at Paul Quinn. Books may be shipped EXPRESS-COLLECT to: Mrs. Delores Harris, Librarian, Paul Quinn College, Waco, Texas 76704.

EDITORIAL...

Men, your curfew for the coming semester will be strictly enforced. You must be in your living units promptly at 11:45 during the week and 1:15 on weekends. Sound funny? No funnier than women's curfews, and we've even given you time to take your date back for her curfew and then rush back to your dorm, fraternity house, or apartment. Suffice it to say that anyone reading this thinks that we are out of our minds.

We can already hear the repercussions. Boys don't start to study until after 11 at night when they crowd into the all-night study room at Bailey. The guys are all going out for a lureburger - you can't go though, because you have to close house. Sorry to present the problem to you, but we've got to face the facts - equality of the sexes does not exist on the UVM campus.

We're not about to recommend that we be given complete freedom from existing regulations, because we still believe in a gradual acceptance into our pseudosociety. By doing nothing, however, we cannot advance so we'd like to start with a subject dear to our hearts and those of our superiors and comrades - curfews.

The pseudosociety to which we previously referred, is supposedly one in which students, both men and women, have an opportunity to grow. If a person is deprived of his or her natural rights, he cannot grow. These are the rights which we were granted prior to our arrival at this institution of learning and which have since been taken from us.

We are trying to advance from a position of complete dependence on our parents to that glorious state of utter independence. There must be a point at which we can say that we have reached this ultimate. This point should logically come during our college years. Curfews are a part of the independence not granted to women.

There have been thoughts directed toward allowing senior women to live off campus. If this is done, these women will have no curfews. But what about the senior women who cannot live in apartments because they lack the finances or cannot find apartments? Should these women be deprived of rights granted to their fellow classmates?

Some may argue that there is nothing to do in Burlington after midnight anyway; the point of my argument is not that women be allowed to stay out all night. The decision should rest with the women as it now rests with the men, in compliance with their present moral standards.

Another question now arises as to the possibility that moral problems may result from a relaxed system of curfews. It has been jokingly suggested to us that the same things can be done between 9 and 1 as between 1 and 5.

Prof Views Final Exams

To the Editor:

Now that the CYNIC is on record advocating bi-weekly quizzes instead of final exams perhaps I might be permitted a rebuttal. What follows is entirely a personal view, not subscribed to by any official University authority, but it may be of some interest.

1. The statement that "few if any examinations offer a valid indication of how much we know" is simply naive. All examinations offer a certain measurement of how much of a certain body of material the candidates know well enough (at the time of the exam) to get down correctly on the answer sheet. Naturally some exams test certain things better than others - some instructors even think they know exactly the kind of things their exams are testing best! Not all teachers, and certainly not all students, would agree on the kinds of things which ought to be tested by exams, but that is another problem, surely. The point is that teachers can, if they are honest with themselves, set exams which really test those things which they believe must be tested. Doubtless some exams presently given are hypocritical and "invalid," but they need not be so a priori.

TEACHERS UNDERSTAND PRESSURE

2. Most teachers know that good students can, for one reason or another, do somewhat worse on any given exam than they should do in view of their basic intelligence and basic knowledge of the course material. A good instructor probably counteracts such a temporary lapse with a balancing grade based on his individual knowledge of the student's abilities and effort as observed in class and in other written work handed in during the year. But the other side of the coin is the fact that some people have the ability to "beat" exams, to cram successfully and find the proper formulae on exam day. If the exam is a good one, and if it is testing the things which the instructor wants to test, is he to deny these students the grades which such talents earn them just because others don't share those talents? Perhaps part of what he is really looking for is just that type of intellectual ability which people who "beat" exams have. Moreover, the real world around us frequently demands performance under intense pressure, and it is just possible that insofar as final exams force students to do just that, they are a very good indicator of those whom we want to send out into the world with a B.A. (But your point that hour-tests should not be given just prior to finals week is well taken - this is a barbarism which is only partly the product of the new schedule.)

3. How frequently does one exam "cancel out an entire semester of hard work" on the part of students who have the basic intellectual capacity to cope with the course material in the first place? You say that this "happens quite frequently", but I doubt it. No examples come immediately to hand, and I think that this is really one of those multitudinous myths and legends about college life which enliven conversation in the Den. Besides, the fact that many students don't bother to keep up with assignments (and that, conversely, some do) is much more apparent to teachers than students may realize, and it is entirely appropriate that bonus grades should be given on the basis of the relatively subtle "testing" which is a continuous process in any good teacher-student relationship.

4. The idea that everybody ought to take bi-weekly quizzes in all courses would be hilarious were it not so horrifying that students, of all people, should espouse it. If American "higher education" suffers from anything fundamentally destructive and debilitating, it is over-testing. What in Heaven's name is the good of asking mature adults (sic) to prove seven times per semester, in writing, that they have been good little boys and girls and read the assignment, or studied the two-week chunk of material involved? Are we never to be able to ask students to relate April's material to October's, or to try to fit all the material of a course into a meaningful synthesis? Of course your system would let us offer the B.A. degree upon successful completion of, say 560 "Quiz Units," suitably distributed! Would you be proud of such a degree?

ONE EXAM

5. What we need in most arts/humanities/social science courses is surely not more, but vastly fewer tests. It is the ultimate heresy, I suppose, but I should recommend one final exam per course at the end of each year, with an end to all this nonsense of hour-tests and second hour-tests and third hour-tests and written quizzes and mid-term grade reports (these last are probably worthwhile for first-term freshmen, but surely aren't needed in upper division). At least one week, preferably two, should be allowed off for pre-final study, and the finals should be sensibly spaced instead of being thrown holus-bolus into a ten-day period. Such exams must be really fair (this is not the same as "easy"), discriminating and sophisticated in the things they are actually testing, and administered by a faculty which respects the essential dignity and worth of the students facing them, which has done its best during the year to get to know students' strengths and weaknesses, and which has a healthy chunk of classroom work, essays, papers and the like on which to base an auxiliary grade so that the final is not the only grade to count (although it should be decidedly the most important one). This is a University, not a kindergarten, and it is a psychological commonplace that if the System truly respects the worth of the individual, the individual will in turn respect the System. Degrees earned under such a system leave the earner with a considerable respect for his University, not to mention a necessary amount of self-respect, which is more than can be said of a lot of American university degrees in this year of 1966.

Sincerely,

William Metcalfe

Schmoke! Has Defender

To the Editor:

Sometime after ski season is over spring will arrive, and along with the frantic euphoria of pastoral glands there will come for many of us the very real prospect of Viet Nam. Depending upon our degree of involvement, the more primitive of us (those who can't make the grade to sophisticated intellectual indifference) are going to need some definite outlook to face whatever becomes our lot.

Mr. Spinner devotes the majority of his last contribution to the CYNIC in calling for a responsible public attitude toward our country's war. He uses for sources the responsible public news media and responsible public officials and the subsequent responsible feelings of responsibility arrived at through obvious logic. But Mr. Spinner seems to forget that most students don't believe any more. It doesn't take too keen an eye to see the same kind of emotional distortion in the New York Times that is less professionally done in the Burlington Free Press. It is not a lethargic apathy that found only a handful watching the President's state of the union message - it is an apathy founded on mistrust and revulsion. We don't believe in L.B. Johnson or his babbling and transparent government. We don't believe in the academic establishment or the games it plays with platitudes or its ineffectual consideration of "world problems." We don't believe in Adler, the Associated Press, or the Saturday Evening Post. And you wonder why some of us burn draft cards.

No, Mr. Spinner, you can use your respectable facts and your modern trends and prove all that you want, but don't ask us to listen until you can find an explanation for the rape of our future.

It is a failing of youth to desire to start anew rather than repair a time proven tradition. The Bob Dylans and others to come will convince us to change horses in the middle of the stream, and in 1972 the ancient predictions will become realities. You are not in sympathy with the "revolution," Mr. Spinner, you are the cause.

Academic Freedom?

To the Editor:

If not hopelessly childish, Mr. Nasif's article, at least, represents a greater threat to the nation than communism.

Suppression of basic freedoms follows the path of totalitarianism. When these freedoms are lost, it little matters what form of government lords over us because, as certain radicals like T. Pain, T. Jefferson, and A. Lincoln would have us believe -- this is a government of, by and for the people.

"The other side of Loyalty is Treason," states Mr. Nasif. We cannot help but think that this quote denies in part, at least, the first amendment of the Constitution of these United States. We believe that Loyalty is treason insofar as it forces us to forsake those fundamental rights for which many Americans have died. He who blindly follows the dictates of an erring government is himself guilty of treason, treason to himself and to the fundamental tenets of his nation.

It is true that radical groups exist in our society but to suppress these relatively harmless groups is to promote the very evil which we wish to avoid, the destruction of democracy. America should always remain flexible, hardening of the arteries will only serve to promote the threat to democracy.

Is academic freedom "a clear and present danger" and must it suffer at the hands of every overzealous alarmist?

Goodman Comments

What Is Youth?

(Editor's Note: Paul Goodman, syndicated columnist, will be presenting his views on campus life each week.

What is the meaning of the word "Youth" when they say "Youth revolt" or "What has gotten into College Youth?" I doubt that age 18-25 was ever before referred to as Youth. In a rural economy, the young are indispensably productive by 12 and are grown-up farmers by 18 or 20. In the old factory system, children were put to work at 9, to teach them work habits; they were certainly just "workmen" by 18. In later factories, after the child-labor laws, 18-year-olds were young working people, not youth. In agrarian or labor demonstrations and strikes these young people would naturally be involved, and especially relied on for their courage and daring, like military soldiers, who were also 17-25. In countries with a different academic tradition than ours, e.g. Latin countries or Japan, it is assumed that students are even more mature than others of their age, so they are expected to be in the forefront of political conflicts. In 1900, when only six percent of the 17-year-olds graduated from high school, the rest, who from 14 on had to choose vocations and look for jobs in a competitive market, were surely pretty seasoned by 18. And in moral matters, there would surely be no question of trying to control the sex life, social life, or vices of young people 18 to 25.

Arresting Maturation

I think there are two chief causes for the odd use of the word at present. Because of technical developments, there is less need for the direct productive use of the young (and no use at all for the old). There is a longer and longer interval in which the young must be baby-sat and policed. Our preferred means of keeping them on ice is, of course, to extend the years of schooling, especially since for many (though I doubt for most) extended schooling is useful training for their future jobs. But it happens that the methods and tradition of American schooling have tended precisely to arrest maturation. Although compulsory schooling increases to the college years, the school-ma'am spirit of the elementary grades pervades the entire system, whether we think of the corridor passes and censorship of hair-do's, the prescribed courses and credits and grading, the method of talking-at, and assigning lessons, or the restrictions on political and social life. Studying a cross-section of high schools, Ed Friedenberg has to conclude that their chief function is to break spirit. And most important, the restriction of growing up in one sociological institution, the school, must be defeating to the majority for whom formal schooling is not the best way to learn. But from the beginning they have no choice. If a youngster tries to follow his bent, whether a "hobby" or a romance, he is unhesitatingly interrupted and put back on the one serious track.

The inevitable revolt against this servitude is now occurring among college students, undergraduates, graduates, young instructors, and their dropout friends. And it seems to me that, among these too, there is a curious anomaly of language. The dissenting students do not really regard themselves as "young people," whether as young workmen or young citizens or even as students; they finally regard themselves as the only people. This is expressed by the formula "Do not trust anybody over 30." That is, they are a separate race of humanity. Interestingly, 48 percent of the population is now below 26.

Chief Exploited Economic Class

The reality, in my opinion, is that they have been forced into the position of being an isolated class of the young. They cannot identify with the social role that their elders have assigned them; they have different interests and there is a class conflict. Indeed, despite their being pampered, they are at present the chief exploited economic class, their time of life being used for other people's purposes. (Negroes, displaced farmers, the aged are out-caste, rather than an economic class.)

Rather than as a class of society, however, the young have appointed themselves to be a distinct race or nation, and, correspondingly, they have performed the remarkable act of having a self-conscious History of themselves. I have been told it, in broadly the same outline, from coast to coast. First came the Beats. Castro was our symbolic leader, but perhaps he has messed himself up with the senile Power Structure. Kennedy fizzled out, though since the assassination he has emerged as a martyr. The execution of Chessman was a portentous warning to us, for it showed that the System intends to do us to death. We tried our strength in Mississippi and in the battle of the steps filmed by HUAC. Finally occurred the Founding Event, Sproul Hall and the recognition by the Faculty Senate that we Exist. (A leader of the Free Speech Movement at Berkeley assured me that this was the first Event in 40,000 years.) Etc, etc. There are regional variations.

Along with the History, there has developed the political theory of para-movements: para-politics (e.g. of SNOC and the Freedom Democratic Party), para-sociology (e.g. of Students for a Democratic Society), para-education (e.g. the free Universities). In principle, this parallel development is not an old-fashioned revolutionary concept, to get control of and transform existing institutions. Rather, is it a New Beginning that will grow up uniquely and slough off the old? The spirit of the Modern — "we moderns" — has breathed a few times before in European history; I will try to describe it further on another occasion.

Know Yourself Well

"Know yourself well" is excellent advice to those college seniors seeking futures in the business world immediately after graduation. A liberal arts program is designed to provide a student with this important knowledge — to prepare him for "making it" as a person — truly the ultimate goal of all education. An Employment Interview Conference held here last Dec. 2 was the occasion for this point to be emphasized.

ROLE OF THE DEGREE

A college degree opens the door for a good job, not necessarily for experts but for mature, capable people. Introduced by Walter Pressey (SA Pres.) and Dean Kidder, a panel discussed the crucial factor in obtaining a job, the interview. According to Mr. Hanau the moderator, it is indeed during a few precious moments of an interview that a job is won or lost.

Edward R. Powers, presenting the facts on the first step, the screening interview, claimed that the employer is asking "Is this the type of person we want?" Therefore, the applicant should be prepared to positively convince him. The young graduate should have an idea of what is best for him, for example, individual or group work, small or large-scale projects. In evaluating his specific capabilities, he should refer to his college experience. Above all he should be well aware of his interests and ambitions. Such information conveyed sincerely, and concisely is a preassumed element of an impressive preliminary interview.

THE "FOLLOW-UP" INTERVIEW

Another speaker, Robert Schuyler, commented on the more serious "follow-up" interview, which usually takes place at the plant itself. Here the business side of the individual shows itself.

After a routine of business formalities such as letters, background resumes, and proper dress, the prospective employee should also have done some research. He should pose a few depth questions not answered in the brochures. Interviewers appreciate conservative naturalness and polite, frank responses to inquiries. There is nothing wrong in asking about the expenses of a trip to a particular meeting place.

Remember always, as Mr. Schuyler advises, the interviewer's position. He is paid for effective judgment of an applicant's potentiality. The fact that one is a good prospect can only be demonstrated by an active part in interviews. The invaluable personality trait is a thorough, clear picture of one's own interests, abilities and ambitions — a knowledge of oneself.

The only difference is that the later it gets, the more tired one becomes. Statistics show a maintenance, if not a rise, in moral standards as a result of abolishing curfews.

We also recognize the possibility that we have neither realized nor expounded upon all of the issues. We would like to emphasize that we are not advocating the complete and immediate abolishment of curfews. We do feel, however, that the women students of the University are able to cope with this added responsibility. Nothing short of the complete removal of curfews will prove to the women students that the Administration can accept the fact that we are "women" and not little girls.

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director UVM Placement Service

Facing A Job Interview

Practically no one is hired without first talking with the employer's personnel representative. All your devices in seeking a job — your letter of application, use of personal contacts, canvassing of business firms — simply lead you to the interview with the personnel man who will pass judgment on your claims to employment. At this time in the Placement Office and lasting until spring vacation, some 100 employers will be on campus to talk with seniors. For those who have registered, this recruiting period represents a unique opportunity, in that the employer is coming to seek you here. After graduation you will have to seek out the employer.

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS ARE PRELIMINARY

Campus interviews are merely considered to be preliminary or screening interviews. Each interview is normally of thirty minutes duration. The personnel representative usually known as a College Recruiter will decide on the basis of what he sees and hears whether or not to invite you, with all expenses paid to his home office for further consideration and possible employment. Interviews should not be taken lightly. Each of your interviews will be different. Each must be approached with a seriousness of purpose. You are a seller not a buyer.

Always remember that the interviewer's opinion of you must crystallize in a few moments time. You will have little opportunity to correct your mistakes. To spoil your chances by thoughtless things which may be offensive in the height of stupidity. For example, do not smoke unless you are asked to. Do not attempt to be familiar; the recruiter may consider it as impertinent. You can be easy, well poised, and pleasant without impairing your dignity. A good rule to follow is to always take your cue from the interviewer.

Sooner or later during the course of your interview you will be asked two important questions. They may come directly or indirectly. Some recruiters prefer to be pretty blunt; others would rather have you do your own talking and draw their conclusions. But these two questions they must have answered to their own satisfaction: First: What prompted you to take this particular interview? Second: What can you offer? Pass these two and you will be off to an excellent beginning.

KNOW SOMETHING ABOUT THE BUSINESS

In order to answer the first question, you must know something about the type of business and the potential employer in particular. You should have read the Company Recruiting Literature or discussed job opportunities with people in the industry. If you do not know anything about the Company, obviously you cannot talk convincingly about it. The more you know in advance, the more likely you will be to discover what you have that the Company can use. And that, remember, is your best selling point.

As to the second question — what can you offer the company? This involves the whole problem of experience, special training, and aptitudes. For the majority of you this will be your first full time job, therefore, as a rule, you can offer little. However, you do have health, intelligence, education and former employment.

Previous experience tells your prospective employer that at least you know what work is. The fact that you have proved self-reliant and enterprising is in your favor. The way in which you have supported yourself through college may indicate the qualities of ingenuity and enterprise for which business is always looking.

The usual interview falls pretty much into a straight question-and-answer pattern. Here your ability to answer quickly and intelligently is of tremendous importance. Above all things, do not tell the interviewer that you have come in to look over the possibilities of the job, and that really you are undecided as to what you want to do. Convince the interviewer that this particular job is the one you want.

Students Prefer Hamburgs And Ice Cream

Many of the "old favorites" have won a new vote of confidence on last semester's Food Preference Survey, reports Saga's District Manager Jim Hagadone.

As expected there were some differences between the choice at Redstone, Marsh and Waterman. Most students indicated their favorite luncheon entree is hamburgers, hot turkey sandwiches and cheeseburgers are close behind. The favorite dinner dessert was an ice cream sundae. Roast beef should be cooked medium, rare, and well done, in that order.

For those gourmets who wish a more complete report, managers Wayne Bruns at Simpson, Loren Shepard at Wright, Bill Walway at Marsh, Dick Dearden at Waterman, invite you to stop by the office or see them in the dining room for the full story.

PLAYBOY OPINION SURVEY FINDS COLLEGE STUDENTS WANT U.S. TO PUSH WAR INTO NORTH VIET NAM IF REDS BALK ON NEGOTIATIONS; CALL FOR BOMBING OF HANOI AND OTHER CITIES NOW

(Copyright 1965 by Playboy Magazine)

A majority of U.S. college students believe that if there is no negotiated settlement in Viet Nam before the end of this year, the United States should push the war into North Viet Nam. This is one of several findings of the first Playboy College Opinion Survey covering 200 campuses.

An even larger percentage of students believe we should extend bombing raids to vital installations in Hanoi and other North Viet Name cities. The survey, which measures opinions of both students and faculty members, finds that the majority of faculty members polled do not take this "aggressive" attitude and believe that the military actions should be confined to South Viet Nam only.

While many officials have stated that the recent public demonstrations against this nation's involvement in Viet Nam are representative of an "infinitesimal" number of college students, the college students and faculty members polled estimate that they reflect the attitude of approximately 5 percent of the students on their campuses. The students and faculty, however, make it clear that they overwhelmingly believe that Americans are obligated to serve in the nation's armed forces, even if they are in disagreement with their government's policies. (90 percent of students -- 82 percent of faculty).

Indicative of the support of the campuses for the administration's policy in Viet Nam is the fact that 82 percent of the students and 72 percent of the faculty members agreed that the United States has an obligation to provide active military assistance to that nation. Further, a large majority of students -- 88 percent -- and faculty -- 83 percent -- felt that use of non-toxic tear gas is justifiable as a means of disabling the Viet Cong without endangering the lives of civilians.

The Playboy College Opinion Survey is based on responses from a representative sample of approximately 1000 students from all classes, ages and backgrounds, who serve as a permanent "sounding board" on questions of current interest. Another permanent panel of 200 faculty members -- one representative of each campus -- comprising a wide variety of educational fields have been polled. The survey also reflects opinions from campuses on a regional basis -- in the East, Midwest, South, Southwest and West.

Analysis of returns on a regional basis indicates a high degree of uniformity of opinion. Noticeable exceptions occur on the question of "Should we avoid bombing military installations in populous areas of North Viet Nam, such as Hanoi?" While 67 percent of all student respondents favor bombing these areas, 82 percent of students on southwestern campuses advocate bombing but only 49 percent of students on southern campuses concur.

Following are the results of the Playboy College Opinion Survey with the answers as a percentage of the total respondents:

SNEA MEETING

A SNEA meeting will be held on Tues., Feb. 8 at 7:00 p.m. in 210 Waterman Building.

The program will consist of an election of a Board of Directors, and a panel discussion, "The Beginning Teacher." The panel will include beginning elementary and secondary teachers of the Burlington area. This should be very informative for all education students, especially for those in secondary education. Refreshments will be served.

FRENCH CULTURAL

The French Cultural Center is in its second year of operation and was organized by the department of romance languages to provide students with the opportunity of continuing their learning of French outside the classroom. The center, located in Redstone Hall, is open from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. under the direction of Mrs. Renee Swift.

INTERNATIONAL CLUB DINNER

There will be an International dinner party held at 7:30 p.m. Fri. evening Feb. 11, 1966 in the St. Anselm Library (Redstone Campus).

Each person is asked if possible to bring an international dish. For those who find it impossible to bring food, there will be a charge of $.75 per person. The buffet dinner is open to guests of members. For reservations, contact Mrs. E. Meymarian, Metabolic Unit, Medical Alumni Building by Friday, February 4.

The International Club will also host a group of visiting Chileans from The Experiment of International Living at a dinner party on Feb. 11.

HILLEL HOLDS FACULTY-STUDENT DISCUSSIONS

Two months ago Hillel organized a faculty-student discussion group. Every other week students meet with faculty members to discuss topics ranging from the American Jew's relationship to Israel to religious faith in the modern world. The next meeting will be Sun., Feb. 6 at 4 p.m.

CAMPUS BOWLING

TOURNAMENT

The Campus Bowling Tournament for 1966 will begin on Feb. 7 for all undergraduate men's double teams. The tournament will be held in the Waterman Recreation Room of the Waterman Building.

Trophies will be presented to the winners and runner-up teams. The cost for each team will be $1.90 which covers entry fee and the three games for each member of the team.

The tournament will end on Feb. 18. The teams may bowl at any time from 4 p.m. until 9 p.m.

The Men's Resident Hall Council will provide the $1.90 entrance fee for all men living in the Freshman Complex.

For further information contact Mr. Hardy in the Waterman Recreation Room.

Strandberg Publishes Literary First

Victor Strandberg, assistant professor of English, is the author of the first book-length study of the poetry of Robert Penn Warren. The 292-page book, A Colder Fire, has just been published by the University of Kentucky Press.

Prof. Strandberg suggests that the subtlety and complexity of Warren's themes and images, which together form the chief focus of Colder Fire are the reasons for the neglect of Warren's poetic work.

From a close analysis of the poems, Prof. Strandberg holds that Warren's themes have developed consistently from his abiding concern with the question of the ultimate meaning of existence and the problem of identity in a mechanistic universe.

He traces these themes from Warren's earliest poems, which were concerned with man's insignificance before the external world of time and nature, to the mature verse where he turns to seek some redemptive force in man's interior world.

Prof. Strandberg joined the English Department at Vermont in 1962. A native of New Hampshire, Strandberg received his A.B. degree from Clark University in Worcester, Mass., and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Brown University. He was elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa at Clark.

Although A Colder Fire is his first book, he has contributed articles to such scholarly journals as The Sewanee Review, PMLA, and The English Journal. Most recently he has published an article concerning the revenge code of Hamlet, "The Revenger's Tragedy: Hamlet's Costly Code" appears in the winter issue of "The South Atlantic Quarterly." Drawing upon evidence within "Hamlet" as well as evidence from Shakespeare's other plays Strandberg contends that the theme or purpose may have been to attack the revenge code that Hamlet follows.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

Flicks

Flynn Theatre - Richard Burton, Claire Bloom, and Oskar Werner in John L. Carré's "The Spy Who Came in From the Cold" - grim, absorbing, chilling and fascinating portrait of the cold war.

Strong Theatre - Jerry Lewis and Tony Curtis in "Boeing Boeing" - anything is a relief after "That Darn Cat."

State Theatre - "My Fair Lady" - a great film. STARTING FEB. 16 - "Thunderball."

S.A. - "Captain Newman M.D." - A good performance by Bobby Darin in a spotty film, that takes too long to deliver its obvious point.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE - The second session of English for Foreign Students ended Friday noon, Jan. 21. Of the 82 who graduated, 52 left for jobs and other universities and 30 are remaining at St. Mike's to continue in the program or enroll in regular academic study.

DALHOUSIE COLLEGE-SNCC is reaching into the far corners of Canada. The Freedom Singers performed Jan. 14 at the college in Halifax, Nova Scotia. The purpose of their tour is to raise money for the Student Non-violent Co-ordinating Committee.

ACADIA UNIVERSITY (WOLFVILLE) - The students published their own "Playboy" calendar. The school officials were quite upset for various reasons. Consequently, the calendar was enpounded. The Administration is being called "Guardians of the students virtue." (This college is in Halifax, Nova Scotia.)

FURMAN UNIVERSITY, Greenville, South Carolina - The students nearly started a campus dance, complete with the combo. It was a drop-in unscheduled affair. But every time a body went with the beat of the drums, a class officer tapped him on the shoulder, reminding him that Furman is still a Baptist school.

The University of Vermont's Program for American Students from Overseas is the subject of an article in an Italian daily newspaper.

The newly established program was written up in the Rome Daily American, the English language newspaper.

The program is designed to give admissions preference for well-qualified U.S. students applying from overseas, and to provide information on the other colleges within the state.

The program is being developed, in the words of UVM President McCune, "in recognition of the fact that American parents overseas face serious problems in providing for a U.S. college education for their children."

Here's the shortest line between graduation and a "go-places" career.

UVM Grafts

Mystery

Tree

UVM's College of Agriculture and Home Economics has added another project on its agenda -- a mystery apple tree.

The mystery apple tree is an out-of-stater, belonging to Mrs. Mary B. Schindler of Norwell, Mass. It began life as a seedling in a remote corner of her orchard some 15 years ago.

Eventually, it produced an unusual apple marked by a streaky, red skin. The fruit was large, juicy, a good keeper, and defied all attempts at identification.

The tree, which has never been pruned and seldom sprayed, has developed into the shape of an umbrella with the handle -- or trunk -- stuck into the ground. The tree has such a thick maze of branches that it can't be climbed, yet each year it is loaded with bushels of large, unblemished, bug-free apples.

Grafting material from Mrs. Schindler's mystery tree is now at the university where additional experiments will be conducted in the spring -- experiments which hopefully will explain the origin of the apple.

In the meantime, mystery or not, Mrs. Schindler is putting her strange apples to prosaic use as a steady stream of apple pies, sauce, and jelly flow from her old-fashioned kitchen.

Marston Club To Present Yeats Festival

The newly organized Frederic C. Marston, Jr. Graduate English Club at UVM will present a week-long program in February on the works of William Butler Yeats as its initial project.

Named in honor of Dr. Marston who died in October after teaching English at Vermont since 1948, the club is for graduate students in English and members of the department of English.

Paul Eschholz of West Hartford, Conn., is president of the club. Other officers are Capt. Kenneth Haas, Burlington, program chairman; Elizabeth White of Pittsford, social chairman, and J. Kirk Howard of Islington, Ontario, treasurer. All are graduate students. Captain Haas is also assigned to the ROTC unit at the university. Faculty advisor is Dr. Robert Cochran.

Eschholz said the purposes of the club are to provide opportunities for graduate students to get together and share ideas, to create a closer faculty-student relationship, and to bring speakers to campus.

The bringing of speakers to campus will be made possible through a gift made to the University by Randolph Marston, brother of the long-time popular UVM professor.

The special Yeats' program will start on Feb. 6 with Professor Thomas Whitaker of Goddard College giving a lecture on the topic "Yeats' Later Plays." Readings of the poet are scheduled for Feb. 7. Both these events will start at 8 p.m. in the north lounge of Billings Center.

On Feb. 12 and 13, the University Players will stage three one-act plays by Yeats, "Calvary," "The Resurrection," and "Purgatory." Curtain-time is 8:30 p.m.

On Feb. 13 at 2:30 p.m. in the north lounge, a panel discussion is planned on the subject "Yeats as Poet and Playwright."

All events are free and open to the public.

Fewer Students Flunking

Academic failure claimed less than 4 per cent of the total undergraduate enrollment at the University of Vermont during the first semester.

Of 3,824 undergraduates, only 141 — 3.7 per cent — were dropped by the university because of poor grades. This bettered the figure of 154 students — 4.2 per cent — of a year ago and continues the trend of fewer academic failures.

Director of Admissions Harold Collins first began compiling figures on academic failures in 1962 and that year 4.8 per cent of the undergraduates were dismissed because of low grades.

The first year saw 6.2 per cent of the freshman class leave while this year the figure was reduced to just 4.4 per cent.

While there are few national figures with which to compare the university's performance, since few colleges report academic losses following the first semester, generally anything under 5 per cent is regarded as outstanding.

"We are delighted to see this steady decrease of academic failure on the part of our students. It is a source of great pride to us here at the university and the students should be proud of their continuing improvement," said Collins.

Methods Of Teaching Questioned Teacher Individuality Should Be Emphasized

Durham, N.H. — (I.P.) — Attacking depersonalization of education between teacher and student, Dr. Asher Moore, philosophy professor at the University of New Hampshire, argues that "the essential role of the teacher is to be himself, a person, in face-to-face confrontation with the students."

"We must reject the idea that what chiefly makes a teacher is his competence in his subject," Dr. Moore said. "We must side with the view that a teacher is primarily a teacher, not a scholar."

One important aspect of teaching must be kept in mind, Dr. Moore emphasized: "It is the personal interest and authority of the teacher which motivates learning, at least learning for its own sake. Subject matter is not somehow 'interesting' in its own right."

FACE-TO-FACE

"Teachers try their whole lives not to be persons, to leave their personal lives at the classroom door," he continued. "They literally exhaust themselves trying to make themselves nothing but an encyclopedia full of information plus a collection of teaching 'methods'." Dr. Moore said. He believes it is by his relation to the teacher as a person that the student becomes a person — "through a face-to-face encounter with another."

He criticized emphasis on

"methods of teaching." A computer "cannot take account of the individual student in his personal uniqueness," Dr. Moore pointed out. "But then neither can a prospective teacher be taught a 'method' of dealing with unique individuals."

Dr. Moore emphasized that all schools of education are "in a position 'to stop encumbering the prospective teacher with the idea that he has some task other than that of becoming somebody. What we can do is to stop clogging his spirit and wasting his time with the idea that he either should or could master certain methods or techniques."

"What we can do is to stop ruining his natural human perceptiveness and sapping his human courage by luring him into the conception that if only he learns the proper methods of teaching, he will never have to risk himself in his classroom, but can, by using these methods control and direct his students," Dr. Moore said.

Students Join Peace Corps UVM Grads Work In India

John Deluca of Baldwin, N.Y., Barbara Handy of Durham, N.H., and Frank Foerster of North Bergen, N.J., recently completed twelve weeks of training for the Peace Corps. Mr. Deluca and Miss Handy were trained at The Experiment in International Living, Putney, Vermont. Mr. Foerster was trained at Ohio University.

The volunteers, who departed for India on Dec. 27, will assist Indian health and nutrition workers in encouraging the use of local primary health centers by villagers. They will work in rural public health and nutrition centers in central and southern parts of the country. This is the first Peace Corps work of its kind in India, and the first time an entire project has been devoted to health and nutrition.

With the arrival of this group nearly 700 Peace Corps Volunteers will be at work in India in poultry, agricultural extension, urban community development, youth work, vehicle maintenance, consumers' co-operatives, the teaching of English, mathematics, and science, and health and nutrition work.

The departing Volunteers join the 10,000 other Peace Corps Volunteers now working in 46 nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Despite these numbers, many more Volunteers are needed. Persons interested in starting a two-year Peace Corps assignment this winter should complete and submit a Peace Corps application as soon as possible and take the Peace Corps placement test, which is given throughout the country the second Saturday of each month.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS TO BE ADMITTED

Burlington, Vt. - (I.P.) - The University of Vermont has developed an admissions program to serve U.S. students from overseas.

"As one born in an American missionary home in Korea and who has served in different parts of the world in a number of capacities," Dr. McCune said the Vermont program was developed "in recognition of the fact that American parents overseas face serious problems in providing for a U.S. college education for their children."

Dr. McCune said the University will "take special care in reviewing entrance qualifications of overseas applicants, some of whom have had to study in a variety of schools. For those students who are admitted, special orientation will be provided."

The University will also seek to find scholarship funds to assist students whose resources may not otherwise permit them to accept admission at Vermont. The University's ponresident tuition of $1500 is comparable to tuition charged by New England's private institutions.

Area Studies Lectures Offered

By Mardi Crane

If someone were to state that UVM is a wonderfully exciting university, 75% of the student would say that the speaker was out of his mind, and the other 25% are probably avid skiers or are in love. Yet there are things which go on every day, which would bring most of the students into much greater agreement with me if only they were not so sadly ignorant of where to find the spice.

I could start by mentioning some of the more unusual courses which are offered, new speakers who visit us, student activities, or even the wide variety of sports which are offered. Unusual personalities are not very hard to find even among the student body itself, not to mention the faculty. In the future our readers may be interested in a series of articles which is to follow. It will be devoted to the unusual at UVM.

The Center for Area Studies has inaugurated a series of seminars and public lectures. Topic for the programs this semester is "Comparative Education."

The Center for Area Studies consists of programs of Latin American Studies, Russian and East European Studies, Canadian Studies, and East Asian Studies. John Weiger, romance languages; Lubowir Dellin, economics; Edward Miles, geography; and Som Ghei, psychology, are the respective chairmen of the programs for 1965-66. Lyman Gould, political science, is over-all chairman of the Center.

The Center is a continuation of the interest in non-Western areas that was developed by the Program of Non-Western Studies under a five-year Ford Foundation Grant from 1959-1964.

Purposes of the Center are to encourage and coordinate interdisciplinary study of selected foreign areas and to promote research and interest in foreign areas among all the colleges of the university. Staff and course offerings in the Center's programs are included under the various academic departments. Undergraduates may concentrate in one of the four areas for the A.B. degree.

The seminar-lecture series is being supported by the Florence Davis Dean Fund.

For the first time in the history of the program, the Experiment in International Living and the Vermont Council on World Affairs have brought a group of "experiment" students to the UVM campus during the regular academic year. Nine young men and one young woman arrived at UVM on Thursday evening. The men will be guests of various fraternities until they depart on the 16th. The young woman will be staying at Simpson.

The ten students traveled to Burlington by bus from Miami via Washington and New York. They flew to Miami from Santiago. After leaving us they will travel to Bloomington, Illinois, stopping for a day at Niagara Falls. Following a month's home-stay in Bloomington, they will return to Miami by bus, then fly back to Santiago.

Our visitors are student leaders from three Chilean universities. They are majoring in law, agriculture, education, sociology, and history at the Universidades de Concepcion, Valparaisa, and Santiago. Although they speak Spanish in Chile, their mastery of English ranges from fair to good.

Their interests are mainly the same as those of their counterparts at UVM. In a letter from the leader of the group, it was mentioned that most of the students are interested in skiing. Though none are experts, they all wish to try their hand, or their feet, at it during their visit.

TO BECOME PART OF UVM STUDENT BODY

The boys will be guests of Delta Psi, SAE, Acacia, Sigma Phi, AGR, Theta Chi, AE Phi and Phi Mu Delta. While they are here they will audit classes of their choice. The university has presented each student with a guest IV, consequently they will have the privileges of any UVM student. The Lane Series Office has presented the group with complimentary tickets; they will be able to attend two Lane presentations, those on the 8th and 14th of Feb.

Meet a group of young Boston bankers. They are executives of The First National Bank of Boston, New England's oldest and largest. They're men on the move . . . sharp, talented, aggressive and making a good place in the business.

A short time ago they were doing some soul-searching, too. "Graduation, and then what?"

Quite honestly many of these men never thought about banking. One of them majored in Spanish -- he's now a credit man with our South American operation where the language comes in handy. Another, studied Geography and Geology; today, he's an Operations Officer in our highly specialized electronic data processing complex.

At the FIRST, we look for diverse educational backgrounds. Specifically, we want men of flexibility who can meet the demands of unusual and challenging situations.

If you are looking toward a career in a growth business, take a good hard look at The FIRST. We have the opportunities . . . we'll even make a position for the right man.

One of our Personnel Officers will be on campus February 8th and 9th. We suggest that you contact your Placement Bureau to set up an interview. If you'd like to get a headstart, write to our Mr. Emory Mower, The First National Bank of Boston, 67 Milk Street, Boston. He'll be glad to send you a special booklet about working at The FIRST.

Students Are Discontent

Where Do Our Colleges Fail?

By Bob Carl

A professor from England, teaching in the U.S. for the first time last year, was astounded when he faced his first class of American students and found that several were missing. A pretty coed finally solved the mystery by telling him, "It's Friday and a lot of kids like to go home, so they skip class."

The following Monday, again facing his abbreviated class, the professor expressed surprise. However, when someone told him, "A lot of kids aren't back from their long weekend yet," he accepted this.

On his way to the Wednesday class, the professor thought to himself, "At last I'll get to see all my students."

However, when he stared out at the empty seats, he asked, "Where's everyone today; where is everybody?" and a cooperative student in a back seat happily answered, "Today's Wednesday, the middle of the week. You don't expect us to study all the time, do you?"

So, the professor still wonders what is wrong with higher education in America.

And this, the $64 question, remains unanswered — despite obvious signs of student dissatisfaction with their education.

Students come to the campuses of America's colleges and universities seeking excitement and stimulation in their new-found academic environment. And, almost without fail, and even in the outstanding centers of learning in the country, they find disappointment and disillusionment.

This is not to say that all students, or even most of them, are interested in learning for its own sake; however, those students who are find themselves frustrated by the system which dominates American higher education.

As one Berkeley student has written, "...there is a deep and bitter resentment among many students about their life at the university. It is a resentment that starts from the contradiction between the public image and reputation of the university and their actual day-to-day experiences there as students." (From the book "Revolution at Berkeley").

In other words, as freshmen and sophomores — and even during their last two years of high school — students are forced to attend classes that often are devoid of intellectual stimulation, and taught by dull professors with out-moded ideas and techniques.

A more extreme frustration occurs when a naive student signs up for an introductory course in almost any field. For almost certainly that course will be taught in a large lecture hall, seating somewhere between 100 and 400 students, by the poorest teacher in the department. This is true because the better, more experienced professors don't want to waste their time with undergraduates.

Today's students have no say in their course offerings or curricula in general. They are introduced to their future alma mater with an out-dated orientation program; and thereafter, they are told what courses to take, regardless of their likes or dislikes, and are forced to accept what the institution deems advisable.

Students learn to get through their education by mastering a four-year system of lectures, reading lists and examinations but they have little to do with genuine learning.

However, the outlook is not all black for higher education in America, because some students manage to beat the system and get a reasonable education in spite of their institutions' of learning.

And as the professor from England said, "American students may someday seek an education for its own sake. Students in Great Britain have tried it and found it to their liking. And they go to classes too."

(Carl is a student at the University of Oregon and a member of the editorial board of the Oregon Daily Emerald.)

Question for the week - Do you think there has been a change in sexual attitudes and morality in the last twenty years?

Judi Weintraub

Judi Weintraub, '68, Forest Hills, N.Y. "No, I don't believe there has. People are just more open about what they say. Things haven't changed since Adam. In my mother's day if someone opened their mouth about sex, they would get slapped. I think it's better this way."

Jim Harrison

James Harrison, '69, Woodmere, N.Y. "I don't believe that attitudes toward morality have changed in the last twenty years, except for the fact that kids are continually exposed to sex through television and the movies. This exposure has brought about a desire to find out what it's really all about at an earlier age than before."

Milt Goggans, '66, Hoboken, N.J. "Yes, I believe there has been a change in the last twenty years. My parents are behind the times, just as most parents are. They don't believe in letting their children relieve their inhibitions by outward signs of love. It has changed because people have more money and leisure time to be concerned with sex."

Tom Adler

Tom Adler, '69, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. "Not really. It's just that the emphasis on sex has been more emphasized in the last twenty years than it was years ago, because of the growing population. Younger people are maturing faster these days because they are more exposed to social problems and the realities of life. Sex is sex, and in actuality the problem is the same as it was years ago."

USNSA SEEKS QUALIFIED APPLICANTS FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENT RELATIONS SEMINAR

The United States National Student Association is seeking qualified applicants for its Fourteenth Annual International Student Relations Seminar (ISRS), an expense-paid summer training program to be held in Washington from June 13 to September 2. The Seminar is designed to provide a selected group of American students with an understanding of the politics of student groups in over one hundred countries and to prepare participants for positions of active leadership in American and international student organizations.

Particular emphasis will be given to the problems of "third area" nations. The split in the Angolan nationalist movement, competing ideologies of Pan Africanism and the posture and influence of Popular Christian Democratic and Marxist-Leninist movements in Latin America are some of the problems the Seminar will study.

Guest speakers from the Washington area will provide background for Seminar discussions. Speakers at previous International Student Relations Seminars have included Douglass Cater, Special Assistant to President Johnson and State Department officials, Averell Harriman and G. Mennen Williams.

Applicants need not have been NSA officials but should have participated in extra-curricular activities and have shown an interest in international affairs.

Application forms and further information may be obtained from:

Charles A. Goldmark
International Student Relations Seminar
U.S. National Student Association
2115 S. Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20008

Applications should be filed by February, 1966.

USNSA is a federation of student governments in 300 colleges and universities enrolling more than one million students.

Univ. Wives Initiate Club

There is a new organization on campus, The University Wives, designed for the purpose of providing interest groups for the wives of married students.

Both graduate and undergraduate wives are eligible to participate.

Under the sponsorship of Mrs. Shannon McCune, the group has had several successful meetings in which they formulated four interest groups: Needles and Pins; Cards, Sports, and Gourmet. Each group has a respective chairman: Pam Senning, Beth Van Atten, Jean Davis, and Kathy LeClair. The group also offers a baby-sitting service, enabling the wives to earn money, even though some do it for free.

On the first Tuesday of every month, the entire organization meets at 7:30 p.m. in Marsh Lounge in Billings Student Center where they listen to a speaker and meet other married women on campus. Anyone interested in participating should contact Mrs. Carl Ballentine, who was recently elected president of the organization.

Fight Mars Third Period Play

From the
Cat's Mouth

In a recent interview with Vermont's basketball coach Art Loche he expressed extreme disappointment in the amount of enthusiasm displayed by UVM fans at the home games. Coming from a school like NYU Loche is accustomed to having tremendous backings at all his team's games and even depends on this support as a psychological factor.

All good basketball teams expect this enthusiasm at their games. For this reason the University of Florida's basketball coach Norman Sloan says, "The home court is one of the most important factors in the game today."

He adds, "You're out there and everyone in the place is pulling for the home team. . . I think some court enthusiasm is great. . . it definitely does have a big effect on the opposing player."

Even other Yankee Conference schools give their teams the support they deserve. UVM player Ken Spalter has remarked about the added disadvantages of playing UConn and URI on the road. The going has been so rough away from home that senior co-captain Milt Goggans commented that this year's win at New Hampshire was his first Yankee Conference victory away from home in his three-year career at UVM.

Coach Loche would like very much to rid the team of a losing attitude which they may have acquired from having a losing season last year. The support of the fans is instrumental in changing the attitude of a team. At the University of Kentucky the enthusiasm is so great that the team has built a tradition which says "they never lose at home - and they very rarely do. (They are undefeated this year.)"

Another good example of fan support helping a team on to victory is UVM's amazing upset of St. Michael's last season. Although the Cats were heavy underdogs in the game it was the inspiration drawn from the spirit shown by the fans which drove the players on to victory. In that game the fans had as much a part in the victory as the players. If this same inspiration could be provided at every home game, Vermont could start building a winning tradition against teams in its own class just as the University of Kentucky has done at Lexington.

Where do we start? Coach Loche suggests beginning with those responsible for instigating the spirit, the cheerleaders. Also, what is the story on the Pep Committee which does such a good job during the football season. Such an organization can arrange to have the band play at the games and have Charlie Catamount attend. What about the old Kappa Sig drum? These are the people who can bring life back to the basketball games.

The team has won five of nine games so far this year, and two of the defeats were at home by a total of three points. These two games could conceivably have been won if the crowd has given a little more support and done their part. The coach has certainly done his share. He has taken a team about which experts said before the season, "Anything close to .500 and Loche should be named Coach of the Year," and formed them into an exciting and winning unit. Now is the time for the students to come through.

Michaelmen Here Thursday

St. Michael's College, Vermont's arch-rivals, will be at the Patrick Gym this coming Thursday night to renew their annual series. This game was originally scheduled to be played at Memorial Auditorium, but the site has been switched to the UVM gym.

In the long rivalry UVM has come out on top 51 times while St. Mike's has won 35 games. Last season the Catamounts pulled one of the major upsets of the year in defeating the Knights, 75-72. The Michaelmen came back in the following game to roll up a 94-75 victory at the Auditorium.

Last season, however, was the year of the All-America for St.

Michael's in the person of Richie Tarrant. This slim 6-5 operator led the Knights to the NCAA Eastern Regional championship last season, but he has now graduated. Also gone from last year's squad are 6-4 deadeye Ed Kryger, now the Michaelmen freshman team coach, and guards Brian Quinn and Bill Cummins.

This year's team features the scoring of 6-4 junior Dick Falkenhush who has been splitting the nets for about 22 points a game. Also in the starting lineup for the Knights are senior Jim Doolley (6-5), juniors Bobby Kryger (6-1) and Bruce Stryhas (6-0), and sophomore Bob Joyce (6-0). Capable reserves are sophomores Dave Gleason, Ralph Coleman, and Dick Nayin.

Scrambling for loose puck are Boston State's Bob Russell, left, and Vermont's sophomore Jack Semler. Action took place in second period of Monday night's game at Gutterson Field House Rink. Vermont lost their third straight, 8-3.

Undefeated Boston State College broke a scoreless tie and exploded for five goals in three minutes and 28 seconds in the second period at the Gutterson Field House Tuesday and coasted to an 8-3 victory over the University of Vermont.

The two clubs played on even terms for about half the game when Bob Donovan broke the ice for the visitors with an unassisted goal at 13:49 of the second period.

After the initial goal the roof fell in for the Catamounts. Wayne Starkey scored twice and Ed Sullivan and Mike Morrissey once each to up the count to 5-0.

The final three goals came in the third period as the clubs again played on even terms. The first five goals came so fast that Catamount fans just stood in amazement as three of the goals were scored within a 19 second span.

The three Vermont goals in the final period were by George Cook, Henry Uilein, both unassisted, and Claude LaPearl of Barre, added another with an assist from Bob Schindler.

Vermont goalie Bob Sausville came up with 21 saves while for the now 14-0 Warriors Bill Berglund had 24.

One of the highlights of the evening for the large crowd was a flight which broke out on the ice in the third period with 13 minutes remaining to be played.

UVM's Lee Roy, a surprise starter since he was in the infirmary over the weekend, and Frank Olson of Boston State emptied its bench.

Catamount coach Jim Cross did a commendable job in keeping his boys on the bench. Both Roy and Olson were ejected from the game.

All-American candidate Bob Quinn of Boston State, who had scored 24 goals and had 29 assists in 13 games, was held scoreless by the Catamounts.

The loss leaves the Catamounts at 5-6 on the season. The next contest is scheduled for Thursday at Salem State.

Cagers Face Busy Week

By Bob Bloomenthal

The University of Vermont hoopsters will have a good chance to improve their 5-4 record this week with three games in the next six days. The Cats will be trying to bounce back after absorbing a big loss at the University of Connecticut last weekend.

The Huskies easily overpowered UVM, 96-64. It was simply a story of UConn having too many horses for the small Catamounts as they opened up a 51-22 halftime lead. Kenny Spalter was the high man for Vermont with 14, including 10 foul shots in as many attempts, while soph Bill Librera followed with 10 points. Alden Hale led the reserves, who had a chance to see a lot of action, with 8 markers.

AT BRANDEIS AND UMASS THIS WEEKEND

This weekend the Cats take a trip to Massachusetts to face Brandeis Friday afternoon (4:00 P.M.) and the University of Massachusetts Saturday night. Coach Art Loche would like nothing better than to make a sweep of these two games, but UVM will be definite underdogs against UMass.

Brandeis should not be too much of a problem as the Judges stand 1-9 on the year. Before gaining an 84-76 win over Bates earlier this season, the team was nursing a 23-game losing streak dating back to 1963. This is the team which anxiously awaits the retirement of the Boston Celtic backcourt star K.C. Jones as he has been signed as their coach for next season.

Last season UVM squeaked out a 68-65 win over the Judges. The leading Brandeis scorer is 5-11 guard Barry Zimmerman with a 22.0 average. Their roster also contains freshmen since the male enrollment at Brandeis makes them eligible for the "freshman waiver rule" of the NCAA which allows freshmen to compete in varsity sports. Two frosh who have made their presence known are 5-10 Steve Katzman (15.8) and 6-9 Tom Haggerty (10.3), the tallest player in the history of the school.

In the UMass game the following night the Cats will be up against a squad which has vastly improved since edging UVM by one point at the Patrick Gym last month. The Redmen stood 7-7 on the year before Wednesday's game with UConn and 2-1 in Conference play. Some of the schools Mass has faced include Virginia Tech, Alabama, Syracuse, Rutgers, Fairfield, and nationally-ranked Providence. These teams have accounted for six of their seven defeats.

REDMEN SHOOTING RED-HOT

As a team UMass has been hitting 47% of their shots with three starters shooting better than 50%. All-Yankee Conference guard Clarence Hill leads the team with a 25.3 average. Two others in double figures include 6-3 junior Jim Babyak (19.5) and 6-5 sophomore center Billy Tindall (16.5). In the previous meeting of UVM and Massachusetts this season Hill had 25 and Babyak 19. Tindall had only eight points, but in five of his last seven outings he has scored over 20 points. He is also the top rebounder for the Redmen averaging 10.9 bounds per game.

UNH HERE THIS TUESDAY

Next Tuesday will be the next home appearance for the defense-minded Cats with the University of New Hampshire coming to town. UVM already owns an 80-66 victory over the Wildcats who stand 0-5 in the conference and 2-13 overall.

The players to watch for UNH are 6-1 Tom Horne (15.4) and 6-0 Denny Hodgdon (11.8). 6-5 Steve Seay, 5-11 Orrin Clark, and 5-10 Joe Drinon are all hitting for about 9 a game with Seay the team's leading rebounder.

The Wildcats cannot be taken for granted as they lost to Maine by but four points a couple weeks ago. Mr. Loche would greatly appreciate a good turnout for the game as he realizes that the team needs the crowd's support as much as his coaching.

New Building Creates New Vision

With bids due back within a week, and construction slated to begin this April, the Life Science Building, new home of the Botany and Zoology Departments, is quickly becoming a reality.

The addition of this building to UVM means that the departments of the life sciences, including agriculture and medicine, will all be concentrated in the eastern section of the main campus. This physical proximity of people with similar interests, will result in a greater "intellectual give and take."

The Life Science Building will benefit undergraduates, graduate students and faculty members. The undergraduate program in botany and zoology will be expanded, in fact consideration is being given to a biology major. Students will be given the opportunity to observe, and become involved in research work in labs near their lecture halls.

Researchers, both graduate students and faculty members, will have more room to carry out their work. Their investigations will be aided by such pieces of equipment as electron microscopes, which will be installed in special research rooms. There will also be several "common labs" including a chemistry, radioisotope, and photographic ones which will be used jointly by the two departments.

The Life Science Building will be situated between Bailey Library and Hills Science Hall. Between Hills and the Life Science Building, will be an auditorium to be used as a lecture room for the large introductory courses, and may be used by groups not connected with the life science departments. The three buildings will be connected by two "bridges" similar to the one between Old Mill and Lafayette.

Two New Trophies Initiated Trophy Honors Kake Walker

A trophy honoring a former Kake Walker who gave his life in Vietnam has been added to the list of awards for the nation's oldest winter carnival.

The trophy is being presented in memory of Thomas F. Eldridge, a 1962 Vermont graduate, who was a Kake Walker for three years for Kappa Sigma Fraternity.

The award will be inscribed: "Thomas F. Eldridge Award, in memory of Thomas F. Eldridge, Kake Walker for Kappa Sigma, 1960-62. Presented each year to the team of walkers who displays the most spirit, determination and effort."

The Eldridge Trophy will be presented on Saturday night each year. The winner will be decided by the vote of the participating Kake Walkers.

Eldridge was a Marine pilot in Vietnam. He was shot down in December 1965, by hostile enemy fire. Eldridge had flown over 100 combat missions in Vietnam.

He was born in Plattsburgh, N.Y., Nov. 28, 1940. He lived in Rouses Point, N.Y. and graduated from Champlain Central High School as valedictorian of his class.

While at UVM, Eldridge was a member of the varsity football team and an officer of Kappa Sigma as well as a Kake Walker.

Eldridge placed in the walking three times, including a first place win in his last appearance in 1962.

FOUND - ONE HARPSICHORD

But Who Took It?

(Credit Burlington Free Press)

The University of Vermont harpsichord, valued at $1,000, was sold to a Williston family for $50.

The missing instrument was purchased as a Christmas surprise for the family's children.

When the family read in Tuesday's Free Press of the harpsichord's disappearance, they became suspicious and notified the university of their purchase.

The instrument weighed 85 pounds. It had been stored in the music building annex.

During the winter Christmas vacation, a faculty member inquired about it. Officials thought it may have been lent. But an intensive search failed to reveal the instrument.

Officials realized it must have been taken improperly and made public the disappearance -- which resulted in discovery of the instrument.

Tuesday the harpsichord was returned to the music department, in good condition, said Prof. Frank Lidal of the music faculty.

However, the chamber music ensemble in the University of Vermont's Lane Series Tuesday night, brought along a harpsichord to use, instead of depending on a borrowed one here.

There were two offers of harpsichords, but the university preferred not to do this because of the risk to the instrument, and the insurance costs, said Lidal.

Trophy Honors

Doc Marston

There will be a new Kake Walk Trophy this year. The Marston Trophy, so named to commemorate the late Dr. Marston, who died at the end of last year.

Dr. Marston was the University Marshall, a member of the English department and was also advisor to the Kake Walk Committee for nine years. It was mainly owing to his abundant personality and enthusiasm that "walkin' fo' de Kake" grew in importance from being a small skit to becoming the large show it is now. Under his inspiration the show was moved from Burlington Memorial auditorium to

City Rejects UVM Plan To Widen South Prospect Street

"Free Press"

Stirs Opposition

An improvement proposal to widen South Prospect St. is a UVM project encompassed in a long-range plan for campus development. A proposed master plan hangs on the wall of Dean Rowell's office and other places.

This plan calls for the elimination of the University Place, the road in front of Billings. This street is now leased to the city by UVM, but the school plans to resume possession and block off traffic in the middle of the street. Thus, there would remain a passageway into such areas as the Old Mill or the Billings Center, but in the middle there would be a safe walkway from the Waterman side of campus to the freshman dorms.

This walkway, which may be as much as a couple of hundred feet long would be an extension of the campus green. There would be turn-around areas in the blocked-off middle of the present street, and there will be parking along the sides.

To provide for the increased traffic, South Prospect St. would be widened. The city presently owns a 50 foot right-of-way along this street (now about half that distance wide), and this area lies in the campus green. UVM proposes to make this, with the present street, into a four-lane road.

The school would be willing to let the city have a strip of land from the Waterman side of the street, if a long safety island was built in the middle of the street for the protection of students. The island would be at least six or eight feet wide so that there would be no danger to pedestrians.

Dean Rowell stated that studies have proved such an arrangement safer than a regular, two-lane road. Pedestrians need only look in one direction to cross either of the two-lane traffic aisles. In the middle they could wait safely until cars had stopped coming from the other direction.

A considerable strip of grass would be replaced by pavement, and about ten trees on each side of the street would be cut.

There is a program planned to plant another line of trees behind the present elms on the green.

The proposed future axis of the campus is a line along the road in front of Chittenden, Buckham, and Wills, carried through to Patrick Gymnasium. The "mall," presently being created between the library and the museum, will soon be planted with trees and will be in effect a second campus green.

Students' use of Waterman may decrease with the new school store, the new life-science building, and additional classrooms around the mall area. Then students dwelling on Redstone campus and in new dorms will find it shorter to reach campus by the path opposite the Dental Hygiene building.

This past Monday, Burlington aldermen chose not to include on the March 1 ballot a tax item to support the South Prospect St. construction demands of about $47,000.

the Patrick Gymnasium, thereby doubling the numbers of the audience.

The big trophy will be presented after the Saturday night show and the fraternity winning that night will keep it for the first half of the year. The winners of the walking on Friday night will keep it for the second half of the year.

Around the base of the trophy are fifteen silver inlaid shields which will bear the names of the winning fraternities. After fifteen years the trophy will be retired to a university showcase and no fraternity, no matter how many times it has won the trophy, may then keep it.

3400 Years Old?

Ancient Bacteria
Living At UVM

What may be the oldest living organism known to science is undergoing study at UVM. An ancient, living bacterial culture, which may be 34 centuries old, has been received in the department of agricultural biochemistry of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics for biological comparison with other bacteria.

According to Dr. Donald B. Johnstone, professor of microbiology, the culture was received from the United Arab Republic and has a bizarre history. Dr. Johnstone said that these living bacteria, called Azotobacter, were isolated from the center of a clay brick taken from the center of the wall of the Great Temple of Amun in Luxor.

Since UVM has been involved with Azotobacter's taxonomy and biochemistry, it has become a repository for new strains from all over the world.

Scientists both in the University of Cairo and at UVM believe that if the bacteria have remained alive in the brick since it was made, some seven to 15 centuries before the birth of Christ, it is due to the unique property of these bacteria to form cysts which enable the cells to isolate themselves from extremely dry conditions.

The Temple of Amun, believed to be the largest columnar structure ever built, took many different pharaohs over 2000 years to construct. The brick from which the bacteria were isolated was removed from the center of the Temonos or wall of the temple about ten feet from the base.

The temple wall dates from the 26-30th Dynasty (7-14th century B.C.). If these bacteria have remained alive for this period, it represents the longest period of longevity of bacterial life known to science.

SA Plans
Leadership Conference

The Student Association, with the help of the Dean of Men's and Dean of Women's offices, has established a committee for a conference on leadership. This conference is being planned with the hope that much undiscovered or unused leadership potential, particularly in the freshman and sophomore classes, can be put to better use in student organizations on campus.

The programming committee, consisting of Dean Harris, Rich Kabat, Sue Gibbons, and Helen Keith, is contacting speakers and setting up the agenda for the conference, which will be held later this semester. Mr. Bain, Director of student activities, and Lee Fardelman are looking for a suitable off campus location to hold the conference. The publicity committee, Fred Brown, Gary Glynn, and Phil Heath, and the budget committee, Mike Sherman, Dean Patzer, and Jim Fontanella, are handling public relations and finances.

This year members of the conference will probably be limited to W.S.G.A., L.F.C., S.A., Pan-Hel, Men's Residence Hall Council, and Men's Residence Hall Assembly. These organizations will be contacted in the near future and interested students should contact any committee member.

Public Relations

Man Made Editor

Curtis B. Norris, science writer-editor at UVM, has resigned the post to assume the editorship of the Warham, Mass., Currier, effective Feb. 7.

A graduate of Middlebury College, Norris brings to his new post a writing background which includes service as a technical writer in the aircraft industry and as a free lance writer whose works have appeared in the Boston Globe, Boston Herald, Yankee Magazine, and other publications.

He also served as editor of a Whitman, Mass., weekly newspaper before joining the UVM Public Relations Office staff last March.

UVM Players Observe Yeats Centennial

As part of the W.B. Yeats centenary tribute, which is being sponsored this week by the Frederick C. Marston, Jr. Graduate English Club, the University Players will present three of the post-playwrights' dramatic works at the Arena Theater Feb. 11 and 12 at 8:30 p.m.

"Calvary," the first of the three to be presented, is directed by Ernest Cabrera. The cast includes: Robert W. Caswell as Christ, M. David Storti as Judas, Forrest Bowman as Lazarus, and Elizabeth Ingoldsby, Jacklyn Brooks and Theresa Govin as the three musicians forming the Trinity. M. David Storti is directing "Purgatory," the second presentation. Fred Finkelstein plays the Boy in this production, while William Deiss assumes the part of the Old Man. "The Resurrection," also directed by Ernest Cabrera, will round out the evening of Yeats as the dramatist. Robert Caswell will again depict the part of Christ, Forrest Bowman will play the Hebrew, and Jeff Kent has the role of the Syrian. The three musicians will be the same as in "Calvary."

Mr. Caswell, professor of English, has written the following comments on the plays.

Yeats believed that soon after death a man began a process that he called "dreaming back." Essentially, a man relives those moments of intense and passionate experience that have given pain to one's self or to others. In "Calvary" (1920), the First Musician tells us that "Good Friday's come/The day whereon Christ dreams His passion through," Martha and the three

Three Plays
Will Be Presented

Marys give themselves up entirely to the Christ's love; hence, they go with, and become a meaningful part of, the new cycle of history that begins with Christ. Lazarus and Judas both refuse to become mere objects of Christ's pity; they cling to their right to individuality, to their subjective value. As a result, they refuse to become a part of the new era in history. Yeats seems to admire their strength of choice but also to recognize the sterility or tragedy of that choice. The final attitude is that of the Roman Soldiers: they are indifferent to the values involved. They are timeservers, at home in any cycle of history.

"The Resurrection" (1931) like "Calvary," is a play of ideas centering on Yeats's belief stated in the opening and closing songs of the play. The action of the play is the speculation of The Hebrew and The Greek on the nature of Christ; to The Hebrew, he is a good man; to The Greek he is a phantom who has taken on the form of a man. For neither man is he a god. A third figure, The Syrian, whom The Greek sends to Christ's tomb, returns with the news that He has risen, and with the belief that Christ is a god. At the climax of the play, Christ appears on the scene with shocking effects on both The Hebrew and The Greek. All of the action happens while the festival of Dionysus, the mutilated god who was reborn, is being celebrated in the streets.

"Purgatory" (1939) also involves the belief in the dead "dreaming back"—moments of intense, passionate action. In the play, the moment is the wedding night of the Old Man's aristocratic mother. The mother conceives on this night and later dies in child birth. Later still, her husband, while drunk, sets the house on fire, and his son, the Old Man of the play, stabs him.

In an effort to free his mother from the pain of "dreaming back" the Old Man stabs his son, thinking he is ending the family "curse." As the play ends, the wedding-night scene begins again, and the Old Man realizes his failure.

The Yeats Centenary Tribute will conclude with a panel discussion, "Yeats as Poet and Playwright," to be held on Feb. 13 at 2:30 p.m. in the North Lounge at Billings.

Doctoral Traineeships Made Available

NSF Awards Grants

The Graduate College is the recipient of six new doctoral traineeships from the National Science Foundation, one of 193 U.S. graduate schools to be awarded one or more traineeships for the coming year.

Nationally, the new National Science Foundation awards are valued at more than $22,000,000 as part of an expanded program originally aimed at accelerating the output of graduate students with advanced degrees in engineering. The current awards will support more than 4100 full-time graduate students. Last year the program was expanded to include the mathematical and physical sciences; this year to include the biological and social sciences.

McCune Remarks On Teacher Frustration Challenges Of Teaching At The College Level

By Stephen Carlson

In the initial speech of the spring semester lecture series, UVM president, Shannon McCune, said that change and innovation are necessary in order to meet the problems of a modern university. With a rapid increase in the number of students, and a parallel increase in teacher shortage, Dr. McCune said that if present teaching methods are continued, the quality of education will decline.

Dr. McCune's topic was "Challenges of Teaching at the College Level." In defining terms, he noted that a now obsolete definition of "challenge" is "to bring a charge against." He said he was speaking mainly about a more positive type of challenge, i.e. "to arouse, stimulate, or excite." However, the old definition is appropriate in some cases.

Such a case is that of a frustrated and discouraged teacher. Dr. McCune said that these teachers fall into two categories. The first is typified by a person of middle age, "who has been a teacher for decades and is past the point of no return." He almost resents the return of students to the campus. He doesn't keep up with new developments in his field, and he "buries his lack of knowledge with a great amount of attention to insignificant details." He overemphasizes the importance of grades, and is overly interested in tenure, status, and salary. "In sum, he has lost his vision or pur-

The second type of frustrated teacher is a young person who has been teaching only a few years and has discovered that the job has not lived up to his expectations. He finds that "instead of being all leisure and sabbaticals," the position of a teacher includes "a lot of onerous duties."

Dr. McCune said there are three ways for a teacher to face his frustrations: through innovation, through new organization of subject material, and through taking a new look at the purposes of education.

Above and beyond the pressures on the individual teacher, Dr. McCune also noted that there are many pressures on the institution as a whole. He cited three such pressures: (1) the number of people of college age is rapidly increasing, (2) of the people, the percentage actually attending college is rapidly increasing, and (3) college teachers are in increasingly short supply. Because of these pressures, institutions have been forced to accept teachers with less education than previously required. When this happens, the students suffer. "We must, therefore, be realists and accept change."

He said, however, that the temptation to look for the easy ways out of the problem must be avoided. There has been much recent literature suggesting impractical reforms of present institutions. Using the type of logic found in such literature, Dr. McCune described a process which he termed "Shannonization." This process could theoretically reduce the college staff to three administrators and 3/4 of one faculty member.

However, he said that there are many legitimate methods which may be adopted to meet the teacher shortage. For example, he suggested that college teachers should encourage their students to enter the teaching profession. More women should be recruited for teaching. Retirement ages should be extended. Competent salary increases should be provided. Finally, the effectiveness of teachers should be improved.

In his concluding remarks, Dr. McCune said that "bad teaching," which he described as the failure to communicate the joy of learning, "is a major problem of the day. And no college, not even the most prestigious, has escaped it."

Shirley Verrett To Headline Lane Series

By Judy Beeber

A critic of the New York Herald Tribune made this comment about Shirley Verrett's recital at the Philharmonic Hall in 1963, "Any lingering doubts about Miss Verrett's place among the world's great singers may now be put to rest; her place is among the foremost of this or any other age. The recital was totally without flaws, simply a great event in the annals of American music-making." on Mon., Feb. 14, this fine mezzo soprano will entertain a Lane Series audience.

Shirley Verrett first achieved nation-wide acclaim in her role of Carmen in the Spoleto Festival. As Carmen, she was the first Negro to sing with the Austin Symphony since Marion Anderson's debut with the orchestra almost 25 years ago. In September 1963, Miss Verrett made international headlines and musical history when she sang "Carmen" at the Bolshoi Theater in Moscow.

This versatile performer is not only an opera singer, but is also one of the most sought after concert soloists and recitalists. She makes over a hundred appearances each year during her nation-wide concert tours. At

Shirley Verrett

Philharmonic Hall, Miss Verrett was chosen by Leonard Bernstein as one of the soloists for the opening concert, and she has since appeared with Bernstein as a soloist in the famous Young People's Concerts.

Miss Verrett has also appeared with the nation's leading orchestras. She has performed with the New York Philharmonic, the Montreal Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, and the Pittsburgh Symphony. In May 1965, she traveled to London for a highly successful debut with the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Lorin Maazel, singing in the Verdi Requiem.

UVM - VTC Merger Rejected

From the Burlington Free Press

MONTPELIER - The Board of Trustees of Vermont Technical College has rejected the suggestion that the agricultural technology program at VTC be transferred to UVM.

Gov. Hoff had urged VTC and UVM to study the possibility of merging the agricultural programs at UVM to avoid any possible duplication.

President McCune has supported the idea of merging the agriculture program at UVM.

EDITORIAL...

Releases, an editorial from The Burlington Free Press, and rumors produced a great deal of misunderstanding at UVM and throughout Burlington earlier this week. A plan to remove part of the existing green in order to expand South Prospect Street into a four-lane road caused the commotion.

The Free Press insinuated that the city was planning to destroy large portions of the green to construct this road in front of Waterman. This week's lead article should dispel fears and doubts about the proposed plans.

It always seems that when there is any information to be released concerning UVM, the students are the last to know. Consequently what they do hear is usually via the grapevine and usually false. This road widening project is a noteworthy example of such a situation.

Consider these two questions:

- 1.) Should not the entire UVM community know what is happening to its campus prior to or at least at the same time as the Burlington community?
- 2.) Is not the Vermont CYNIC, as official newspaper of UVM, ultimately the most efficient means for channeling communications to the student body?

If the answers to these two questions are "Yes," then something should and must be done about this situation. For, the administration should let the students know just as soon as possible what is going on.

The CYNIC, although admittedly far from being professional, has improved lately. Therefore, if for no other reason than this, we feel that it deserves to be given the status of the primary media for both student and administrative news.

Perhaps if the administration relied more on the CYNIC to relay information, then these fears and rumors would not spread so quickly around campus.

L.M.

P.S. At the tone, the time will be:

- a. 4:00 p.m. in Billings
- b. 4:05 p.m. in Lafayette
- c. 3:55 p.m. in Waterman

So, if you do not like the time in Billings, go to Waterman.

Letters To The Editor

President Has Too Much Power In Foreign Policy

To the Editor:

While the pros and cons of American involvement in South Vietnam are being discussed, the real tragedy becomes more apparent. Americans continue to lose control over the making of foreign policy and the public business at home continues to be sacrificed.

The Congress has recognized much too late the folly of its 1964 action which gave the President a broad mandate of power under which he has executed far-reaching decisions beyond the intent of the Congress and has committed this nation to a serious and debatable course in Southeast Asia.

HEARINGS INITIATED

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has initiated much too late congressional hearings on the Vietnam issue and has demanded in vain that the Congress share meaningfully in the formation of policy. Consultation by the President with members of Congress does not constitute such participation in decision-making. This procedure is what James Reston of the New York Times has correctly labeled "briefing sessions."

Nor does abdication of wide authority to the President qualify as participation either. To be sure, there have been similar occasions in American history when foreign policy has been made by unilateral executive action. This has been so particularly since the 1930s. But the past is no justification for the present and future, and we have paid the price many times for the earlier actions.

ESCALATION

Now we are told that we must prepare to pay the price for the present situation. Current estimates are for a six or seven year American military presence in South Vietnam involving a much increased troop commitment. Because we are so committed, it is argued, we must stay and see it through. And at each step the Johnson Administration swore it would not take, it has in fact taken because of the force of the logic which it accepts. Yet the policy has not achieved the stated political goals which are offered as the reason we are there in the first place. The peace, freedom, and security of South Vietnam have not been attained and our past performance in that bomb-gutted land simply does not square with our pronounced purposes.

Meanwhile, American blood, treasure, and historic principles are sacrificed to the questionable thesis that the United States can and should be the self-appointed guardian of the world. In the process, the important business of America at home has and will be neglected. Already the President has sacrificed domestic programs, regardless of his de-meaning assurance that we can have our guns and butter too. The Congress is preparing to shelve still more of the plans for the "Great Society."

TO CONCLUDE

All of this, it seems to me, is the result of an erroneous conception of American security in the world. A great American Secretary of State, John Quincy

Adams, probably offered the wisest foreign policy counsel to his fellow American citizens 145 years ago. America, he declared, "goes not abroad, in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own. She will commend the general cause by the countenance of her voice, and the benignant sympathy of her example. She well knows that by once enlisting under other banners than her own, were they even the banners of foreign independence, she would involve herself beyond the power of extrication. In all the wars of interest and intrigue, of individual avarice, envy, and ambition, which assume the colors and usurp the standards of freedom, the fundamental maxims of her policy would insensibly change from liberty to force.... She might become the dictatrix of the world. She would be no longer the ruler of her own spirit."

Sincerely,
Henry W. Berger

Closed Lounges Assailed

To the Editor:

Closing the lounges during exams is an old-fashioned method for making exams seem to be of longer duration and making them appear to be an even more tension-ridden time than they already are. Closing the lounge is "so important" in the eyes of some head residents and house presidents that they will not hear of conducting dorm study time in any other way — even to the point of not allowing the girls to petition for an open lounge.

When a girl walks through the main lobby of her dorm and sees the sign on the screen in front of the entrance to the lounge saying, "Sorry, no visitors in lounge. Exams - studying!", she is reminded that the dorm is made so much more depressing because the hostess is always admonishing her to be quiet. This means that the only place a person can talk without fear of rebuke is in the dining hall. By the sixth day, or perhaps even earlier in the exam period, there is so much tension that a girl is ready to go screaming down the hall just to be able to hear a normal voice.

LOUNGES LITTLE USED

For the first and most important four days of exam week, we conducted a poll of the girls studying in the main lounge. At no time were there more than 9 girls studying there. In the Recreation Room and in the T.V. Room, there were no more than two people in each room at any one time, and usually there was no one in either room. It seems to us a misconception that the lounge should be kept open for only 9 people out of 195. Also, each floor has a lounge and typing room. During our poll, few people, if any, were using either of these rooms during these first most "critical" days of studying.

Each girl has a desk and a bed of her own to study at or on. Maybe she thinks that she can not possibly concentrate with her roommate(s) studying in the same room with her. If this is so, how can she concentrate in the main lounge when seven or eight other girls are there? She should be able to settle herself down in her own room and concentrate by using some will power or else go to the floor lounge, T.V. Room or Rec. Room, if necessary.

In Mason, there is neither a T.V. Room, Recreation Room, or any Typing Rooms, yet that hall has an open lounge. Last year, on one of the floors, one fourth of the girls made Dean's List. We leave it to you to decide if they were mature enough to plan their time and study or just "lucky."

The Mason lounge is theoretically kept open because of the snack bar. If any lounge should be kept open for this purpose, it should be one on the Patterson-Wright-Christie side because there is more studying space, while Mason does not have any extra studying space such as a Rec. Room and T.V. Room.

According to the "no visitors" sign, Uncle Pete can not come to visit his niece in between plane flights because "male guests are not allowed in the lobby for more than five minutes." Uncle Pete's visit could mean a great deal to a girl seemingly surrounded by pressures and longing to see a face from home and to be able to talk to someone who is "family" and not involved with exams.

ARE WE CHILDREN?

If the purpose of closing the lounge is to convince a girl that she should study more and socialize less, then the move seems rather juvenile. After all, at this age, a girl should be mature enough to know how much she needs to study. And if she wants to take a half-hour relaxation break to just converse with her guy, where can they go if he doesn't have a car? Someone might answer "Go to the Den." If she is allowing herself only a short break, however, there is not time to do this.

We women students are considered mature enough to govern ourselves through the Women's Student Government Association, so why aren't we allowed to be adult enough to plan our own study time during exams?

This semester, let's see a little more demonstration for an open lounge during exams.

Sincerely,

Jane Stanton

Commentary on Bigness

John Gardner, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare former President, the Carnegie Corporation of New York

"The large institution has been much maligned of late. I have been surprised by the censorious tone with which some critics now refer to large institutions, almost as though in growing to their present size these institutions had deliberately chosen to do an evil thing. This is ridiculous. The critics may, if they wish, attack the American people for being so numerous and so fertile. They may, if they wish, attack the society generally for holding such a liberal view concerning who should go to college. But they should not attack institutions that are simply trying to accomplish a well-nigh impossible task the society has handed them. The institutions being scolded for largeness today are the ones that have been most responsible to the American eagerness to broaden educational opportunities. We should have the grace to live with the consequences of our choices."

Goodman Comments

What Is Our Moral

Status In Viet Nam?

Editor's Note: Paul Goodman, a native New Yorker, was born in 1911. After graduating from City College of New York, he received his Ph.D. in Humanities from the University of Chicago. Mr. Goodman has taught at the University of Chicago, New York University, Black Mountain College, and Sarah Lawrence, and has lectured widely at various colleges and universities throughout the country. He was the Knapp Distinguished Scholar in Urban Affairs at the University of Wisconsin in the spring of 1964. He is a Fellow of the New York and Cleveland Institutes for Gestalt Therapy and a member of the University Seminar on the City at Columbia. He is also a Fellow of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

With regard to the present propaganda in the Vietnam War, the Division of Humanities in the universities is again demonstrating its worthlessness and unconcern for reality. I have not heard a single critique and protest from any academic faculty, in Literature, History, or Philosophy, of the style and morality of the Vietnam coverage in the TV and other media. But if these faculties are not society's watchdog in these matters, to maintain the fundamentals of civilization, who else?

The jingo-propaganda has, rapidly descended into pornography, calling on ultimate passions and suffering, showing enduring, bleeding, and crippled men, to win trivial political consent from a comfortable audience. It does not help, either, that the scenes of suffering are interrupted by commercials for sexy soap, filtered cigarettes, and sleek automobiles. In my opinion, almost no human purposes are profound enough to justify showing the suffering, and sublimity, of war; only the compassion of Homer or Tolstoy can carry it. The appeal to patriotism is always suspect. But certainly the motives of the Vietnamese, whether right or wrong, for freedom, self-defense, or revenge, are more appropriate to such violent rhetoric than McNamara's calculated policy, whether correct or not. It is shameful for our propaganda to use such scenes and glibly say, "150 V.C. were exterminated," as if they were not human beings too. We shall not be forgiven it.

The war between the National Liberation Front and Saigon has been marked by horror, terror, and torture on both sides. Twenty years of war have brutalized the Vietnamese people. Nevertheless, from a moral point of view, this brutalization of the Vietnamese is a far lower grade of evil than the dehumanization of our high-flying airmen, detached, scheduled, raining down death and fire, and destroying the crops. These airmen are not much different from public hangmen. In the TV their gab is presented as cheerily technical, a beautiful American disposition but which, under the circumstances, does little credit to them as grown-up men. There is no way of making our technological onslaught look good; our media should have the decency to refrain from trying, and to restrict their coverage to stoical communiques and abstract statements of policy.

Historians recount with ridicule and disgust the similar propaganda of previous wars of other countries and of our own country. We ought to get wise to ourselves and say, This won't do. Think, after this is over -- if it is ever over and if the nuclear war doesn't break out -- how we will look at the pictures of our good-natured soldiers giving out candy to children. Meantime we burn the rice fields. And it has happened that the candy itself has been used as a bribe to show the way to father's hiding place.

Because of its peculiar nature, the Vietnam war has cast a bright light on the moral degradation of our country: our sentimentality and callousness; our self-righteous cant and irresponsibility to other people's needs and dignity; our abdication of democracy to authorities who are not even believed; our abdication of morals and politics to technological means; the complacency of our middle-class drafting the poor and sharing vicariously in their ordeal; the domineering wilfulness of great power that says "Submit or else." Unlike Professor Genovese, I would not "welcome" the victory of the NLF and Hanoi; every "victory" at present is a further set-back for world peace. But if we won this war, it would be an unmitigated moral disaster for ourselves and mankind.

Let me tell a melancholy anecdote. I was recently at a conference at Cornell, attended by a galaxy of distinguished theologians from all over the world. During a sharp exchange, suddenly Visser 't Hooft, the executive secretary of the World Council of Churches, turned on me and said, "Don't talk morals to me, you're an American." There was nothing for me to do but hang my head. That's nice, isn't it?

Second Lieutenants Commissioned

Eight ROTC cadets were commissioned second lieutenants in the U.S. Army Reserve in ceremonies held Wed., Feb. 2.

Colonel L. G. Robinson, professor of military science, conducted the ceremony.

The new lieutenants and their branch assignments are Chester B. Eaton, Jr., of Burlington and Rutland, transportation; William P. Mangan, Rutland, artillery; William H. Bosworth, Saxtons River, Infantry; Charles M. Dale, Wellesey, Mass., military police; Gregory N. Lamb, Lake Placid, N.Y., armor; David B. Mansfield, Seekonk, Mass., signal corps; Michael A. Thomas, Troy, N.Y., Corps of Engineer; Alan R. Warrington, Quincy, Mass., intelligence.

Eaton, Lamb and Thomas are Distinguished Military graduates. Lamb and Mangan are also graduates of the ROTC flight training program.

Go Beat Go Berkeley

(The following column was written by Thom Fraser in the "Daily Tar Heel," University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.)

University of California researchers at Berkeley recently told their professional colleagues that campus protest leaders are "the nucleus of future scholarship."

What is not known, however, is Berkeley's new graduate school admission policy. To get the inside dope, I interviewed Koob Egelwolk, who, although he graduated from the University of North Carolina with a 4.00 and an impressive record in student government, was turned down at Berkeley. He wanted to work for a Ph.D. in nuclear physics there.

PREREQUISITES REQUIRED

"You look extremely qualified," the admissions officer said, "yet you have a 4.00 average without ever having belonged to the Free Speech Movement."

"Yes, sir," answered Koob very respectfully.

"Well, I'm sorry," the official replied, "but we cannot accept you because you haven't engaged in creative protest. I'm sure you see our side of the story; the statistics show campus activists rank higher on the intellectual orientation scale."

"Maybe," Koob suggested, "I could develop myself intellectually once I got to Berkeley, perhaps stop a few troop trains or threaten to become a human torch."

"We're sorry," the admissions officer said, "but we must rely on past deeds, not just on ability. Judging from your record, I would say you lack the motivation one needs to succeed at Berkeley."

A CHANGE IN APPEARANCE...

Six months later, Koob revisited Berkeley after changing his identity. He wore dark glasses, a dirty T-shirt, and sandals. What's more, he did not hesitate before accepting the marijuana cigaret offered him by the interviewer.

Koob casually remarked that he had barely managed to graduate from UNC, that he had been suspended from school several times at the request of the governor, and that he used LSD (a hallucinatory drug).

"I'm very impressed," said the admissions officer. "Seems to me you're just the type of fellow who'll fit into our local Free Speech Movement, although the experts say the FSM people are not beatniks."

"Sure thing, old man," Koob replied. "Me - I go places. Just ordinary stuff - picketing the university administration, working to legalize pot, vandalizing military monuments."

Two weeks later he received a letter from Berkeley. "Dear Mr. Egelwolk," it read, "We have been checking and have found that you have never been disciplined by the school as you said you were, and furthermore, that Chief Beaumont has never arrested you for smoking marijuana. We find you to be an intellectual fraud."

Depressed, Koob ran out into the middle of Franklin St. and began screaming obscenities at the top of his lungs. When the authorities threw him into the paddy wagon, Koob said he was merely expressing his right of free speech.

Meanwhile, back at Berkeley, the admissions officers read about the incident. The next day they paid Koob's bail so he could immediately take advantage of a $6,000 scholarship offered by their physics department.

THE SCEPTIC

By L. Blumenfeld

Once upon a time there existed a renowned university which, horror of horrors, had no student union. "Alas," said the students, who wanted a place to spend their few free hours.

"Terrible," said the administration, who knew that the university could never be rated high without a student union. So plans went forth.

Now naturally no self respecting New England university (for New England was its location) could present its staid Board of Trustees with a plan for a student union - how unscholarly. So, obviously, plans went forward to build a new library. What else?

Finally the new library was completed, even if it was built backwards, and everyone was proud. They were all proud because they had a new library, but the administration was even more proud. Why? because now they had an empty building, and they could recommend that the Board of Trustees make it into a student union - so that it would not go to waste, of course.

Unfortunately for the administration, the Board of Trustees split into two factions. A mild war ensued, but in the absence of the Allen boys, it ended in a compromise. The two factions; the pro-study hall group and the pro-student union group finally came to an accord. The result was a study hall with a cafeteria and a television (only it was a radio then), and one on-campus telephone (actually the only one on campus besides those in the dorms).

The administration was not happy at the result, but they decided to make the best of a not too good thing. So they opened the newly renovated building, and they gave it top billings in all of their catalogues, and they called it a student center. Naturally, the overjoyed students rushed to the new recreation area. The result was not entirely satisfactory.

The atmosphere at the new student center was not quite right, in fact, it was quite the same as that of the old library. People talked in whispers, and once an unfortunate co-ed walked in, it was a Wednesday evening I believe, and turned on the television (this was just after the radio was replaced by modernization). An instant later the poor girl fled crying. Why? you ask. Well, upon turning on that instrument of higher learning, the television, she was greeted by a series of words which even modernization would not permit to be repeated hereon. These words, mostly of the four letter variety, came not from the little square box, but rather from those seated about it (studying of course). The results were far-flung. Never again was the television to be used during the week, except when programs of special interest were aired, such as: "Superman," "Batman," "Man from U.N.C.L.E.," or a "horror flick."

Yes, the student center was overrun by the ardent students of the Northern New England university (for that is precisely where it was) who desired nothing but studying. However, there was one great advantage to the student center, and that was its cafeteria. There noise prevailed. Voices remained at the normal level, and studying was unofficially prohibited. In fact, the cafeteria was almost perfect; only one thing was perplexing. The cafeteria, known by many as the Den of Iniquity, was closed during the dinner hours. This the students, or at least some of them, could never understand. Of course that really was not important. After all, who could possibly want to eat during the dinner hour?

Finally, after a number of years, the students of this university decided to make themselves heard. They wanted a real student union, complete with ping-pong tables, pool tables (which were previously to be found, for some unknown reason, in a completely different building), and tables for cards, checkers, and chess (those games available were to be signed out by students upon the presentation of their school I.D.'s) And a T.V. room too, strictly for television viewing. The students further advocated another hall to be opened up as a supervised study area.

Oddly enough, the students found support among the administrators, and soon plans were underway. The change was made and the top billings were now given to a student union, complete with noise, fun games, food at all times (even when desired), television, and a study area for the more diligent students (naturally sound proofed so they would not disturb those who were enjoying themselves). Thus the students of that great Northern New England university in the Green Mountains (for that, even more precisely, was where it was) lived happily ever after.

Now this, as any idiot (well at least almost any idiot) can perceive, was a fairy tale, or at least part of it was. Yet it need not be. I have provided the plot. It's up to you to provide the action. To paraphrase another writer of fairy tales (perhaps the greatest of them all) Students of UVM unite! You have nothing to lose but your silence.

$ Financial Aid Notices $

I. The Financial Aid Office, 125 Waterman Building, would like to inform all interested students about its summer job file. We are open from 8 a.m. to 12 and from one to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and will be happy to make the file available to any student looking for possible summer job openings.

The current file is regularly being expanded as new opportunities arrive and will be regularly up-dated. Several notices have been placed on bulletin boards around the campus listing some of the more recent job opportunities. A sample of such opportunities is:

Counselors: YMCA camps for boys -- Orange County,

New York

Counselors: Quannacut Camps for girls -- Pine Bush, New York

Summer Fellowship awards for medical students are available with Hartford Hospital, Hartford, Connecticut.

II. Financial Aid Applications for 1966-67

Deadline: April 1, 1966

If you did not receive a financial aid application in the mail, you may pick up forms at the Financial Aid Office, 125 Waterman.

UVM Orchestra Plans Concert

The University's Orchestra, under the direction of James Keene, Music, began its rehearsals in January in anticipation of its spring concert in April.

A program featuring works by Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Schubert, and Frescobaldi is in rehearsal.

The Orchestra comprises students from all divisions of the University, as well as interested and talented faculty-staff and community people.

In addition to giving its regular concert, the University Orchestra will join the Choir in a performance in March of the Mozart Requiem.

The Orchestra is particularly proud of the participation of faculty-staff and hopes that this group will be augmented this semester.

Faculty-staff may evince an interest in joining the Orchestra merely by advising the Music Department of this fact, at Extension 642 or 643, or by informing the conductor personally.

SANE Spokesman To Discuss Nuclear Policy

Donald F. Keys, executive director of the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, will speak at UVM on the "Responsibility of Dissent." He will examine the importance and anatomy of dissent from the administration position of Vietnam.

Donald Keys

Mr. Keys is a major spokesman for SANE. He has participated, as a SANE representative, in discussions of nuclear policy in the Geneva Conferences of 1958 and 1961. He attended the Paris Summit Conference in 1960 to organize an appeal by the moral leaders of the world. Mr. Keys also attended the international conference of organizations for peace and disarmament in 1963 at Oxford, England. He lectures regularly at universities and community organizations throughout the United States.

Keys is the editor of the book, God and the H-Bomb, a collection of essays by theologians on the response of religion to the challenge of the nuclear age. Also he is a contributor to the book, Social Science and Human Conflict.

Presently, he is an observer for SANE at the U.N. and at the U.S. mission to the U.N.

He will speak on Feb. 11 in the Marsh Room of Billings at 4:15 p.m.

Priest To Speak On "Love"

Rev. Walter Gouch, C.S.P., priest-psychologist director of Carroll House, Johns Hopkins University, will speak on "Love" at 7:30 p.m., Thurs., Feb. 17 in the Billings Marsh Room.

Fr. Gouch, who had attended Johns Hopkins as a medical student, is now Catholic Chaplain at the university. An authority on Freud and depth psychology, he received an ovation when he spoke here last year on the topic of "Freud and Religion."

In 1965, Father Gouch was the recipient of a large grant to investigate the relationship between morality and contraception. This study, which is being concluded at Johns Hopkins, has involved some of the nation's best-known medical and religious personnel.

Father Gouch's lecture will be the eighth in the current Augustine Series sponsored by the UVM Newman Center. It will be followed by a question period.

WAITSFIELD, VERMONT

To any kid who'd like to leave home: We'll pay half your fare.

The idea's not as crazy as it may seem.
Anytime we take a jet up, there are almost always leftover seats.

So it occurred to us that we might be able to fill a few of them, if we gave the young people a break on the fare, and a chance to see the country.

The American Youth Plan*

We call the idea the American Youth Plan, and what it means is this:

American will pay half the jet coach fare for anybody 12 through 21.

It's that simple.

All you have to do is prove your age (a birth certificate or any other legal document will do) and buy a $3 identification card.

We date and stamp the card, and this entitles you to a half-fare ticket at any American Airlines counter.

The only catch is that you might have to wait before you get aboard; the fare is on a standby basis.

"Standby" simply means that the passengers with reservations and the servicemen get on before you do.

Then the plane's yours.

The American Youth Plan is good year

round except for a few days before and after the Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas rushes.

If you can't think of any places you'd like to go offhand, you might see a travel agent for a few suggestions.

We can't add anything else.

Other than it's a marvelous opportunity to just take off.

Complete this coupon—include your $3.
(Do not send proof of age—it is not needed until you have your ID validated.)
In addition to your ID card, we'll also send you a free copy of AA's Go Go American with $50 worth of discount coupons.

Chileans Meet UVM

Administration Extends Welcome

Last Friday morning our ten visiting Chilean students were officially welcomed and introduced to the university at a talk given by President Shannon McCune, Dean Severance, and Dr. Betty Boller. On the same afternoon they were welcomed by UVM students at a tea held in the Marsh Lounge at Billings.

The purpose of the talk was to explain to the Chileans what an American university is. President McCune spoke about our university. Dean Severance gave a short outline of the history of UVM. Dr. Boller presented the students with a comparison of American and Chilean culture and education, showing which country was more advanced in each area. It is interesting to note that Chile is ahead of us in several areas. In education they are significantly ahead of the United States in their experimental and special schools.

The tea, as well as the talk, developed into an interesting interchange of ideas.

SA Enjoys Change Of Pace

Chileans meet UVM students . . .

By Margaret Crane

Most teas are dull, but with a group of fascinating Latins on board, the S.A. sponsored tea last Friday afternoon, was a bouncing success.

Each of the visitors from Chile who came to Vermont as part of the Experiment in International Living has a fresh and interesting point of view which he or she is ready to tell North American hosts. Never has a group been so impressive to those who have met them. If you have not had this opportunity to talk with these students, make an effort to do so. Not only do they have much to discuss, but most of the group is overflowing with charm and good looks. Indeed, they are delightful guests to have at UVM.

. . . And are soon engaged in lively discussions.

WORLD-WIDE Cynic

THE FREE UNIVERSITY: WANT ONE AT UVM?

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY (Philadelphia) - The leaders of the Free Speech Movement started at Berkeley, have led the war for the creation of the "free university." Since last winter seven have sprung up across the country and more are being started.

Schedule For Remainder of Visit

Fri., Feb. 11 -
7:30 p.m. International Club Dinner at St. Anselm's Chapel

Tues., Feb. 15 -
7:30 p.m. Faculty wives tea in the Faculty Lounge at Waterman. This is for all foreign students.

Wed., Feb. 16 -
Departure for Niagara Falls and Illinois.

"The free university classes usually consist of evening classes held weekly... in any place with four walls and a roof."

The largest enrollment in any one is 300 - Boulder University, Chicago, and New York.

Free universities offer courses that include Marxian economics, the theory and practice of radical social movements, experimental cinema and the search for authentic sexual experience, community organization, literature vs. LBJ, 20th century theology, hallucinogenic drugs, and black ghetto radicalism.

The faculty consists of members who do not have degree requirements, who have been fired from a college staff for their statements and/or actions, Leftists, and one time students.

The catalog for the Free University of New York (FUNY) states that: "Students have been systematically dehumanized, deemed incompetent to regulate their own lives, sexually, politically and academically. They are treated like raw material to be processed for the university's clients - business, government and the military bureaucracies."

The catalog goes on to say that college faculties "are under paid and constantly subject to investigation and purge. They have been relegated to the position of servant-intellectuals, required, for regular promotion, to propagate points of view in harmony with the military and industrial leadership."

FUNY's purpose is to "develop the concepts necessary to comprehend the events of the century and the meaning of one's life within it."

COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS

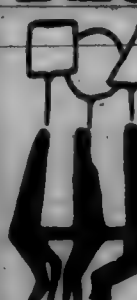

HAMILTON COLLEGE, Clinton, New York - Students rioted because the food is appalling. The number of participants was small, but they caused $200 worth of damage. A week before the riot occurred the college officials had intensified their efforts to improve the food service.

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY, Boston - Northeastern co-eds, who have reached the age of 21, will have the choice of living in a dorm or an apartment. This new rule will be advantageous to both students and administration. The university will have more campus space, and students will have a chance to demonstrate their independence and adulthood.

LAW SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIPS OFFERED

The Political Science Department has been assigned to administer two full tuition scholarships to law schools at the University of Chicago and Boston College.

These scholarships are available to any senior, who is entering either of these law schools.

Students must submit their applications with a letter of recommendation and transcript to the Political Science Department by Mon., Feb. 21. For further information contact Prof. Lyman J. Gould.

TEACHING LECTURE OFFERED

The University Lecture Series' second event will be a discussion on "Criteria for an Undergraduate Course," to be undertaken on Feb. 17 at 8 p.m. in Waterman Lower Lounge by Dr. Robert B. MacLeod.

He is a member of the Department of Psychology at Cornell University.

This lecture is the second to be given under the general topic of "New Dimensions in College Teaching."

All these lectures are free and open to the public.

STUDENT PHOTOGRAPHY

The Student Photography Service is planning to expand its staff of photographers. Any UVM student who is interested in photography as a hobby may apply. Experience helps but it is not necessary. We can teach you the basic skills of photography and provide equipment and materials which most individuals cannot afford to own themselves. SPS is an opportunity for students to develop skills in a fascinating hobby.

We are looking for people who are genuinely interested in photography regardless of whether or not they have had any experience. We want people who would like to photograph various activities on campus and see their results published in the CYNIC and other student publications.

There will be a meeting of all those interested in joining the Student Photography Staff at 4:10 p.m. on Wednesday, February 16 in the SPS office—downstairs in the Billings Center, next to the CYNIC office.

UVM COFFEE NEEDS FUNDS

The financial committee for the UVM Coffee House has opened its campaign for funds. Its initial goal is $1,000. Approximately two-thirds of this will go towards the purchase of furnishings such as tables and chairs and the other third towards food stock such as coffee, tea, donuts etc. The greater part of the funds will come as contributions from campus and non-campus organizations, plus individual student and faculty donations. Anyone wishing further information or wishing to contribute should contact either the Rev. John Perry, St. Anselm's, ext. 669, or Ron Izumi, 410 Wells Hall, ext. 383.

BURLINGTON AND INDUSTRY

The Society for the Advancement of Management will sponsor a speech by a representative of the Greater Burlington Industrial Corp. in the Vermont Room of the Home Economics Bldg. at 8:00 p.m., Feb. 16th. The topic will be: Industrial Development in the Greater Burlington Area.

All interested persons are invited.

SENIOR WEEK

Those students interested in working on committees for Senior Week activities may obtain sign up sheets at the S.A. office in Billings. Deposit in the box provided.

Committees will be announced within three weeks.

Placement Barometer

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director UVM Placement Service

Why a series of articles on the technique of job hunting? Because an overwhelming majority of students have no idea how to approach the problem. You are often bewildered and sometimes frightened.

The series, which will begin with the next issue, is written out of experience in the employment world and talking with students here and on other campuses during which the writer has observed the haphazard, vague, and mistaken way in which most of you go about the business of finding work. It is a result of witnessing a number of instances of young men and women who have more than average ability remaining unemployed because they do not know how to sell their services to a suitable market. The suggestions that are to follow are practical and have this merit — they work.

Job hunting should never be hit-and-miss; such a method produces nothing but weariness, discouragement, and loss of self-confidence. It is a sales campaign that requires careful planning and intelligent development. Most students, and you have heard me state this before, do their poorest job selling the most important product they will ever have to sell, themselves. There are three reasons for this. The first is that, as a rule, they have not taken the trouble to get acquainted with the product they are attempting to sell. They do not know themselves, they have not estimated their own liabilities and their own assets. The second reason for their failure is that they do not know where to sell their product. They have given no clear thought to the kind of work they want to do, to the field they are equipped to enter.

The third reason for not getting jobs is that the average job hunter does not know how to look for a job. There are jobs; there will always be jobs. It depends upon you whether you will get the right one for you. It depends on the honesty with which you measure your own abilities. It depends on the careful thought with which you match your talents with the job you want. It depends, above all, on the intelligence you display in following up the job.

A job intelligently chosen can be the most rewarding thing in life. A job chosen by the "I'll take anything" method, by taking the first vacancy that comes to hand, by deciding, "This will do for the time being; if I don't like it, I'll look around for something more suitable later on," can be the greatest source of unhappiness, discontent, and frustration. Sometimes one is put in a position of having to take a job until a better opportunity becomes available. This need not be time wasted if you recognize that your goals will remain unsatisfied until you are in "the right job."

Most turn-over problems among newly hired college graduates can be traced either to initial error of judgment in selecting employees or to putting men and women in the wrong jobs. The misplaced individual is not only wasted but becomes discontented.

The key to the truly successful person is satisfaction achieved by "doing."

"Never throughout history," Theodore Roosevelt once declared, "has a man who lived a life of ease, left a name worth remembering."

But the doubting Thomas asks how one can find the right job in a world where conditions are always changing? Life is in a state of flux. We go from prosperity to depression, from cold war to hot war, from one condition of life to another.

Times are uncertain, because life itself is in a state of flux. But however sweeping the changes may be, the basic needs of men and women are the same, the impact of personality is the same, the effect of aptitude and attitude is the same. Above all, there is no change in the methods of seeking a job, getting a job, holding a job, and advancing in a job.

Now, as in the past, the job seeker finds himself in a highly competitive market. But there are always jobs for the people who can fill them.

The ensuing articles are not written under the misconception that we are living in a stable world. They are written with the conviction that the best chance of making it so is by becoming better stabilized as students and people. Most of our troubles are of our own creating.

The individual, like the nation, like the frightened world as a whole, is in search of security, which lies now where it has always lain, in the individual himself, in his ability to come to terms with himself, in his knowledge of his own strength and how best to use it. It is my earnest hope, that out of the discussions to follow, you, the student, will be saved many weary miles of aimless pavement pounding. Hopefully they will lead you to the job for which you are best suited, whether it be summer or career employment and that they will help you to hold and advance in your job after having once obtained it. It is my intention to help you to help yourself.

Apes Take Up Art

The Albuquerque Zoo recently acquired three young gorillas at a cost of $15,000. While the city fathers were pondering how they were going to pay the bill, an anthropology professor inadvertently solved the dilemma. Dr. Frank Hibben had given the apes water colors in order to test their intelligence and the animals reacted by producing six paintings.

Local art critics who examined the works were very impressed. According to one connoisseur the abstracts show "Great depth of power." A local business firm has purchased one of the paintings for $1000 and another ape art production has been sold for an undisclosed sum.

Law School Placement Service Organized

WEST HARTFORD, CONN. - A unique new organization, Law School Placement Service (LSPS), will guide individual students to law schools most closely suited to their needs through the use of modern computers.

In its first year, LSPS has earned the support of more than 90 of the nation's top law schools. The program has also won the endorsement of educators and professional organizations alike.

Until now, the guidance available to the pre-law student has been haphazard and incomplete. Many students have selected schools on the basis of prestige or word of mouth, only to waste application fees.

Competition is increasingly keen for admittance to law school. The number of openings in first-year classes has remained fairly constant but the post-war "baby-boom" and the American desire for advanced education are flooding admissions offices with applications.

The participating law schools will provide LSPS with data about their entrance requirements, including the most frequently-reported LSAT scores and undergraduate averages in the first-year class.

In addition to his scores, the student will give LSPS his preferences as to financial restrictions and geographical location. LSPS will scientifically guide the student to appropriate schools.

Application forms will be available from campus pre-legal advisors by the end of January. Or students may write directly to: Law School Placement Service, Box 2052, West Hartford, Conn.

Student Law

Elects Officers

The annual election of officers for the Student Law Association was held last Tues., Feb. 1, at a short business meeting. The officers chosen for the coming year are as follows: president, Richard Flood; vice-president, Joseph Badgewick; recording secretary, Eloise Roberts; corresponding secretary, Eileen Fontana; publicity chairman, Peter Larson; treasurer, Beverly Lanpher. Former president, David St. John was given the ex officio post of president emeritus.

After the elections, the plans for the ensuing year were discussed. An extensive program of speakers, films, discussions and short trips is planned.

ROTC

The Cadet Corps joined Mrs. Anne Strickler in mourning the loss of her husband, Captain John C. Strickler, at a memorial service held in Mrs. Allen Chapel last Friday. Other members of the university community in attendance included President and Mrs. Shannon McCune, Colonel Weston L. Blanchard, the former PMS at UVM, and the Brothers and Pledges of Sigma Phi Fraternity. Captain Strickler, a brother of Sigma Phi, served as house advisor while he was a member of the Military Science Department. The feeling of all those who knew him can be expressed in the words of Lt. Herbert D. Safford, '65, the former Brigade Commander, "... it is well to recollect that this one man is a memory to those of my class and others at the University who felt his presence in the ROTC program."

Recently commissioned in the Corps of Engineers was Lt. Michael A. Thomas of Troy, N.Y. Lt. Thomas was a Distinguished Military Graduate who will accept a Regular Army Commission. His wife, the former Johanna Mitchell, '65, attended the commissioning ceremony.

Members of the ROTC Department often serve in capacities other than instructors as witnessed by Captain Howard D. Fraser, an alumnus of UVM, '60, former cadet colonel, and Brother of Phi Delta Theta. Captain Fraser served as Master of Ceremonies of the Phi Deltas annual rushing banquet held last week at the Phi Delt House.

The new scholarship program for ROTC cadets initiated last year is moving into full swing. Applications for the two year scholarships are now being processed. Meanwhile, time is running out for those interested in four year scholarships. If you know any high school seniors that would be eligible to compete, write to the following address for information and forms: Commanding General First United States Army ATTN: AHAAG-CA Fort George G. Debaters Win 19

UVM debaters won 19 debates and lost nine in two tournaments at Harvard University and St. John's University (Rochester, N.Y.) on Feb. 3-5.

At Harvard, two two man teams won 13 ballots, losing four at Harvard and placed third among 90 schools. Each team debated both sides of the question, "Resolved: That law enforcement agencies in the United States should be given greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime."

The team of senior Michael Schoenfeld (New York City) and sophomore Nicholas Danigelis (Burlington) won six of their seven qualifying rounds. They won over U. Michigan, Stonehill (Boston), C.W. Post (New York City), David Lipscomb (Tennessee), Boston College, Wheaton (Kansas), and Dartmouth and lost to Claremont (California). In the octo-final round, Schoenfeld and Danigelis lost to Dartmouth on the affirmative side of the topic. The team was seeded eighth in 140 schools.

Senior David Waite (Springfield) and freshman Robert Daniels (Burlington) won six, losing two. The two won over LaSalle, Marquette, Claremont, Navy, Albion, and Macmurray and lost to Rutgers and Wayne State.

Coach on the Harvard trip was Director of Debate Robert Carr. At St. John's, a four-man unit won six debates and lost six. Trip coach was Dr. Robert Huber.

The affirmative team of freshmen Ramona Goddard (Orwell) and George Phillips (Florence) won over D'Youville, Buffalo, and Rochester and lost to Suffolk, St. Anselm's, and Norwich.

Debating on the negative were senior Robert Brooks (Trumbull, Conn.) and freshman Donna Loizeaux. The team was victorious over Canisius, Delaware, and dropped decisions to Geneva, Clarion State and Niagara.

Dirt Wanted

Among the more unusual of the many requests which come to the University of Vermont is a recent one for "a small soil sample and a little piece of the main rock of your state."

Neville Humphrey of Indianapolis, Indiana, a member of the Creston Junior High School Science Club, wrote the University Public Relations Office for the articles as a part of a science project.

His request (one of hundreds received each year by the Public Relations Office) was forwarded to the Department of Plant and Soil Science in the College of Agriculture and Home Economics where Winston Way, Extension Agronomist is busy assembling the requested material for the Midwestern science exhibit.

More Room For Books Planned

UVM is planning to build a new bookstore which will be located in back of Morrill Hall, south of the Military Science building and north of the Dairy Science building.

J. Henderson Barr from Burlington is the architect for the building, and Henry Berry of Henry Berry Assoc. is the planning consultant. The latter specializes in college bookstores all around the country. The store should be open for the spring semester of 1967.

Mr. Owen Heney, manager of the store, has said that the store will not carry any new lines of goods, but that a larger store will allow better displays of material. Books will be shown with the full front cover out and may even be arranged according to subject so that the student can find a particular book more easily. Mr. Heney explained that the present system was more for the convenience of the store, but if a person inquired, the people working there could find any book on the shelves. Also, if the store does not have a particular book, the book can be ordered. This is one service that is used now and will be carried over into the new store.

In addition to more area for displays, the new store will have several other changes. There will be wider aisles. Two turnstiles will control the entrance to the "store" area of the building. If no article is purchased, one cannot return through the turnstile, but must go through a special checking area before leaving. The number of check out counters can be increased to as many as 13 at busy times, such as when people are all buying text books.

Books will still have to be left outside this region either on shelves or in lockers. There will be 36 lockers available for such things as books and slide rules. The cost of these lockers will be $.25 which will be returned when the locker is opened to remove whatever has been stored there.

The extent of Lake Champlain, from Whitehall to the south to the Richelieu River to the north, exceeds 100 miles. The greatest width of the Lake, in open water, is about eleven miles, just north of Burlington. Its greatest depth is about 400 feet.

ROOMMATES: THEIR CAUSE AND CURE

You'd think that with all the progress we have made in the education game, somebody would have found a cure for roommates by now. But no. Roommates remain as big a problem today as they were when Ethan Mather founded the first American college.

(Contrary to popular belief, Harvard was not the first. Mr. Mather started his institution some 100 years earlier. And quite an institution it was, let me tell you! Mr. Mather built schools of liberal arts, fine arts, dentistry and tanning. He built a lacrosse stadium that seated 200,000. Everywhere on campus was emblazoned the stirring Latin motto CAVE MUSSI - "Watch out for moose." The student union contained a bowling alley, a weighing machine, and a sixteen-chair barber shop.)

(It was this last feature - the barber shop - that, alas, brought Mr. Mather's college to an early end. The student body, being drawn chiefly from the nearby countryside, was composed almost entirely of Pequot and Iroquois Indians who, alas, had no need of a barber shop. They braided the hair on top of their heads, and as for the hair on their faces, they had none. The barber, Tremblatt Follicle by name, grew so depressed staring day after day at 16 empty chairs that one day his mind gave way. Seizing his vibrator, he ran outside and shook the entire campus till it crumbled to dust. This later became known as Pickett's Charge.)

But I digress. We were exploring ways for you and your roommate to stop hating each other. This is admittedly difficult but not impossible if you will both bend a bit, give a little.

I remember, for example, my own college days (Berlitz '68). My roommate was, I think you will allow, even less agreeable than most. He was a Tibetan named Ringading whose native customs, while indisputably colorful, were not entirely endearing. Mark you, I didn't mind so much the gong he struck on the hour or the string of firecrackers he set off on the half hour. I didn't even mind that he singed chicken feathers every dusk and daybreak. What I did mind was that he singed them in my hat.

To be fair, he was not totally taken with some of my habits either - especially my hobby of collecting water. I had no jars at the time, so I just had to stack the water any-old-where.

Well, sir, things grew steadily cooler between Ringading and me, and they might actually have gotten ugly had we not each happened to receive a package from home one day. Ringading opened his package, paused, smiled shyly at me, and offered me a gift.

"Thank you," I said. "What is it?"

"Yak butter," he said. "You put it in your hair. In Tibetan we call it gree see kidstuff."

"Well now, that's mighty friendly," I said and offered him a gift from my package. "Now you must have one of mine."

"Thank you," he said. "What is this called?"

"Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades," I said.

"I will try one at once," he said. And did.

"Wowdow!" he cried. "Never have I had such a smooth, close, comfortable shave!"

"Ah, but the best is yet!" I cried. "For you will get many, many smooth, close, comfortable shaves from your Personna Blade - each one nearly as smooth, close, and comfortable as the first!"

"Wowdow!" he cried.

"Moreover," I cried, "Personna Blades come both in Double Edge style and Injector style!"

"Sort of makes a man feel humble," he said.

"Yes," I said.

We were both silent then, not trusting ourselves to speak. Silently we clasped hands, friends at last, and I am proud to say that Ringading and I remain friends to this day. We exchange cards each Christmas and firecrackers each Fourth of July.

Cats Host Favored Ram Five Saturday

Icemen Show Good Effort

By Fred Schlapp

The varsity hockey team was, at press time, in the midst of a five game losing streak. The puckmen had a chance to break their slump Wednesday night against Norwich in Northfield. Thursday the team traveled to New Hampshire to face the highly-touted Wildcats.

The Cats have really taken their lumps during the slump, losing twice to powerful Boston State, and once to Colby, Salem State, and Middlebury. The two encounters with Boston State were the most damaging as soph star Lee Roy was injured and his linemate Curt Tobey was shaken up. Colby, after a few bad years, are once again becoming a college power.

A review of the last two games follows:

SALEM STATE 3 - VERMONT 2

The icemen of Salem State gained a narrow 3-2 verdict over the Cats. The game seesawed back and forth until Salem scored the clincher at the 12 minute mark of the third period. State took a 1-0 lead only to have Lee Roy knot the count on a beautiful assist from Jack Semler. It was Roy's fourteenth goal of the season and the fourteenth assist for Semler. UVM then took the lead as Chips Uihlein sent one home to make it 2-1. Paul Ryan was credited with the assist.

Salem scored again and the score remained 2-2 until State tallied midway through the period. Outstanding in the loss was goalie Bob Sausville who made 38 saves, several on the spectacular side.

MIDDLEBURY 4 - VERMONT 0

A lack of offensive power proved to be the Cats' downfall in this important State Series game. In the first period the UVM skaters had a player advantage for almost eight minutes due to four Middlebury penalties, but they failed to capitalize. Bob Sausville turned in another good job guarding the goal as he made 23 saves.

Going into the Norwich game, whom the Cats own a victory over, Vermont had a 5-8 record overall. They were also 1-1 in State Series play.

The frosh hockey team, lacking in manpower, has fared poorly this season. The Kittens have a 1-3 record, losing to Norwich, Kimball Union, and Middlebury, and defeating Sterling. After dropping decisions to Norwich, 7-1, and KUA, 6-1, the Kittens shellacked Sterling, 12-1.

The frosh then played Middlebury and the result was a disastrous 13-1 loss. In this game the Kittens lost the services of their star center, Pete Meyer, due to a second period injury. His replacement, however, John Arnold, did a fine job filling in. Outstanding even in such a lopsided defeat was goalie Bill Stone who made 62 saves and kept the score from being any greater than it was. Others who turned in good performances were Catron, Martlin, and Fous.

Scoreboard

By Mick Kropsky

The latest All-Sports Trophy point totals have been compiled and they show SAE in the lead with 392 points. Last year's winner, Delta Psi, is in second place with 368 points. Below is a listing of the top ten contestants:

1. Sigma Alpha Epsilon	392
2. Delta Psi	368
3. Sigma Phi Epsilon	322.9
4. Phi Sigma Delta	301
5. M.A.T.	243
6. Lambda Iota	228.4
7. Sigma Phi	227
8. Sigma Nu	220.4
9. Kappa Sigma	205.3
10. Tau Epsilon Phi	203

The big intramural sports event of this past week was the all-campus singles paddleball championship. This event, which was initially scheduled for first semester, was won by SAE's Paul Dorsey. In a close contest, Dorsey defeated Dennis Linnehan of Kappa Sig.

Next week the always exciting indoor track and field meet will be held. The dates for the meet are February 16, 17 and 18.

LAYNE HIGGS - The senior co-captain set the UVM individual scoring high of the season with 23 points in the U Mass game.

By Bob Bloomenthal

The University of Vermont basketball team will be up against great odds Saturday night when they play host to Yankee Conference-leading Rhodes Island. The Cats enter the game with a 3-5 record in the conference. The Rams are undefeated in five conference games. The only teams Rhode Island has lost to have been big-time schools such as Boston College, Providence, and Oklahoma City.

The Rams' scoring attack has been paced this year by 6-3 senior Steve Chubin. Chubin, twice a All-Yankee Conference first team pick before this season, scored 20 in URI's 96-64 victory over Vermont earlier in the year at Kingston. He has been averaging 25.3 points a game.

Lapointe Leads Frosh Hoopsters

By Bob Bloomenthal

Ralph Lapointe's freshman hoopsters will be going after their sixth win of the season this Monday against the Norwich Plebes. The Kittens enter the game with a 5-1 record, having absorbed their first defeat of the year, 83-61, at the hands of the Dartmouth Frosh last week.

Probably the big reason for the loss at Hanover was the absence of 6-3 center Jeff Plunkett. Plunkett, his 13.3 scoring average, and his numerous valuable rebounds, will no longer be with the squad this year as the Barre, Vt. native has been placed on academic trial this semester.

Prior to the Dartmouth loss the freshmen rolled to their fourth straight win of the season over the St. Michael's Squires. Dave Lapointe and Barry Coughlin led the way for the Kittens with 18 and 17 points respectively, but Rich Kellogg and Dick Corcoran were also in double figures.

This past Monday UVM outran the Plattsburgh State Frosh to gain a 100-85 victory. Again the outstanding all-around play of Dave Lapointe was instrumental in the win as the talented 6-3 performer sprayed the hoop for 30 points. 6-0 Barry Coughlin used some good outside shooting to hit for 19 points while Bob Jacobs and Jim Evelt added 13 apiece. Lapointe's scoring spree topped his average to 19.5 before the Norwich game.

This Monday's game is a six o'clock starter preceding the varsity game. The Kittens then travel to Middlebury Wednesday to play another preliminary tilt with the Panther Frosh whom they have defeated earlier this year.

The other Rhode Island starters are seniors Henry Carey (5-11), Jim Cymbala (5-11), Mike Fitzgerald (6-2), and sophomore Art Stephanson (6-4). Cymbala and Fitzgerald were on the second team all-conference squad, while Stephanson is a rugged rebounder. 6-1 Larry Johnson, a sophomore, is a valuable sixth man.

Next Monday the Cats will resume State Series action in a home game against Norwich. The Cadets are a dangerous team as they showed when they opened up an 18 point lead in the second half against St. Michael's before losing. The top Norwich scorer is a sophomore with a deadly outside jump shot named Paul Stutkowski. Other Cadets to watch are Tim Donovan and Greg Peterson, both 6-5, and 6-0 guards Romero Aja and Bob Byrne.

Wednesday the Catamounts travel to Middlebury for a rematch with the Panthers. UVM had little trouble handling this team at home, but Middlebury could be a problem on their own court. They are led by the Mutt-and-Jeff duo of 6-6 center Charlie Ladd and 5-9 sophomore Dave Vanier, a scrappy little guard.

A review of this past week's games follows, except for the St. Michael's game which had not been played at press time:

UVM 81 - BRANDEIS 72

The Cats opened their weekend road trip successfully by defeating the Judges at Waltham. Vermont led most of the game, but never managed to break it open. Ken Spalter led UVM with 20 points while Barry Zimmerman had 22 for Brandeis.

KEN SPALTER - The scrappy 5-9 guard had his top scoring week of the season in his last three games.

UMASS 94 - UVM 83

A tremendously hot shooting Redmen five proved too much for the courageous Catamounts the next night as Vermont could not match UMass' shooting of 58 per cent from the floor. Clarence Hill accounted for 36 points and Jim Babak added 27 for the Redmen. For Vermont Layne Higgs set the season high for points scored by a UVM player with 23. Ken Spalter had another good night and finished with 22 points.

UVM 91 - NEW HAMPSHIRE 77

In a game which was marked by very ragged play the Catamounts proved their superiority over a lackluster UNH squad in gaining their third conference win of the year. Junior Bruce (Streak) Hanna won his first starting assignment of the year in this game. Higgs added 14 while Russ (Earl) Boardman came off the bench to score 11 points.

YanCon Stats

The latest Yankee Conference basketball statistics show Rhode Island's Steve Chubin holding a slight edge over defending champ Clarence Hill of U Mass in the scoring race. Chubin will be at the Patrick Gym this Saturday, while Hill only recently did a job on the Cats by hitting for 36 points.

Ken Spalter and Milt Goggans rank in the top ten at the eighth and ninth positions, respectively. Goggans is also tied for the conference's third spot in rebounding (11 per game) and is sixth in field goal percentage (.516). Spalter is also sixth in free throw percentage, hitting 77.5% of his foul shots.

Skiers Away At Hanover

By Bob Bloomenthal

Coach Bob Stone's ski team are presently competing in the Dartmouth Carnival at Hanover, New Hampshire. Although the team has been hit with injuries and academic problems, they have been faring well for the year and are potentially a true power in eastern ski competition.

One encouraging factor is the team's third place finish at the St. Lawrence Carnival last weekend. In this meet co-captain Dave Hosmer took a first in the cross-country race and junior Scott Leake placed third. Leake had taken a first in the class C jumping competition at the Hanover Invitational Jump last month. Senior Alan Goedecke is another big contributor to the Nordic team.

The Alpine team (downhill and slalom) is made up of a nucleus of co-captain Pete Donaghy, Don Miller, Pete Sargent, and Bruce Latelle. Junior's Carson Loomis, and Bob Bender back these four up. Coach Stone says these boys have shown constant improvement and are potentially a strong team.

The big nemesis in the team's performances so far this season has been the jumping event. The major cause for this weakness has been a lack of facilities. The practice jump at Centennial Field is but 15 meters while the team uses 50 and 60 meter jumps.

Members of the team competing in the Dartmouth Carnival include:

- Downhill - Bender, Donaghy, Miller, Sargent, and Latelle
- Slalom - Donaghy, Loomis, Miller, Sargent, and Latelle
- Cross-Country - Goedecke, Hosmer, Leake, and Jeff Marsh
- Jumping - Goedecke, Hosmer, Leake and Sargent

A note of encouragement to the ski team was sounded from the Vermont legislature when a bill was recently introduced to promote skiing in the state. If this bill passes it would provide financial aid for the team, more equipment, and better facilities. Needless to say Stone is hoping for this to happen as he believes it would put UVM's ski team on the level of teams such as the University of Denver and Colorado University. These teams have taken Vermonters such as Billy Kidd and Rebel Ryan in the past, but this bill would make UVM as much of an attraction for skiers as these schools.

Ronni Brambier

Alpha Epsilon Phi proudly presents Ronni Brambier as their candidate for Kake Walk Queen. Ronni hails from Westbury, New York, and is a junior in the College of Education and Nursing. She plans to be a speech therapist in the elementary schools.

A Dean's List student, Ronni has taken part in many student activities, including Staff and Sandal, Intradorm social chairman of Wright Hall, SNEA, Homecoming King and Queen Committee, and is presently an officer of her sorority.

Diane Monti

Anne Dietrich, the vivacious twirler we have all seen on the football field, is a senior in Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. She is from Whippany, N.J. and graduated from Hanover Park High School. Anne is a very busy girl on campus. Besides being head majorette, she is also President of Panhellenic Council, Efficiency Chairman of her sorority, and a Dean's List student. She is a math major and hopes to work with computers next year in Washington, D.C.

Jeffrey McMullen

Phi Beta Phi's "Happy Thought" is Miss Diane Monti, a junior from New Britain, Connecticut. A student in the College of Arts and Sciences, Diane is majoring in Sociology and minoring in Psychology. A member of both Sophomore Aides and Staff and Sandal Honor Societies, Diane has been quite active on campus and is presently serving as a W.S.G.A. House President, President of Patterson Hall's Intra-Dormitory Council, and Assistant Membership Chairman of Pi Beta Phi. After graduation, she hopes to work in either the field of social work or public relations.

Anne Dietrich

Kappa Alpha Theta's Jeffrey McMullen is a junior from Schenectady, New York. As a freshman she reigned as Homecoming Queen and was elected to Sophomore Aides Honorary. She has served on WSGA House Committee as Social Chairman and is presently Theta's Scholarship Chairman. Majoring in Classical Languages, Jeffrey is a member of the Goodrich Classics Club. An avid sports enthusiast, she excels in tennis and skiing. Jeffrey is an asset to her sorority and is indeed a "Look of Sunshine."

Russ Boardman

Ted Stokes, a senior from Burlington, is an accounting major in Commerce and Economics. Ted's activities revolve around his interests in economics, being a member of the Commerce and Economics Honorary Society and holding a lab instructors position in the Accounting Department. Also, Ted's future plans in economics include further study at a graduate school in Business Administration. Outside of his primary interests, Ted also held various positions in Sigma Alpha Epsilon, such as assistant treasurer, athletic director, warden and assistant steward.

David Pietsch

Delta Psi Fraternity proudly presents Russ Boardman as its candidate for King of the 1966 Kake Walk. As a junior Economics major in the College of Arts & Sciences, Russ has always carried an attractive academic average. His leadership ability is exemplified by his outstanding position in the Advanced ROTC Corps, and through his participation in collegiate athle-

KAPPA SIGMA

You have heard the expression "Time and tide wait for no man." Haven't you? Well, the same applies to fire and it has been proven that the longer one waits the sooner one bakes. An occasional practice fire drill won't hurt anyone, but when the drill occurs at 3:00 a.m. in the middle of winter, it is proving itself more ridiculous than beneficial. The Brothers and pledges of Kappa Sigma hope you share our views on the "untimely fire drill" as we present "Exodus at Redstone" or "From a warm dorm to a Burlington storm."

PHI SIGMA DELTA

Nestled in the hills of Vermont in the town of Burlington rests the University of Vermont, but even on such a serene and peaceful campus evil spirits lurk about. Every year mischievous freshmen descend upon UVM and every so often these evil spirits confront them. There is no telling when these uncontrollable forces will approach the freshmen but when they do the consequences are inconceivable.

TAU EPSILON PHI

The brothers and pledges of Tau Epsilon Phi are pleased to present tonight a happening entitled the preservation and assassination of student apathy as performed by the administrative inmates under the direction of Vavoom or Apathy of Vavoom.

The Soloists Of Venice Stage Fine Performance

By K. Klonsky

There is something in a violin that expresses the highest point of human excellence. One cannot say what it is that holds him entranced for a performance of any length, in which men pluck and mold those delicate instruments. I Soloisti Veneti (The Soloists of Venice), long established as one of the premier string ensembles in the world, put on a remarkably polished performance for a surprisingly sparse Lane Series audience.

The disappointingly short program was, nevertheless, high in quality. The Soloists played Vivaldi's "Four Seasons," Pergolesi's "Concertino No. 4 in F

I Soloisti Veneti

Minor for Strings," Rossini's "Sixth Sonata for Strings in D Major," and two brief encores. To accurately describe the music would be impossible. Let it suffice to mention that the precision was extraordinary. It would not be presumptuous to say that these hard working young men approached perfection.

The evening was a short but sweet delight to all music lovers in attendance. The less said, the more accurate the review, because I Soloisti Veneti left one speechless.

The Unusual Is Usual

At UVM

By Margaret Crane

Sitting at lunch today at Waterman, a middle aged lady with whom I was eating, asked me, with great sincerity, why the boys of my generation were growing their hair long. Was it a sign of rebellion, a fad, or a desire to look feminine? Or perhaps there was another reason, but what? I could not answer her question.

This subject seems to pop up rather frequently these days. Everyone has something to say about it. Why do young men grow their hair long? What do girls and young men with short hair feel about the long hair and those who wear it? How do the middle aged and older set at UVM feel about it?

I invite anyone who has an answer to any or all of these questions to reply. If possible we will publish some of the results. Send letters to Margaret Crane, CYNIC Office, Billings Center, UVM, Burlington. Please sign your letters.

Coeds Warned

Women students at the University of Vermont have been sent a letter from the Office of the Dean of Women advising them that "from time to time women of the community have been the victims of annoying, embarrassing, and potentially dangerous incidents" involving "an emotionally disturbed fringe element of the population."

AN UNDERSTANDING OF THE PROBLEM IS NECESSARY

The letter points out that "an understanding of the problem by our students can do much to increase their safety," and advises students of the steps to be taken to help avoid or to get away from "actions or attentions which seem suspicious or unusual."

The letter advises that incidents in the past have ranged from "being followed, Peeping Tom incidents, indecent exposure, and to outright attempts at physical assault."

"The incidents may occur at any time of year, most often after dusk and any time after dark. They usually occur in darker areas where trees, shrubbery or buildings afford hiding places... most frequently when a woman is alone," and "many have occurred on or near our campus," the letter states.

LOCAL POLICE ARE HELPFUL

It notes the University has had excellent cooperation with the Burlington Police and other city officials, and notes lighting improvement and increased patrolling as steps which have been taken.

FIRST LINE OF DEFENSE

First line of defense, the letter advises, is to avoid going out alone after dusk, next to "get away," and to report any unusual or suspicious incident promptly, with "as complete a description as possible of anyone whose actions or attentions seem suspicious or unusual."

In cases where physical attacks are attempted, "the best defense is to break away and scream for help as loudly as you can. While the average woman may not be able to break away from an assailant by brute strength, she usually may do so by a combination of screaming, scratching (this helps to mark your assailant and for identification later), biting or kicking," advises the letter.

Verrett Merits Audience Acclaim

By K. Klonsky

A great mezzo-soprano singing to the accompaniment of a Steinway piano set the scene for an electrifying evening at Memorial Auditorium on Monday night. Shirley Verrett, returning to Burlington after a Lane Chamber Arts performance last year, was astounding in range and overwhelming in total performance.

The program included Dvorak, Brahms, Mozart's "Alleluia," Spanish songs by De Falla and four Negro Spirituals. Three encores followed, the last being Georges Bizet's "Habanera," from Carmen. Miss Verrett and pianist, Charles Wadsworth, teamed beautifully in what appeared to be effortless precision. With every vibrant note, the quality of the performance increased and the striking beauty of the singer became more evident. The viewer felt as if he was getting acquainted with Miss Verrett and, in the end, had cemented a lasting friendship.

Miss Verrett - Electrifying!

At the evening's conclusion, the Lane Series audience knew they had seen something that would remain with them for many years. So they stood, at first embarrassingly, hesitantly, and then in unanimity in the greatest tribute they could give the artist.

YAWF Speaker Will Examine Viet Nam War

Deirdre Griswold will be on campus Feb. 21 to speak on "The Vietnam War in Light of the Kennedy Assassination." A member of Youth Against War and Fascism, she is the editor of the national magazine, The Partisan. This organization was the first to conduct street demonstrations, and Miss Griswold has been arrested for participation in civil rights and anti-war demonstrations.

Among Miss Griswold's credits are membership on the Steering Committee of the National Co-ordinating Committee in Vietnam, and association with attorney Mark Lane in capacity of executive director of the Citizen's Committee of Inquiry at the time of the Kennedy assassination.

Miss Griswold will speak in the North Lounge of Billings at 8:00 p.m. on Mon., Feb. 21.

CHILEAN STUDENTS VISIT MILITARY SCIENCE DEPARTMENT

Five students, who are part of a group of students from Chile visiting the University through a program called the Experiment on International Living, spent part of an afternoon visiting the Military Science Department and observing drill procedures. At the Gunnerson Field House they watched as Colonel Leonard G. Robinson presented Achievement Award Ribbons to five cadets in Company D. Then they met and chatted with Colonel Robinson and other members of the Cadre. Cadet Captain William Rush, commander of Company D, provided the visiting students with a short demonstration of the manual of arms and close order drill explaining that as the basic course Cadets were learning to perform maneuvers and follow commands the advance course

Cadets were learning to teach procedures and give commands. The Chilean students were then conducted to the Military Science Building to see the academic half of the ROTC program. Although no classes were in session the students had an opportunity to view classrooms, supply rooms, offices, and training aids room. SFC Domingue presented the visitors with a highlight of their tour by speaking to them in their native language as he conducted them through the supply facilities.

The Spanish speaking Sergeant learned the language in the Army and spent 3 years at the School of the Americas in Panama. This school is attended by students from 21 Latin American Nations and is the only School run by the Army where all the instruction is given in Spanish.

To any kid who'd like to go somewhere:

We'll pay half your fare.

The idea's not as crazy as it may seem. Anytime we take a jet up, there are almost always leftover seats.

So it occurred to us that we might be able to fill a few of them, if we gave the young people a break on the fare, and a chance to see the country.

The American Youth Plan

We call the idea the American Youth Plan, and what it means is this:

American will pay half the jet coach fare for anybody 12 through 21.

It's that simple.

All you have to do is prove your age (a birth certificate or any other legal document will do) and buy a $3 identification card.

We date and stamp the card, and this entitles you to a half-fare ticket at any American Airlines counter.

The only catch is that you might have to wait before you get aboard; the fare is on a standby basis.

"Standby" simply means that the passengers with reservations and the servicemen get on before you do.

Then the plane's yours.

The American Youth Plan is good year

round except for a few days before and after the Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas rushes.

If you can't think of any places you'd like to go offhand, you might see a travel agent for a few suggestions.

We can't add anything else.

Other than it's a marvelous opportunity to just take off.

Complete this coupon—include your $3. (Do not send proof of age—it is not needed until you have your ID validated.) In addition to your ID card, we'll also send you a free copy of AA's Go Go American with $50 worth of discount coupons.

EDITORIAL...

Once again we see the arrival of "Departure," UVM's student literary magazine. In the past the publication of the magazine has been sporadic at best with one issue coming out last year and one three years ago. In as much as "Departure" is the only publication of its kind on campus and that our University is often judged by what its students produce, we certainly hope that "Departure" can become a permanent part of our institution. We hope that it can come out monthly or bi-monthly instead of yearly or bi-yearly.

Since no magazine can endure without writers, those students and staff members with inclinations to write for the magazine should be urged to do so. Since no magazine can be published without some revenue or financial backing, and "Departure" carries no advertising, would it not be proper for the Student Association to include "Departure" as one of its regular beneficiaries?

Letters To The Editor

Needed Society For Revolution, Not A Society For Debate

To the Editor:

I'm very glad to see that Mr. Boardman denies belief in LBJ, the Burlington Free Press, and others in our Great Society. I fail to see however, why he should get so upset at Mr. Spinner for his part in UVM's "Great Debate" on Vietnam. After all, it was only a debate and as such was quite harmless and ineffective. If that is Mr. Boardman's point, if he bemoans the fact that many leftists still indulge in polite tea-party conversation in a P.R. age which demands spontaneous irrationality (e. g., Watts), then I agree with him in spirit.

On the other hand, this raped generation to which he so melodramatically refers seems to be caught up in LBJ's consensus more than the very academicians which Mr. Boardman criticized. You are not part of a revolutionary generation, Mr. Boardman! Yours is the one which applauded Lieutenant Governor Daley's God and Country speech during the UVM war march. Yours is next in line to uphold the two car/hair spray civilization, and yours will in its turn worry that the Negro wants too much too soon.

Of course there will be the disinherited children who will feel, as all outsiders before them have felt, the uniqueness of their situation. In the end, however, they will join the estranged of the elder generations to debate a system against which they will not revolt.

Sincerely,
Edwin H. Lundberg

$1200 CORSE FELLOWSHIP

Available To Seniors And Recent Grads

Applications for the Corse Fellowship of $1200 will be accepted by Dean W. H. Macmillan, Graduate College, through April 15.

This fellowship, established through the bequest of Frederick M. Corse, '88, is awarded annually to a graduate of UVM holding the Bachelor of Arts degree, to a senior or to a recent graduate with the proper qualifications.

Applicants, either young men or young women, must have majored in English, or a classical language, or two of the European languages, and must be preparing for a career in college or university teaching. Exceptional ability, character, and capability for independent thought are considerations.

Application blanks may be obtained from Dean Macmillan's office, 107 Waterman Building.

Goodman Comments Students And The Draft Exploring Dissent

Many students tell me they are in school this year, or in school altogether, to avoid going to the rice paddies. They say it angrily, not slyly. Their moral problem is an unusual one. It is not that they are shirking the army for their personal comfort or their career — a dodge that occurs at all times and in all countries; rather, they feel they ought to be resisting the present war more honestly, burning draft-cards, going to jail, etc. According to the opinion polls, the President has a solid popular majority for his policy, but I doubt that he has anything like a majority in the colleges, especially among the younger instructors and the students.

Thus, I expect the teach-ins and anti-war demonstrations to be stronger and to involve civil disobedience, if only because of these students' self-disgust for their privileged exempt status.

On the other hand, for the students who are not protesters, the draft-policy does not have much patriotic significance. I doubt that there are many students who feel enthusiastic that their college training is an indispensable function of the Great Society and its war effort, so that their student-deferment is valued as a positive good, rather than a lucky break.

BEST STUDENTS ARE DISSENTERS

Even more serious, however, the most intellectually earnest students are the strongest dissenters, on Civil Rights, University reform, pacifism, opposition to the Vietnam war. This was evident at Berkeley, where the Free Speech Movement leaders had grades far superior to the average; and the same has just been demonstrated across the country in a report for the Carnegie Corporation: dissent is strongest in schools with the highest academic standing and, in those schools, among the best students. Think of the unfortunate, and dangerous, polarization among young people that this implies. The armed forces tend to be filled with the poor and unschooled. They are drafted, and they also tend to enlist since they are likely to be drafted anyway and they might as well have it over with; besides, in peace-time conditions, the armed services provide education for the ambitious that is better than most high schools and some colleges. In war-time conditions, the selected group at the front understandably resents the protesters at home who are a different breed. A reporter from Danang (Warren Rogers in the N.Y. Journal-American) says, "The 18- and 19-year-olds, fashionably referred to as high school dropouts, have steel in their backbones and maybe too much of what prize-fighters call killer instinct." But the protesters are most often better informed, more reasonable, and even more earnest. Naturally the men at the front think of them as slackers, careerists, beatniks, or nuts.

On the streets, the ever louder crowds that curse the young pacifist demonstrators are in fact likely to be cursing the young people of whom they would ordinarily be most proud and whom they would like their own children to emulate. If the American casualty lists mount, we are bound to see a Know Nothing spirit worse than McCarthyism, for the dissent is more widespread, stubborn, and intellectually critical than it was in McCarthy's time. This is certainly a grim relationship between the community of scholars and society.

POLICY ACADEMICALLY OUTRAGEOUS

Consider another bad aspect of this relationship. Precisely to diminish shirking and to guarantee social utility (according to its lights), as well as to increase recruitment, the government will now exempt only students who get good grades, carry a full course-load, and even are in the sciences rather than the humanities. But this kind of extra-mural pressuring is academically outrageous. The curriculum and level of performance that warrant a student's being in college must be entirely the affair of the student and his professors, otherwise educational process is impossible. For a particular student at a particular time, a light load, off-campus work, a moratorium might be just the right thing. A student's mediocre grades might be quite irrelevant to the question of how much he is profiting. The right curriculum depends on where and how a student is.

I am unwilling in this column to discuss the merits of the Vietnam war as policy — in my opinion, it is both unjust and impolitic — but as an academic I must say this: the pressuring and interference of the draft policy in academic matters are intolerable and poison the atmosphere of the community of scholars. It is the duty of faculty concertedly to protest against them and refuse them, and it is the duty of students to urge the faculty to do so.

In abstract logic, the "just policy" on the student deferment is clear: Either the war is just and then nobody should be deferred (except for absolute social or personal necessity); all must be in it together. Or the war is unjust and we should get the hell out of it. And abstractly I agree with this forthright reasoning, but —

Since the President does not seem to be about to give up the war, the logic means abolishing the deferment. The students would of course be wildly against it, for various good and bad reasons. Also, University administrators would be against it, since it would diminish their population and grandeur, even if many are students only to avoid the draft. But finally, I think the government itself must shy away from such a step, for it cannot be eager to cope with the unknown, but certainly very large, number of students who oppose war and would strenuously object to being drafted, but who now settle quietly for deferment. At present the government is obviously disposed to get most of its troops from the National Guard and the Reserves, rather than asking for an Emergency and risking debate. Yet this drift toward a big professional army is hazardous to democracy, and we may rue it.

Placement Barometer

Set Your Goals

By Douglas O. Hanau, Director, UVM Placement Service

THE JOBS EXIST IF YOU CAN FILL THEM. Too many students break down their morale by the wrong technique of job hunting - or rather because they have no technique at all, and simply go at it in a haphazard way.

It is safe to say that no one ever succeeded by accident; no one ever reached a goal without knowing what the goal was and aiming for it; no war was ever won without a planned campaign of battle. Certainly your own life merits a plan of action. There is always a good market for good college educated men and women. Under our economic system business plays an important part, and as long as business exists there will be jobs and there must be people to fill them. New developments constantly provide new fields of enterprise. Many corporations are manufacturing products that were undreamed of a few years ago or that were considered impossible of achievement. Because American business is constantly changing, its requirements are changing too. It is an era of specialization, and it follows naturally enough that more specialized training is required of employees. This in itself need not be a stumbling block, because the means for acquiring that training are at hand, available to everyone who has the enterprise and ambition to take advantage of it. In the past fifty years great corporations have grown up which have altered the old picture. These organizations, employing vast numbers of people, are highly specialized. They have to be. They require specific skills.

NOT ANY JOB

As a senior if you look for "any job," trusting to blind luck that you will not land in one for which you are wholly unqualified, you will be making a good start toward failure. You are either relying on the personnel man to figure out for himself what your abilities are -- and if you do not take the trouble to do it for yourself, you should not blame the personnel man who fails to sum up your qualifications correctly -- or he is simply indifferent. The senior with a well-defined plan will leave you far behind every time.

"Suppose I ask for a specific job," the applicant thinks, "and there is no vacancy in that field? Then I shall lose my chance. But if I say I am willing to do anything they may find a place for me." It does not work that way. To be blunt about it, the senior who says, "I am willing to do anything," makes a bad impression. The senior is not aiming at a job but simply scattering shot in the hope that it may hit something. Such a senior appears to be vague and passes on to the prospective employer the task of doing the senior's own thinking, i.e., of weighing and assessing potentialities.

KNOW YOUR QUALIFICATIONS

It used to be regarded as the proper attitude for a boy or girl to say, "I am willing to do anything." And to a certain extent such a display of willingness does signify the proper attitude. In an age of specialization, however, it does not go far enough. It is liable to suggest either that you have given no thought to what you want to do or that there is nothing you can do well. You can always say, "I am willing to start anywhere but I believe I am best fitted for..."

It is a common mistake for you to think, "There must be something I can do in a big company like this." You have missed the whole point. The company is not finding a place for you; it is buying the services you have to sell. The senior who applies for a job in this frame of mind is not attempting to sell himself. He is asking that he be given a job without advancing one reason for the company's giving it to him.

Every organization constantly adds new people whether or not it is expanding its business due to transfers, retirement, promotions, or discharges. There is a lot of competition for these jobs. I have heard it said that ninety per cent of the people who do not get a job, or who get one and lose it, or who remain in the same spot after they get one, owe their difficulties to personal traits, and only ten per cent to lack of ability. The encouraging point in all this is the fact that almost anyone can overcome or correct the particular personal traits that are your own liabilities, if you will take the time and trouble to look yourself over honestly and discover what they are. Seniors fail because they are either too indifferent or too lazy to examine the cause of their failure and take steps to remove it. Not one person in a hundred, to make a conservative estimate, uses a quarter of his ability or makes more than a half-hearted effort to advance himself. And yet anyone can do it. It is a safe bet to say that everyone who has ever succeeded has done it.

YOU ARE AN INVESTMENT

The personnel man or woman is simply a purchasing agent who's job it is to make the best investment for the employer that the market affords. As an applicant for a job, you are a salesman, seeking to sell the one thing you have to sell -- and that is yourself. Practically everything you do in your relationship with other people involves salesmanship. Employers do not expect that when you enter their places of business you will be of great value to them. They know that before you can be useful they will have to train you. Seniors are turned down for jobs chiefly because they are poor salesmen; because they do not know what they have to sell; because they do not know where to sell it; because they do not know how to sell it. Because, in short, they were not prepared. What do you really want to do? More graduates lost out on jobs because they have never thought of the answer to this question than for any other reason. Find the thing you want to do, and you have made the biggest step toward getting a job. Remember that no one can stop you in your own field.

ENROLLMENT SOARS

Cincinnati, Ohio - (I.P.) - A larger proportion of institutions have increases of 15 per cent or more in full-time students than was true a year ago, according to figures released here recently by Dr. Garland G. Parker, University of Cincinnati registrar and dean of admissions.

Although the freshman increase will fall short of the record 17 per cent rise of last year, Dean Parker said an expected climb of 10-12 per cent will give the nation a new high in first-year students. He predicts a record final count of approximately 800,000 freshman collegians in the four-year accredited colleges and universities and as many as 1.4 million across the nation as a whole.

"The bulging birthrate years of 1946 and 1947 account for the human potential out of which the bumper freshman class of last year and this have come," Dean Parker noted.

"Under the impact of the oncoming rush of students surviving from last year's record class and the even greater total of incoming freshmen this year, the nations institutions of higher education must prepare for much larger numbers in junior and senior levels in the next two years," Dean Parker warned.

"The educational world is agog with new plans and programs emanating from Washington, various state capitols, private sources, and local campuses. The enrollment figures for this year and next make it clear these new ventures and the resources underlying them will be sorely needed."

Honduras—Vermont

Partnership Begins

On Feb. 22 at 2:00 p.m. in the Lower Lounge, Waterman Building, the Vermont Committee to Honduras will make the first of three public reports to Vermonsters. The Vermont Council on World Affairs has been asked to help organize this meeting.

A brief history of the project to date:

Last Fall the Agency for International Development of the U.S. Department of State approached the Experiment in International Living in Putney for Vermont to become the 27th state to be paired with a section of Latin America as "Partners in the Alliance for Progress." Governor Hoff endorsed this project and called a state-wide meeting to appoint a team to visit Honduras to explore areas (educational, agricultural, cultural, medical, etc.) in which we might cooperate. The State Department sent our committee to Honduras for two weeks in January-February and will underwrite the visit of a similar team from Honduras to Vermont within the year. Our committee is composed of: Prof. Samuel Guarnaccia, Middlebury, Dr. Dorothy Morrow, Shelburne, Mr. William Stone, South Burlington, Mr. Denning Miller, Stowe and Mr. William Wright, Rutland.

This report meeting will include slides and exhibits on Honduras, as well as concrete suggestions from the committee as to ways in which Vermonsters and their organizations can take immediate action.

Students as well as faculty are urged to attend this meeting because student exchange and work projects are among the possibilities for this Honduran-Vermont partnership.

The Best Of Best

Editor's Note: Professor Best, who will be providing us with his views of campus life, is a member of the Political Science Dept.

By Professor James J. Best

A member of the faculty, writing for the student newspaper, runs some obvious risks. Can he be honest and true to the students, the University and himself? Can he do anything other than lecture to the students, bow differentially to his colleagues and staff, and mutter under his breath to himself? I believe the answer is yes (although the possibility that I'm wrong haunts me).

Above all, this column will be the personal statement of a young faculty member, looking at the students and the University. The column will have no organized format and will appear irregularly. When, like Harry Golden, I have a barrel full of ideas and something to say I will do so. My appearances around exam periods will be less frequent since this is the time when I'm most barren of ideas. My students will testify to this fact. The content of the column will vary with the weather and what I had for breakfast. I will labor and belabor the obvious while myopically overlooking germane questions. In short, I will be human.

Some random thoughts: When will the University announce that a new Head Librarian has been hired, pending final approval by the trustees? (This question may come as a surprise to some students who were unaware that we were without a Head Librarian).

It is interesting to note that while on-campus parking is in such short supply a new bookstore will be constructed next year on the parking lot next to the Old Gymnasium. Planners of parking lots and planners of buildings should occasionally hold joint committee meetings.

Why do all the girls in a class sit together? Self-Protection? Against Whom? The Instructor? Boys?

What will the University do with the malarial hole behind the Library which was once to be the campus reflecting pool (every campus should have one)? Now that the snow is melting it will no longer be possible to use the excavation for sledding and inadequate drainage and a soft bottom make it inadequate for swimming.

While the University has an excellent series of cultural events under the auspices of the Bane Series, it is unfortunate that there is no comparable program to bring competent and nationally recognized speakers to campus. SCOPE and an occasional Area Studies lecture provide the only speakers of campus-wide interest and they lack the money to bring in top-name people. Perish the thought, but could Lane Series money be diverted for this purpose?

It would be a shame if UVM were to become a one-sport school or that athletes were to be treated as different, and better, than the rest of the student body.

One of the factors accounting for the recent rise in attacks on coeds must be attributed to the lack of security officers on campus. How many campus security officers do you think there are at UVM?

A student, who shall remain nameless, informed me the other day, "The reason this is a party school is that the entrance standards for out-of-state students are high and they don't have to work once they're here. If they don't have to study what else do they have to do?" Hard telling.

IFC Elections To Be Held

VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Election of President and Vice-Presidents of the Interfraternity Council will be held next Tuesday at the weekly meeting of the IFC. This is the first year that the new IFC organization will elect officers who have been members of the body for at least two years.

Last Tuesday, the Junior IFC presented a list of seven of its members to the IFC, from whom three will be chosen Vice-Presidents. Under the new IFC Constitution, candidates for the office must have been members of the Junior IFC, comprised of one sophomore from each fraternity. The 16 Fraternity Presidents will cast the ballots.

The candidates are: Gary Gylm, Springfield, Vt. -- Sigma Alpha Epsilon; Art Ableson, Waban, Mass. -- Tau Epsilon Phi; Bob Steffans, New York City -- Phi Mu Delta; Doug Provost, Burlington, Vt. -- Phi Delta Theta; David Crane, Charlotte, Vt. -- Sigma Phi; and Ashley Louis, New York City -- Phi Sigma Delta Fraternity.

Next year, one of the three Vice-Presidents will become President of the IFC.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Tuesday afternoon, February 22, the Interfraternity Council will also elect a new President for the 1966-67 academic year. Three candidates have announced their intentions to seek the office. They are: Frederick Brown, from Woonsocket, Rhode Island; John Tobin, from Fair Haven, Vermont; and Carl Lisman, from Burlington, Vermont. All three are Juniors and have served as Vice-Presidents this year.

Under the new Constitution, the new President must be chosen from the three Vice-Presidents of the past year. Vice-Presidents are selected from the body of Junior representatives to the IFC.

Brown, a brother of Delta Psi, is a member of Key and Serpent, Newman Club, and a member of the Planning Committee for the S.A.'s Student Leadership Conference. He is also a member of the advanced ROTC program.

Lisman is a brother of Phi Sigma Delta fraternity, and serves as a Justice on the Student Court, Key and Serpent, the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club, the Freshman Orientation Committee, Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha Honorary, and Vermont Conference.

Tobin is a brother of Sigma Phi Fraternity. He is employed by the University Testing Service. He is a past member of Gold Key.

Following the election of President, of the two candidates not chosen, one will be appointed IFC Treasurer and the other one Chairman of the Kake Walk Dispositions Committee.

Local NAACP Group Hosts Civil Rights Legislator

A former newspaper reporter who is the foremost legislative representative in Washington for the civil rights movement and who gave his first congressional testimony as an eye-witness of a lynching, has agreed to speak at the annual Freedom Fund Dinner of the Burlington-Area NAACP.

Mr. Clarence Mitchell, Director of the Washington Bureau which handles national NAACP work with Congress and the agencies, will be guest speaker at the dinner of the local biracial group. The Washington Bureau which Mr. Mitchell heads was instrumental in the passage of the 1957 Civil Rights Act, which was the first civil rights legislation approved by Congress in over eighty years. The enactment of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act are also examples of the Bureau's successes. Mr. Mitchell is also legislative chairman for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. His government service includes executive posts with President Roosevelt's Fair Employment Practice Committee, the War Man-power Commission and the War Production Board.

His volunteer service has been in the field of housing, employment, small business and other government problems under the Truman, Eisenhower and Johnson administrations.

SIGNIFICANT SPEECH

Spokesmen for the Burlington NAACP said it is particularly significant for Vermont that a leader like Mr. Mitchell is willing to take time from his extremely tight schedule to address a state-wide area which has only 519 Negro families. There are many questions that friends of the NAACP ask: Is the battle over? Does the NAACP expect to get into politics? Is the NAACP getting into the ghettos? What's ahead for the NAACP? Very few men can answer these inquiries as well as Mr. Clarence Mitchell. For this reason the chapter considers itself privileged to have the Maryland lawyer as its main attraction. Other program features are in the planning stage but the high light of the occasion will be to honor a citizen of the community who has worked for civil rights in the last year or two. Also, scheduled will be local guest artists for the evening's entertainment.

FREEDOM FUND DINNER IS NATIONAL INSTITUTION

The Freedom Fund Dinner has become a national institution, like the Jefferson and Lincoln dinners, but it is non-partisan. Its purpose is to raise money for the educational activities of the NAACP. Monies donated to this specific activity are tax-exempt. The Burlington friends and members of the local NAACP have seen this dinner grow, within four years, from a cover-dish supper in a church basement to a professional full course dinner with elaborate intellectual and cultural programs and attendance in the hundreds.

SCHEDULE FOR MARCH 5

This year's event will be held on Saturday, March 5th at Rice Memorial High, Burlington at 6 p.m. The public is invited; tickets cost $3 for adults, $2 for children. For information, phone 878-2786 or 864-6252. Roland Mullgav heads the committee on arrangements.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

UVM Wives Launch Program

May Join National Organization

The newly-organized University Wives has launched a successful program for the benefit of graduate and undergraduate wives. The group enjoys weekly activity groups, as well as gatherings on the first Tuesday of each month.

On March 1st, at 7:30 p.m. in Billings, a beauty culture expert will speak to the ladies. To date, the organization has approximately 25 paid members, most of whom are undergraduate wives. Since the group is still relatively new, it has been difficult for the executive members to contact graduate as well as undergraduate wives; however, all wives are more than welcome, and are encouraged to participate.

A national organization entitled NAUD (National Association of University Dames) exists, and recently the University Wives sent NAUD a copy of its constitution applying for a national membership.

The officers of the University Wives are: President, Ginger Ballentine; Vice President, Connie Scott; Recording Secretary, Kathy Dechene; Corresponding Secretary, Jeanne Mausur; Treasurer, Sandy Havanich; Welcome Hostess, Carolyn Brassard. Anyone wanting information about the organization should contact Carolyn Brassard at 863-6453.

Ansbachers Edit Vital Books

Two books edited by a University of Vermont professor and his wife have been recommended for inclusion in any minimum academic library.

The American Library Association has published a minimum list of 66 psychology books which should be on the shelves of any academic library and two books on the writings of Alfred Adler are contained on the list.

Both books were edited by Heinz L. Ansbacher, professor of psychology at Vermont, and his wife, Rowena R. Ansbacher. The two works are "The Individual Psychology of Alfred Adler" and "Superiority and Social Interest."

Adler was one of the group who worked with Sigmund Freud when the latter was coming to prominence for his work in psychiatry. Adler later broke with Freud.

The Ansbachers are considered specialists on Adler and serve as editor and associate editor of the semi-annual Journal of Individual Psychology. Dr. Ansbacher contributed the article on Adler in the Encyclopedia Britannica and has written an article on Adler's psychology for the second edition of the International Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences.

Their "Individual Psychology of Alfred Adler" was selected by The New York Times as one of the 100 best books of the year (1956) and received a front page review in the literary supplement of The London Times.

So get out and vote for your own self-government representatives.

'Departure' Arrives

A new literary magazine -- Departure -- made its debut at the University of Vermont on Wednesday. (Feb. 16)

FIRST ISSUE

The first issue has 55 pages and includes poetry, prose and a one-act play. Most of the contributions came from the student body although there are several from outside sources and a faculty member.

STAFF MEMBERS

Staff members of Departure are Henry Wellman of Brattleboro, editor-in-chief; Kenneth Klonsky of Rockville Centre, N.Y., associate editor; John Caputo of Darien, Conn., poetry editor; Richard Miles of Arlington, creative editor; Mimi Morton of Riverton, N.J., secretary; Cora Stimpson of Hartland, publicity editor; Richard Schubert of Pittsfield, Mass., business manager, and James Seely of Brooklyn, N.Y., student advisor.

James Howe of the department of English is faculty advisor.

For the initial issue, 1200 copies have been printed and will be available, free, starting on Wednesday, at the Student Association desk in Billings Center and at the University Store.

TWO ISSUES A YEAR PLANNED; CONTRIBUTIONS WELCOMED

Hopefully, the staff plans two issues a year and invites contributions from all interested in such a magazine. Deadline for manuscripts for the next issue is the "Ides of March" (March 15), according to Professor Howe.

TIME INC.

Campus Representative for 1966

A position is now open on your campus. A Time Inc. college representative on a small or medium-sized campus can expect to earn $200 to $750 in commissions annually selling subscriptions to TIME, LIFE, SPORTS ILLUSTRATED and FORTUNE at reduced student and educator rates. On larger campuses, many of our representatives earn over $750 a year. They work hard, of course, but their hours are their own, and they gain valuable business experience in this year-round marketing program. Send name and address, college, class and any other information you consider important to Time Inc., College Bureau, TIME & LIFE Building, Rockefeller Center, New York City 10020. All applications must be submitted by March 1, 1966. You will be contacted promptly.

Debaters Go On Tour

Six members of the Lawrence Debate and Discussion Club and two coaches flew to tournaments at the University of Richmond (Virginia) and Northwestern University (Evanston, Illinois) February 9-11. The six debated a total of 20 rounds on the topic "Resolved: That law enforcement agencies in the United States should be given greater freedom in the investigation and prosecution of crime."

At the University of Richmond, each of the 2 two-man teams debated six rounds, three on each side of the question. Trip coach was Miss Lynn Baier.

The novice team of freshmen Priscilla Goekmeyer (Middletown, N.J.) and Sheryl Parker (Springfield) won five and lost one, placing third in the novice division. The team won over Old Dominion (Va.), Navy, Northern Illinois, U. Maryland, and U. Virginia and lost to Wayne State (Detroit). The girls also appeared in a television news clip for a Richmond channel.

In the varsity division were senior Robert Brooks (Trumbull, Conn.) and sophomore Robin Frost (Haydenville, Mass.). The pair defeated U. Richmond, Old Dominion, and Wayne State and dropped decisions to William and Mary (Va.), Washington and Lee (Va.), and Emory (Ga.).

Seniors David Webster and Norman Snow, both of Burlington won three and lost five at Northwestern University. While on the affirmative, the team lost to Harvard, Concordia (Minn.), Illinois, and Kings (N.Y.). On the negative, they won over Hiram (Ohio), Northern California, and UCLA and lost to Kansas.

Trip coach was Director of Debate Robert Carr.

Students Help Run Show

Operation of the George Bishop Lane Artists Series is a joint venture for students, faculty, and staff of the University of Vermont which books and presents artists for the series, one of the largest collegiate artists series in the U.S., is always elected from the student membership of the committee. Voting members include six students, three faculty, and two administrative officers. The Series is endowed through a major gift from an alumni family. The committee is one of the busiest at UVM, meeting every week during each college year.

Theologist Explores Difficult Question At Vt. Conference

Several weeks ago, the committee for Vermont Conference announced its topic for 1966: "Is God Dead?" The question of God's existence in and pertinence to the twentieth century is one that is uppermost in the minds of philosophers and theologians.

Deeply involved in this controversy is Dr. Shubert Ogden, Professor of Theology at Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University. Professor Ogden will be one of the speakers at Vermont Conference. He is a follower of the philosopher, Whitehead, and an authority on the work of Martin Heidegger and Rudolph Bultmann.

Dr. Ogden is a process theologian who advocates a reinterpretation of God and a demythologizing of the New Testament. He does not deny the existence of Christ; he feels that Christ must not be taken merely as an historical figure, but as God's redemptive act as revealed to men. Thus, the Bible must be reinterpreted on non-historical lines.

Dr. Ogden received his A.B. at Ohio Wesleyan University in 1950; he studied at Johns Hopkins University in 1950-51 as a First-year Fellow of the American Council of Learned Societies, and received his Ph.D. at the University of Chicago in 1958. In 1952, he was ordained a Methodist clergyman. Dr. Ogden was awarded an honorary degree of Doctor of Letters from Ohio Wesleyan in 1965. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and is a Kent Fellow, a John Simon Guggenheim Fellow, and a Fulbright Research Scholar.

Dr. Ogden is author of Christ Without Myth: A Study on the Theology of Rudolph Bultmann, and editor and translator of Existence and Faith: Shorter Writings of Rudolph Bultmann.

Careers in Adventure at General Electric

TO: General Electric Company
570 Lexington Ave., Rm. 801-C
New York, N. Y. 10022

Gentlemen:

Show me what it's like to be one of the new generation of idea men at General Electric. Where I might work. What I'd do. What kind of people I'd work with.

Send me my free copy of the 20-page booklet "Careers in Adventure," filled with full-color photographs that show G.E.'s young men -- and women -- at work in today's most challenging fields: electronics, urban lighting and transit design, aerospace and computers, jet propulsion and nuclear power and all the rest.

Got a pencil?

Frankly, General Electric is after the cream of the 1966 crop of graduates.

Not just the top engineers. And not just the top scientists. But the outstanding graduates in other fields: economics, business, law, accounting and the liberal arts as well.

See for yourself what you could be doing next year. Fill out the coupon for a copy of our booklet "Careers in Adventure."

And talk to the man from G.E. during his next campus visit. Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

IFYE Delegate

UVM Senior Girl To Spend Six Months in India

Patricia McFadden

With water buffaloes instead of tractors, saris instead of skirts, and muscle power instead of electricity, what would life be like?

Vermont's delegate for the International Farm Youth Exchange Program (IFYE) will find out in September, when she leaves to spend six months learning a new way of life in India.

Patricia McFadden of Springfield is looking forward to her trip. A senior in Home Economics Education at the University of Vermont, she is currently practicing - teaching in Vergennes and trying to find time to learn Hindi, the most widely used language in India.

"I'm dying of excitement," she said, "but I have been for so long I don't bubble so much any more."

Pat knew of her selection several months ago but couldn't talk about it until arrangements had been completed.

When asked about IFYE she explained it was founded to promote understanding of the world's peoples. The program was started in 1948. Vermont has participated for 15 years.

For each IFYE delegate Vermont sends two exchange students from other countries are sent to Vermont. Since IFYE began, 67 countries have sent or received IFYE's.

Flicks

FLYNN - "The Ugly Dachshund" - and "Winnie the Pooh" - The former is moronic; the latter, amusing.

STRONG - "The Great Race" - Natalie Wood, Jack Lemmon, Tony Curtis, Malcom X- only the presence of Jack Lemmon saves this painfully asinine Hollywood travesty from being a total disaster. Tony Curtis is as gay as ever.

STATE - "Thunderball" - Unquestionably idiotic, money-making Bomb.

S.A. - Paul Newman in "Sweet Bird of Youth" - Although Newman has been better, this film is worth seeing if only for an Academy Award winning performance of Ed Begly. The plot is generally absorbing.

UVM Grad Becomes WAC

Lt. Perlee, right, and fellow Vermonter, Lt. Jeannine Young, take a few brief minutes to exchange home-state gossip.

FORT MCCLELLAN, Ala. -- Members of the U.S. Women's Army Corps come from fifty states, from large cosmopolitan cities, small towns, rural areas.

A former UVM student graduated from the Women's Army Corps Officer Basic/Officer Candidate Course this December. Gail M. Perlee of Bristol entered the Army in August as a second lieutenant.

Lieutenant Perlee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Perlee, Liberty St., Bristol, Vt., is a 1965 graduate of UVM in Burlington with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in English and Speech.

For Women's Army Corps Officers, the gap between civilian and officer is bridged by the Officers' Training Detachment here at the home of the Women's Army Corps -- Fort McClellan, Alabama. The WAC Officer Basic/Officer Candidate Course is conducted twice a year, covering 18 weeks of instruction with a curriculum encompassing 30 different subjects. It trains directly commissioned U.S. Women's Army Corps officers and qualified enlisted women to perform capably at company and battalion level the duties of their grade and branch.

Lieutenant Perlee is presently assigned as WAC Selection Officer in Detroit, Mich.

Popular Ballads May Be Allowed In Russia

A Sunday supplement of Izvestia has proposed public distribution of ballads played by Moscow youths. Current government policy forbids the performance or publication of this form of music.

The Soviet newspaper claims that the imposition of the ban resulted from fear that these songs would glorify values repugnant to Communism. It further alleges that the prohibition only strengthened the young people's determination to enjoy the ballads.

This underground art tends to express universal human problems and emotions. Thus the subject matter differs from that of professional songwriters who generally extoll the virtues and promise of the Communist society.

WORLD-WIDE Cynic

By Marion Robinson

NORWICH UNIVERSITY, Northfield, Vermont - There is a possibility that within the next 15 or 20 years Norwich will become a University not only for military-minded students, but also for non-military and co-educational students. At present, Norwich is one of the three purely military, private colleges in the country. The future of Norwich will depend on the national economy and the national objectives.

OPINION FROM AN ALUMNI COUNCIL COMMENTARY

"Some university colleges do as good a job as the best liberal arts colleges; many believe they do a worse job. The critical factor is not the scale of the resources, but the extent to which they are brought into fruitful contact with eager young minds."

EAR'S SELECT NEW MEMBERS

The Ethan Allen Rifles, a military Honor Society at UVM, has selected five new members to join their ranks. Selection is based on general academic achievement, an outstanding demonstration of ability and attributes of character, leadership and military bearing. The new EAR's are Cadets Thomas Mills, Peter Ambrose, Robert Florczak, Fred Brown and Norman Boyden. The EAR's have their work cut out for them as time for the annual Spring blood drive draws near. This drive, which is the largest held in Vermont has a goal of 500 pints. The usual two day drive will be extended to three days so that more students, faculty members, and Burlingtonians may be accommodated.

QUEEN CANDIDATES REMAIN UNANNOUNCED

Cadet Lt. Michael Sherman, who holds the enviable position as chairman of the committee for the selection of Military Ball Queen, is not giving out any names. Sherman says "Thirty-Seven candidates have been selected and their names will be released later this week." There will be more news as we receive it.

CADETS RECEIVE ACHIEVEMENT AWARD RIBBONS

A total of thirty-three MS I AND MS II Cadets received Achievement Award Ribbons at drill last Friday. This represents only 10% of those eligible to receive the award. In order to receive the award a cadet must have obtained a grade of A in both MS Military Science courses and drill rating. Each Cadet receiving the award also had to have the recommendation of his Military Science Instructor.

MAJOR ROBERTSON TRANSFERRED TO VIET NAM

When we learned that Major Frank Robertson's next tour of duty, which begins in July, would be in Viet Nam, it occurred to us that many of you would be interested in how he felt about going to this controversial area. Major Robertson is a West Point graduate and a career officer in the Quartermaster Corps. When this reporter asked for his comments he said, "For someone who is safe at home it is easy to criticize our commitment in Viet Nam. I feel that if I am to go over and leave my wife and children here, I would like to think that I enjoy the support of my fellow Americans." Major Robertson further commented that he would be happy to be of assistance to any academic department on campus. Personally we hope that professors will take advantage of this opportunity to present first-hand information on the Viet Nam conflict to their students.

Two-Year ROTC Program Offered

Colonel L. G. Robinson, Professor of Military Science, announced the availability of the Army's new two-year ROTC program for members of the Class of '68 who did not continue ROTC into the current academic year. The program was authorized by the Army and accepted by the University last year.
